Health Education

Health Service Confidentiality

Have you ever thought about whether your visit to the University Health Service will be confidential? Consider the following situations. Will your family doctor find out about your visit to the Contraception Clinic? Will that letter sent to your draft board about your knee injury prevent you from getting the job you desire? Will a sensitive problem such as drug or alcohol abuse be shared with the University administration? Some of these questions may cross your mind as you approach the sign-in desk at the Health Service. What these examples point out is a need for confidentiality in matters of student health.

Your Health Service is aware of this need. Health Service policy places a high priority on respect for the individual rights of student patients. The staff observes the principle of confidentiality as defined by the code of medical ethics. The broad application of this principle to inquiries from individuals and organizations both inside and outside the University acts to protect patient contacts.

When questioned by faculty or administration, a Health Service staff member will try to be helpful but will give out no information regarding the specific students health problem. If the request seems pertinent, it is discussed with the student. Only with the student's permission can a more specific consultation with faculty or administration take place at a later time.

In the case of parental inquiries, no confidential information is released even if parents have learned about student contact with the Health Service from the student. Questions are answered in general terms only and parents are urged to deal directly with students or are asked to obtain the student's permission for a more candid discussion with the Health Services. A staff member usually informs students of the parent's concern and encourages the student to initiate communication.

Despite requests from graduate and professional schools, corporations and government agencies, confidential information is not released for use in selection, admission or evaluation without the written permission of the student involved. This practice extends to situations of "coerced acquiescence" — that is when prospective applicants are obliged to supply written permission providing access to medical information. Information is not released until the student has been consulted as to whether or not he or she wants even the minimum amount of information to be released.

1974 ELECTION NOTICE

The Collegian Publishing Board has set the following dates to apply to the 1974 elections:

Dec. 11, 1973, 4:30 p.m. — Final deadline for candidates for elective office to file a letter of intention with the chairman, Steve Tripoli.

Jan. 31, 1974, 7:00 p.m. — 1974 annual elections, place to be announced; those elected to take office with the edition of Feb. 4, 1974.

ELECTION PROCEDURES

1. The Publishing Board shall submit to the Collegian staff a list of all candidates identified only as "qualified" or "not qualified". To qualify, a candidate must have a minimum of one year's Collegian membership, must be available to serve the full term of office and must consult prior to the election with the incumbent in the office to which the candidate aspires.
2. The chairman of the board shall submit the list to the staff. The Publishing Board will not conduct interviews.
3. Nominations shall be open from the floor and are encouraged at the direction of the Pub Board.
4. The election for each office shall be conducted as a separate contest. They will be in the following order:
   Editor-in-chief
   Managing Editor
   Business Manager
   Executive Editor
   News Editor
   Sports Editor
   Fire Arts Editor (Note: This office was added by a staff vote April 18, 1973)
5. In case of contests, time will be allotted for each candidate or supporters to speak. The time limit for each candidate nominated for office shall be five minutes total. After all candidates for a single office have spoken, a period of 10 minutes will be allotted for general discussion. According to Collegian tradition, the candidates for the office then under consideration will be asked to leave the room during the general discussion. Each speaker then will have a maximum of two minutes.
6. Upon conclusion of discussion, the tellers will distribute slips of paper and collect one from each person present and voting. The chairman will present the absentee ballots for counting at the appropriate time. Tellers will report the count to the chair.
   Absentee ballots must be submitted in person to the chairman or to anyone he designates, at any times the chairman designates, but no later than 5 p.m. on Jan. 31, 1974. Persons who submit absentee ballots will not be admitted to the voting area at the election.
7. In the event no candidate in a contest receives a majority (that is, one half of the total votes plus one), then another ballot will be taken among the top two vote-getters, except that when two or more candidats receive the same count for the second highest total all candidates with the two highest vote figures will go on to a second ballot; and if there is not a majority for a single candidate there shall be a third ballot for the top two vote-getters.
8. During the candidates' time or the general discussion, non-staff members may be permitted to speak upon vote of the body.

Listen to Handel's Messiah on our System $409, and take home the record just for listening.

Most people have the preconceived notion that because a stereo system doesn't cost a whole lot and because it isn't the loudest, knobbiest thing around, then it can't really be good. So, we've commissioned one of the great masters to help us sell our System $409. And if Handel can't convince you, who can? Believe us.

Nothing in its price range can match our System $409 in pure sound quality. It's a carefully-thought-out package; each component is a good buy in itself.

The Smaller Advent loudspeaker is the key to our system's sonic excellence. It's the only speaker costing less than the larger Advent that can reproduce the entire musical range, including the lowest notes of a pipe organ and the bottom string fundamental of a bass guitar. The Smaller Advents sound not only as good as you (or we) could hope, but actually well beyond reasonable expectations.

The Nikko 5010 AM/FM stereo receiver supplies more than enough power to satisfy both you and the Advents: more than 48 watts RMS. The FM and AM tuner sections are both sensitive and selective so that weak stations as well as strong ones will be received with a minimum of background hash and with surprising fullness and clarity.

To match the level of quality that the Advents and Nikko represent, we include the Garrard SL40B automatic turntable. It features Garrard's Synchro-Lab motor for unwavering speed accuracy, as well as a fully-adjustable counterweight, gentle tonearm cueing, adjustable antiskating compensation, and sophisticated suspension system. We include a dust cover, wood grain base and Pickering V-15 magnetic cartridge for wide-range sound and lightweight tracking.

The individual components normally sell in our stores for $459, but when you buy the complete system from the Sound Company you save $50.

So come in and listen to The Messiah on our System $409. And whether you take the system home or not, we'd like you to take home The Messiah Highlights* with Colin Davis conducting the London Symphony Orchestra, a fine Phillips Stereo recording ...just for listening.

Study In England

Why not take a year off from the dilemmas poised by UMass and catapult yourself into a very different, flexible, academic situation; that is, the Exchange Program between the University of Massachusetts and the University of Lancaster in England?

Because of its relatively recent establishment, there is still much room for student initiative and innovation among the more traditional courses of study proposed in its charter. Lancaster has departments of Natural Sciences, Social Sciences, Humanities and Technology. Its student population of 2,500 lends itself to more indvidualized and conentrated classroom situations than those offered at UMass.

Applicants for the program should have at least a 3.0 cumulative average. Students should plan to go during their junior or senior years, and for the full academic year. The proposed program of study should fit into their degree program.

Tuition and fees at the University of Lancaster are the same as the cost of a year at the Amherst campus. A limited amount of financial aid may be available. Students interested in applying should contact Judy Epstein, 239 Whitmore, International Programs Office.

Professional Association Workshop

The Professional Association in conjunction with SBA Professor Steve Michaels is contemplating a program on "Evaluating Yourself in Your Job" to be held in January. Participants would learn techniques for assessing job performance and will evaluate their own and other job situations. The proposed format includes advance readings, a preliminary meeting, and then, two weeks later, an all-day workshop. Before planning can proceed, PA/UMA is seeking expressions of interest, particularly from the professional staff. Interested persons should send their names, job titles, and brief paragraph describing their jobs to Katie Gillmor, Memorial Hall by December 15.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Best-selling author Jess Stearn, who is skillful at guessing zodiacal signs by looking at an individual, tells me that he finds the most difficult sign to be accurately chosen is Aquarius. "I can get the other signs," says Taurus-born Stearn, "but Aquarius usually stumps me." Stearn adds, "The only hint I can offer is that if the person seems to like people, then I take a chance and say, 'Aquarius.'" According to our author-expert, that usually rings the bell. How are you when it comes to correctly identifying the signs? How do you score when you play our astrology game? Let me know!

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Talk over financial affairs with one close to you. You have opportunity to consolidate efforts. Cycle is such that your judgment, timing are apt to be on target. Cancer, Capricorn and Scorpio persons could figure prominently.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You gain access to opinions which in past have been withheld. You have wider choice. You become better informed. Sagittarius, Gemini persons could play significant roles. Accent is on what goes on behind closed doors.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Emphasis is on steering clear of disputes among friends. Don't get involved--on one side or the other. If you are not careful, you might find yourself in the middle of a lovers' quarrel. Aquarius, Leo and Scorpio persons could be featured.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Stick to the basics. Review fundamentals. Make changes based on valid information, not allegations. One who talks a great game probably doesn't know the rules. Don't feel the grass is necessarily greener elsewhere.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Adjustment at home is indicated. Family member makes known some sharp views, opinions. Be receptive. Don't permit pride to create major dilemma. If diplomatic, you eventually get your way. Take long-range sighting.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Spotlight is on financing, investing, paying and collecting. One who talks money, handles policies and [illegible] is very much in picture. See in light of reality. Collateral is featured. Protect self. Plug legal loopholes.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Obtain hint from Virgo message. Be aware of money and how it gets that way. Interest rates now could be of paramount importance. Older individual could give benefit of experience if you are receptive. Capricorn person might figure in important way.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Much may be obscured--but this should not deter you from taking definite step forward. Trying to hang on to past will not lead to security. Move ahead. Get rid of concept which keeps you chasing rainbow--and losing proposition.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Creative forces coalesce. You gain sense of direction. You are also able to do something about getting to where you want to go. Highlight individuality. Imprint your own style. Be independent, original. Member of opposite sex is involved.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Home, property, responsibility and results of professional endeavors are spotlighted. You are asked to make decision. The requirement is understanding and maturity. Don't skip essentials. Shortcut will not suffice.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Hold off on short journeys. Take special precautions in traffic. Don't be too serious in reaction to statements by relatives, neighbors. Forces tend to be scattered and confusion could have field day. Be calm in the midst of sound and fury.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Funds may be blocked. Check legal procedures. What you feel is a setback could boomerang in your favor. Minor points should not be overlooked. One who appears slow is actually working at a steady pace, in your behalf.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are inquisitive, a natural reporter, attractive to opposite sex, fond of travel and a person who is better at helping others than when it comes to self-interest. Start you made this year will begin to bear fruit in 1974, with June a most significant month. If single, marriage is on horizon.

Wood On Energy Crisis

Major steps are being taken to reduce energy consumption at UMass, President Robert Wood said recently.

In addition to such steps as reducing thermostats in University-owned buildings, segments of the University have moved to make more efficient use of buildings and have rescheduled meetings and other events to minimize travel.

"I believe that the University, as a public institution, has a responsibility to do all that it can to employ energy conservation measures," President Wood said in a memorandum.

Here measures already taken — including lowering of thermostats and rescheduling of building use — may save up to 500,000 gallons of heating oil or its equivalent in coal, according to the campus Energy Conservation Committee.

The Campus has also reduced by one week the length of its formal Intersession period activities. Originally scheduled for January 7 to 25, Intersession programs for students remaining on campus will now be held January 14-25.

Between December 21 and January 14, UMass will turn off air handling facilities, lower heat to 55 degrees, and turn off the maximum number of lights. The campus will seek to achieve the equivalent of shutting down 60 percent of its academic plant and 75 percent of its residence hall facilities.

Last Year, Considered Quitting

Cappelletti Cops Heisman

John Cappelletti capped an outstanding comeback season on Tuesday when he was named winner of the 1973 Heisman trophy. The Award is given annually to the nation's outstanding college football player.

The 6-foot-1, 215-pound senior running back from Upper Darby, Pa., more than doubled the point total of runner-up John Hicks, an offensive tackle from Ohio State. No interior lineman has ever won the Heisman Trophy and Hicks was one of the few ever to finish as high as second.

Cappelletti received 229 first-place votes and 1,057 points from 819 Hiesman electors across the country. Hicks received 114 first-place votes and 524 points. He was followed by Texas fullback Roosevelt Leaks, Kansas quarterback David Jaynes and Ohio State tailback Archie Griffin.

Cappelletti carried the East, South and Far West, while the Midwest went for Hicks and the Southwest for Leaks.

Cappelletti, a high school quarterback who played defensive back as a Penn State sophomore, said he entertained thoughts of quitting last year after his third game as a running back. He failed to gain 100 yards in any of those games, although he surpassed that figure five times later that season and eight times this year.

"After the Iowa game last year I was really confused and I felt I just didn't have it any more," he said. "I felt maybe tailback wasn't my position. It was the lowest point I ever had in college. I had thoughts about going and seeing Joe Paterno."

Cappelletti held off, though, and the next week he gained 124 yards in only 21 carries against Illinois.

"That game turned me around," Cappelletti said. "I learned a lesson...that if you stick with something longer than you think you can, things will work out for you."

Cappelletti stuck with it and galloped for 1,117 yards last season. He increased it this year to 1,522 yards on 286 touchdowns in leading Penn State to an 11-0 record and a berth in the Orange Bowl. His career total of 2,639 yards is second only to Lydell Mitchell's 2,934, and Mitchell played three years as a running back.

"I'm pretty excited about winning the Heisman," Cappelletti said. "But as a kid, pro ball was more of a goal than the Heisman Trophy. I used to watch Gino Cappelletti play and I'd wonder if the name meant anything."

The Cappellettis are not related.

Although Paterno calls him "the best football player I've ever been around," Cappelletti is a modest young man who says he doesn't think he's "so spectacular that the pros will expect me to burn holes in the turf. I consider myself a consistent type who gets better as time goes on."

Cappelletti is majoring in law enforcement and corrections and after a professional football career he hopes to work on the federal level, possibly as an FBI agent.

Women's Council OK's Scholarships

By BETH O'BRIEN

Last night, the Women's Athletic Council, consisting of representatives of the various women's sports teams, and Chaired by Jane Farr, approved a motion to award scholarships to women participating on a varsity sport. The motion will now be subjected to approval by Athletic director, Frank McInerny, for possible implementation next year.

The Scholarship Committee, a sub-committee of the Women's Athletic council, will now get to work on drawing up guidelines as to how the money should be awarded and to whom. This will be subject to the approval of the Women's Athletic council and finally, to McInerny.

The scholarship committee is uncertain as to what guideline it will recommend for the awarding of athletic scholarships, and understandably so. Chairperson Jane Farr explained that both committees are waiting for the final rulings on policies from the parent organizations, the AIAW (Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women) and the EAIAW (Eastern Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women) before proceeding on making policies of their own that may have to be changed.

But the future of athletic scholarships for women looks bright.

Young Minutemen Grapplers Face Crucial Match At Rhody

By JOHN BOCK

UMass is 2-0, defending New England Champions, and has five freshman wrestling for them.

URI is 0-0, New England Runners-up, and has four New England Champs and two Runners-up wrestling for them.

Who is going to win?

On paper it looks like Rhode Island, because they have the experience, but they are just opening and the Minutemen have two matches under their belt. Rhody has the home match advantage and are supposedly going to draw a good crowd to Keaney Gymnasium. Because of the distance to travel, by the time this paper hits the campus the Minuteman contingent will be on their way down to Kingston for the 2:00 PM weigh-in and the 7:00 match.

"The reason we are leaving so early is that the last two times we went down there, we arrived about 6:15, ate in less than an hour, and then wrestled. You just can't do it that way," emphasized Coach Homer Barr.

The best way to preview this one is to list the contestants. At 118 for UMass frosh Gene DiObilda who has moved into the spot left vacant by Dave Amato, who has graduated and moved on to URI as an assistant coach. For the Rams, Richie Adham, New England Runner-up and a senior with a lot of experience. At 126 the Minuteman have Larry Reynolds and he faces the man who beat him three times last year - NEUWA Champ Scott Pucino.

The 134 pound bout might be a break for UMass as Rhody has a choice of two JV's while UMass puts Freshman Bob Schab out there. At 142 it is a meeting of two old foes, UMass' Russ Chateauneuf and URI's Joe Savino. It was Savino that was demolished in the New England finals in 1972 as Chateauneuf racked up his first New England title. Last year Russ sat it out and Savino made it to the finals again-and lost again.

The 150 pound bout sees two freshmen. UMass has Steve Jabaut, a very smooth New Yorker, while URI has Larry Hovey, a very strong Rhode Islander. At 158 Cliff Blom also runs into an old enemy - Greg Gamon. Gamon upset Blom last year in overtime in the New England finals, so Cliff will be out for revenge.

At 167 Steve Benson will meet Jim Urqhart, the defending NEUWA 167 pound champ. The two have never wrestled, but a close match is predicted. At 177 freshman Robin Osborne will meet a fellow New Jersey stater, Stu Horowitz, the NEUWA Champ. Horowitz was the only New England Champ to make it to the quarter-finals at last year's NCAA Tourney.

The 190 pound match has NEUWA Runner-up John Conolly wrestling Rhody's Tad Sargent. The heavyweight bout will see Minuteman Dennis Fenton wrestle URI's junior college transfer Tom Miro. Miro was third placer in the Junior College Nationals.

Tracksters Try For Road Repeat

By SCOTT HAYES

Today's Indoor Track meet at Rhode Island will utilize the same script as last Saturday's meet with Maine, except for some changes in the cast.

Rhode Island, who gave UConn a battle last year, finished fourth in the Conference during the winter season and third in outdoor track. URI is another team that is especially strong at home, and last year the Rams took UConn down to the last event. UConn went into the meet with 44 straight wins, and barely kept the streak alive by winning 61-57.

URI will be paced by a strong corps of pole vaulters which includes Bruce McCracken, Mark Jerro and Terry Leonard. McCracken and Jerro both have cleared 15', while Leonard has vaulted 13'6". UMass will be at a disadvantage because its vaulters haven't had a chance to get in all the practice they need. Last Saturday, the team didn't take any pole vaulters to the meet, which is equal to spotting the opposition nine points.

Kevin Smith, a sophomore high jumper, is one of the best individual performers for URI. He cleared 6'7" in his freshmen year, but will be a question mark in today's meet.

URI has a fairly good group of hurdlers. Bob McMahon and Scott Randall have been timed in 7.7. McMahon and Randall will be backed by Bill Padgin.

The Rams lack depth in the remaining events, but are well represented in the middle distances. Bill Baptiste has run 1:14.4 in the 600, and Stanley Trager was timed in 2:16 for the 1,000-yard run. Steve Hague, Rhode Island's number two man in cross country along with Tom Grundy lead the distance runners. Grundy had quite a season as a harrier for the Rams, and should be among the top finishers in the distance events.

In the 35-pound weight throw, Richard Szrom threw 49' last season. URI's mile and two mile relay teams are on the same level with those of UMass. The meet could go down to the last two events, as it did on Saturday.

SHORT SPRINTS — Ron Harris will replace Mark Hughes in the high jump, while the other competitors in the sprints, hurdles and jumps will remain nearly the same. Chris Farmer will run either the mile or the 1,000. Other changes include the insertion of Francis O'Keefe and Rick Fahey in the middle distances and the resting of Tom Wilson. John McGrail will make his indoor track debut, probably competing in the two-mile. Larry Whitfield and John McCullough will replace Tom Beland and Barron Littlefield on the mile relay team.

Whelan Leads UMass In Gymnastics Rout

By STEVE CROWE

Gene Whelan took first place in all six events last night to lead the UMass gymnastics team to a 154.75 to 128.10 win over injury-riddled, talent dwindled Boston State College. When a gymnastics team wins by more than 20 points it's like a football team winning by a hundred.

Boston State, usually considered about the third best team in Massachusetts (behind Springfield and UMass), competed without the services of two of their top all-around performers. The team's top three scores are taken in each event and a team is allowed to put up as many as six performers.

Boston State, in most events, competed with only three men. (In the pommel horse event, they were forced to register a miserable 3.5 score.)

All-around Star Whelan scored a 9.0 floor exercise, a 9.2 vault, and a 9.35 on the high bar in attaining a total of 53.50 points. But Coach Tom Dunn said that Whelan was "still a little off on everything. He's still better than he's shown himself to be," said Coach Dunn.

In the floor exam Bill Brouillet (8.6), Steve Scuderi (8.2) and freshman Paul Marks (8.0) backed Whelan to give UMass a 25.8 to 22.6 lead.

All five of UMass' competitors finished ahead of the best Boston State performer in the pommel horse event - led by Whelan (8.55), Scuderi's 8.3 and Brian Hassig's 8.45 to go way out in front, 51.1 to 39.0.

The closest contest was on still rings where UMass won by 1.35 points. Whelan, Brouillet, and freshman Peter Lusk (8.45) led the Minutemen. But it was here that the first, and only Stater broke the top three - Ben Ameroso with his team's highest score of the night - an 8.4. The running score: UMass 76.75, State 63.3.

In vaulting, Jack Fabbricante (8.6), Whelan (9.2) and Scuderi (8.8) leaped the score to 103.35 to 87.7.

Tim Beasley (8.05), Scuderi (8.5), and again, Whelan (8.7) helped UMass to win the parallel bars with ease. The team's final performer, Bill Brouillet broke on this routine and could manage only a 7.0. (UMass 128.6 to 107.05).

In the high bar event, besides Whelan's superb performance, solid routines by Phil Aubrey (8.2) and Brouillet (8.6) finished the Minutemen's slaughter of over 26 total team points.

Besides Whelan's 53.50 total, all-arounds Scuderi and Brouillet scored 49.65 and 48.65 respectively for UMass. Boston State's highest man was John Arsenault with a 23.65.

A fine crowd of over 250 filled the Auxiliary Gym to watch this less than exciting contest. The scores were generally low and, according to the coaches, the judges were underscoring on most of the performances. But, as one judge put it after it was all over, "It's still early in the year for the gymnasts...and it's still early in the year for us, too."

Hoopsters Visit St. A's In Schools' Final Tilt

By EARLE BARROLL

There were actually two athletic events Saturday night involving Curry Hicks Cage. One took place inside and 5000 plus watched. A second had its roots outside and 200 or more participated.

It seems that in the wake of a packed house some rallied UMies had their own game of how to get into the Cage. The resultant crushed door and two broken windows led a UMass policeman at the scene to comment, "UMass needs a gym very badly." Hmmmm.

"Some of the parents who came to the game just before it began," said coach Jack Leaman, "told me it was an un-Godly sight." One report that's been floating around has it that a university employee in the Cage poked his head out a door, was strong armed by a mob of 40, neatly deposited to the side and then witnessed their entrance.

"I guess it just goes to show you how much of a following we have on this campus," said Leaman. "My concern now is where we're going to put everybody in the future." 'Nough said.

Tonight (8 p.m.) at Manchester, N.H. another gymnasium will probably also receive a tatooing of some nature when Leaman takes his hoopsters to St. Anselms for (1) the last game in that puzzling series and (2) a good case of the home court blues on the road.

"I can remember," said Leaman, "a couple of years back when Julius Erving played for us and I had to coach with the crowd's legs coming through the bench." That was in the days when Erving filled 19 consecutive gyms to capacity. And in fact since that time all UMass basketball teams have been one of the major drawing cards on the road in New England.

What is a St. Anselm's? For starters, they're really a pretty good basketball team as evidenced by a 78-71 win at Springfield when they came from 14 points back. They've also won another game and when they're winning in Manchester the crazied Hawk fans come in droves.

"They are an aggressive, physical team," described Leaman. "We'll have to go up there and get control of the game right from the outset. We didn't do it against Harvard until midway in the second half."

Leaman didn't indicate who'd be taking St. A's place next year on the schedule. "I'll tell you after the game," he smiled. "I don't want to give them any more than they need to get ready for us." Anyway, maybe we can tell the people of Manchester coach that you need this win to equal the UMass career win total of Kid Gore.

Back in the days of Mass "Aggie", Harold "Kid" Gore compiled a vintage 119 wins from 1916-32. And Leaman, after his Harvard win needs only one more to achieve that total. He'll begin his quest with the same five that opened the season -- Greg Duarte, Al Skinner, John Murphy, Bill Endicott and Rick Pitino

The UMass hockey offensive attack has mustered a total of eight goals in two games yet has failed to produce a winning tally. Tonight the Ephmen come to town for an 8:00 game that could bring about the turning point in the Minutemen's record.

Skaters Host Williams

By BILL BALLOU

If you could ever call the third game of any season crucial, then tonight's hockey game is just that.

The Minutemen, 0-2 so far, face Williams at Orr Rink tonight and then head to Vermont Friday for a two-game series with the always tough Norwich and Middlebury. So they've really got to win tonight to keep their head above water.

Hopefully for Jack Canniff, this is the night where his team finally puts it together. Last Wednesday they were long on offense and short on defense, while Saturday it was just the opposite. He's wishing that some kind of balance can be synthesized out of those first two losses.

Chances are Canniff will be making a few changes, too. He'll have to at defense, since Dave Keough has left the team. With Dave Alesandroni sidelined for a long time, somebody from the JV's will have to be brought up.

Up front, he's already made a couple. Mark Sullivan and Jim Scanlon have been sent down, with Steve Dee and Terry Ryan their replacements. The JV's and varsity scrimmaged for two hours last night and more changes coming off that workout aren't beyond the realm of possibility.

Chick Rheault will be in goal, unless something else happens to his shoulder, with Jeff McReynolds his backup.

Williams is a strong team and, although not figured upon in preseason predictions to be a powerhouse, should be one of the division's "darkhorse" playoff contenders.

Last year the Ephmen (that's their name all right) gave the Minutemen a hard time, especially in the Williams Christmas tournament, where they beat UMass in the championship game in the dying moments.

The losses the Minutemen have already sustained need not be fatal. Merrimack, for instance, already has two losses, Bowdoin and Vermont one each. Since the divisional defeats, the UMies if they can pick it up, can conceivably get back in the running for the playoffs.

Game time at Orr Rink is 8:30 p.m.

Bill Ballou

The "Walk-On"

Those of you who felt sorry for the slightly chunky guy behind the funny mask who hopped over the boards to replace Jeff McReynolds in goal Wednesday night shouldn't have. No matter that the score was 8-2 and that he was about to subject himself to a brutal bombardment--John Binkoski was somewhere between paradise and heaven as he skated toward the net.

Binkoski's the classic "walk-on." Not recruited, not counted on in preseason plans to make any contribution, he goes out for the team and shows enough to stick.

Binkoski couldn't have been anything but a walk-on. He couldn't have been scouted, because he didn't play a measly minute's worth of varsity hockey in high school.

He did play in the JV nets, but the regular goalie at Arlington High was Joe Bertagna, later to go on to fame at Harvard.

He came to UMass to take up engineering. He ended up with classics and goalie pads.

"I wasn't planning to go out," he relates, "but a friend talked me into it. He didn't make the first cut, and I ended up backing-up Chickie Rheault on the JV's."

He played little his freshmen season, and even less first semester sophomore year. But he got his first JV start in a game against Williams, and played every game after that.

His junior year he got a shot at the varsity for the first time. "I played pretty well, but I guess it was a matter of numbers," he says about getting sent back to the JV's, "since they had two seniors (John Kiah and Peter Erickson) and Chickie."

Jack Canniff had some freshmen who needed ice time down on the JV's, so Binkoski didn't get to play much. But this fall, with the shoulder injury to Rheault, Binkoski had his first good shot at the varsity.

"I was really nervous at RPI. It was my first time ever wearing a varsity jersey." But he played well, making 23 saves in his period, and only permitting a goal.

At BC, he was "even more nervous. It was like home ice. I had practiced there in high school and a lot of my friends were there." But he played well again, giving up just two goals. Problem was, Jeff McReynolds was spectacular, shutting the Eagles out in his period.

So McReynolds got the call, and Binkoski watched until he finally got his chance. "It's tough coming in after sitting down for two hours," he says, "but it was really a dream come true for me. I'd tried so hard to do so well."

He gave up three goals in his ten minutes, but he'll live. "It bothered me because it was my first time, but it didn't destroy me."

Why in God's name would anyone play back-up goalie on a JV hockey team for three years when it was apparent that he wasn't involved too heavily in future plans?

"I guess I must love it," he says, "because if I don't then it means I must be sick. I really don't know why I do it."

He does it pretty well. Right now he's one of three varsity goaltenders (McReynolds and Rheault the others), and if UMass wasn't so deep in goal he might be playing regularly.

He's not a stylish goalie. He flops, slides, kicks, and snatches. He describes it this way -- "It doesn't matter if you stand on your head, as long as you keep it out of the net."

It doesn't seem like the future contains too much hope for Binkoski keeping the puck out of the net on a regular basis. For one thing, Rheault is one of the best goalies around and, unless he gets hurt again, not about to be displaced. And when it comes down to who's going to be Rheault's number one backup, it seems that Canniff would have to look to the future and go with sophomore McReynolds.

But he's not about to give up after finally playing in a varsity game. He's got the final dream--playing professionally.

"I'd like to give the pros a try when I get out. It's a once-in-a-lifetime thing, and I've just got to know if I could do it."

If the pros allow walk-ons he'll be all set.

Energy Affects Crime And Fraud

By MARGARET GENTRY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation may face an increase in street crime and consumer fraud as a result of the energy crisis, the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration said Wednesday.

LEAA Administrator Donald E. Santarelli said the agency is taking "urgent priority" measures to help state and local law enforcement officials deal with the threat.

Santarelli told a news conference that if power brownouts curtail street lighting, such crimes as muggings and purse-snatchings are "likely to go up." But he would not predict the extent of the increase.

Moreover, he said, brownouts could tamper police communications systems. "Police response time to trouble calls would be reduced significantly.

If the World War II experience with gasoline rationing is any guide, he said, a new rationing plan could lead to an extensive black market.

"One obvious area concerns organized crime attempting to reap huge profits — through counterfeiting coupons or stealing coupons — if some form of gasoline rationing is imposed," he asserted.

He warned that "whether rationing comes or not, we can be virtually certain that organized criminal activity will center on hijacking or other theft of gasoline and oil supplies."

Electric Cars

Sales Are Up

BEDFORD, Mass (AP) — With the energy crisis alarming many motorists, Electromotion Inc., is doing a thriving business on orders for its electric-powered automobiles.

The T-3 manufactured by the firm costs $8,500 and runs only 35 miles between battery charges, at top speeds of 45 to 55 miles per hour. But it has several advantages in these energy-conscious times.

Maintenance is minimal, with the driver simply getting a quick battery change at a special service station or plugging into an electric outlet at the home overnight.

The vehicle has four-wheel drive at 3,200 pounds should drive easily through snow and ice that stalls smaller vehicles.

Charles F. Myers, president of Electromotion, said the average driver can operate an electric car "for about a half a cent a mile, with maintenance costs practically non-existent." Water must be added to the 14 six-volt batteries every six weeks, the motor must be lubricated annually and brushes must be changed every two years.

The T-3 is designed to last 400,000 miles, he said.

The car is ugly, its designer admits, but Electromotion sales prove that consumers today prefer saving fuel, money and the environement to driving a flashy car.

The U.S Postal Service is using the electric cars and has placed orders for 350 more.

Postman Jim Everett drives a T-3 on a daily 15-mile route with 325 stops in Dracut, carrying about 700 pounds of mail.

"I like the electric just as well as any I've ever used," the 12-year veteran of the Post Office said. "It's well-built, there's plenty of room and the visibility is the best of any truck I've seen."

It's In The Wind

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — If inventor Robert A. Lyons has his way, a 65-foot, wind-powered Christmas tree will grace the White House grounds this month as a symbol of American inventiveness in the face of the energy crisis.

Lyons has designed a tree that lights up, rotates, and plays Christmas music-all through wind action.

His design consists of 50 tiers of triangular shaped air foils. Inside each tier would be a wind-powered electric generator that would burn lights located inside each individual foil. Wind action would move each layer in the opposite direction of the ones above and below it, and would also activate chimes to play seasonal music.

A backup system of three batteries store power generated by the wind for times when the wind is calm.

Two problems stand in the way of the Lyons tree. First the 45-year-old inventor is looking for someone to build the tree. Second, if the tree is built, the National Tree Commission in Washington would have to give permission for it to be erected at the White House.

Pursue your hobby in peace and quiet, as do these pheasant hunters crossing the Hamburg-Bremen Autobahn during the driving ban imposed because of the Arab oil cut. PRIVATE POWER--Lawrence Smith, 58, of North Windham, Maine, shows off the private power plant that has been whining away in his back yard for over five years. In 1968, the electrician threw up a 15-foot high dam across a lake outlet behind his home and installed a turbine and generator. Since then, more electricity than he and his wife can use has been flowing from the tiny hydroelectric plant into his fully equipped six-room home and heated two-car garage.

A Profile

A Powerful Man Has His Finger On The Trigger

By HOLGER JENSEN
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) - Saudi Arabian Oil Minister Ahmed Zaki Yamani is the Arabs' Kissinger. When King Faisal aims the oil weapon, Yamani pulls the trigger.

The soft-spoken man has the most powerful voice in Arab oil policy, now directed against Washington for its support of Israel. Yet he considers himself a friend of the American people despite differences with their government.

When Yamani last visited the United States in April, he warned President Nixon that the Arabs would fire their oil weapon unless Washington changed its pro-Israeli stance.

"Unfortunately, no one believed me," he said in a recent interview. Yamani was puzzled and a little hurt. Now American homes are a bit colder and buying gasoline on Sundays is a little more difficult.

Educated at New York Unviersity and Harvard, the 43-year-old Yamani is an Ivy Leaguer who can step out of his flowing robes and traditional Arab headdress into a Pierre Cardin business suit without the slightest discomfort.

He is a businessman-diplomat at home in both East and West, in the Moslem austerity of Saudi Arabia's desert wastes or the European cocktail circuit. He handles the Byzantine intricacies of Arab politics with the same ease as hard-headed American oil company executives or frothy society hostesses.

The walls of Yamani's sumptuous office in Riyadh are lined with shelves containing samples of Saudi crude, the "black gold" that has made his homeland a rich country and given it undreamed-of political clout.

He relaxes from the complexities of international law by writing Arabic poetry.

Diplomats who have had to deal with Yamani say he is one of the coolest and most persuasive Arabs in the Middle East.

Handsome, well-dressed and sporting a Van Dyke beard, the minister toys constantly with a string of worry beads and never looks worried.

Yamani pioneered participation agreements that will give the Arabs eventual control of the vast Western oil concessions on their soil. These, he said, were "a dream come true."

More On Energy

No More Roamin' Homes

By NICK TATRO
Associated Press Writer

The birth of a stay-at-home era of energy saving has brought widespread layoffs and production cuts to the motor home industry which thrived for a decade on the get-away-from-it-all vacation.

Industry officials say many firms are switching to smaller vehicles to lure the energy-conscious consumer.

There are 4.5 million recreational vehicles on America's roadways, according to industry figures. They range from the $400 tent camper to the $25,000 motor home that comes complete with electric range and disposal system.

Last year, sales totaled almost $3 billion. Three million people worked in some phase of the industry, which has been booming since the early 1960s. But sales have nose-dived in recent weeks.

"The industry as a whole is really in trouble," said Alan Robin, president of Open Road Industries Inc., one of the three largest recreation vehicle makers.

"If the administration doesn't come up with a workable solution to gas allocation in the next 30 days, it could spell disaster for the recreation vehicle industry," Robin said.

Industry officials are trying to convince the government and consumers that houses on wheels are economical, even if they do average six miles to a gallon of gas.

"You can save 80 per cent of the energy consumed by a normal home if you get in a recreation vehicle and go camping for a weekend within 50 miles of home," said Mike Radigan, executive director of the Recreation Vehicle Institute, a manufacturers association.

Uncertainty about how much gasoline is going to be available has caused consumers to stop buying vacation wagons, he said.

Many of the 600 motor home makers have had serious layoffs.

The trend to smaller vehicles and a belt-tightening stmosphere were evident last week at the annual industry show in Louisville, Ky., where 1,200 different models were unveiled by 200 makers.

"Attendance was off," said Peaster. "Usually the dealers bring their wives and family; this year they came alone. There was a definite belt-tightening."

Robert L. Stewart, president of RVI, told the trade show sales were off sharply from early 1973 but were expected to top the record 747,500 units sold in 1972.

Arabs Know Who Their Enemies Are

By HOLGER JENSEN
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — An old Arab saying goes: "The friend of my enemy is my enemy and the enemy of my enemy is my friend."

Many nations have suddenly learned the meaning of it — through the energy crisis.

The Arabs have already identified their enemies, besides Israel. The United States, and the Netherlands, Portugal, Rhodesia and South Africa are under a total oil embargo.

The United States lost its oil because it sent arms to Israel and appropriated $2.2 billion for aid to the Jewish state during the October war. The Arabs argue that Israel couldn't exist without American support, let alone occupy Arab lands seized in 1967.

The Dutch lost their oil because their foreign minister made pro-Israeli statements, their defense minister was photographed at a pro-Israeli rally and their airline — KLM — did not suspend flights to Israel as other carriers did during the war.

The oil boycott was extended to South Africa, Rhodesia and Portugal on the grounds that their white regimes are to black Africa what Israel is to the Arabs. So far this year about 20 black African states have broken relations with Israel to support the Arab cause, and in return they asked the Arabs to strike a blow for their cause.

The Arabs are still trying to decide who their friends are. To spur the selection process, they have cut oil production 25 per cent with a promise of future 5 per cent monthly cutbacks until Israel withdraws from occupied Arab territory and the Middle East conflict is settled.

Saudi Arabia's oil minister, Ahmed Zaki Yamani, has made it clear that "countries friendly to us will get the same amount of oil as before, while the neutrals will get less."

Thus, the 25 per cent cutback through November saw favored nations like the black African states get first whack at the remaining 75 per cent, while neutrals had to share what was left.

Japan and Europe, the Arabs' biggest oil customers, were hardest hit.

European Common Market countries, excluding the Netherlands, won a reprieve from the 5 per cent December cutback after they issued a joint statement calling for Israeli withdrawal from occupied Arab land and recognition of the "legitimate rights of the Palestinian people."

House Nears Energy Vote

By DAVID C. MARTIN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The House Commerce Committee Wednesday pushed slowly toward a scheduled Friday vote on the emergency energy legislation requested by President Nixon.

With more than 50 amendments during its morning session. It rejected a measure to cut the government's limousine fleet and agreed to waive antitrust laws for retailers.

The legislation would grant the proposed Federal Energy Administration broad powers to order gasoline rationing and other fuel-saving measures such as shorter working hours and car pooling.

However, an amendment adopted Tuesday would give Congress the final approval over any energy conservation plan ordered by the new agency.

The unsuccessful effort to take away the limousines of all officials below Cabinet rank was headed by Rep. Bertram L. Podell, D-N.Y., who claimed it would set an example for the rest of the nation. But Rep. Fred B. Rooney, D-Pa., said many high government officials already have voluntarily have relinquished their limousines and said that the amendment would merely "junk up" the bill.

The antitrust waiver for retailers was designed to allow all the stores in a shopping district to agree on a common earlier closing time or any other measure that might save electricity, according to Rep. Clarence J. Brown, R-Ohio, who introduced the amendment.

Israel Withdrawal To Relax

By KENNETH J. FREED
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Saudi Arabian oil minister Sheik Ahmed Zaki Yamani said Wednesday his government would relax its oil embargo in phased steps with Israeli withdrawal from occupied Arab lands.

He told newsmen following an hour meeting with Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger that "if Israel decides to withdraw and agrees to a timetable there could be a timetable to relax the embargo."

Unitl Wednesday, Yamani had said any resumption of his nation's oil production was conditioned on Israeli withdrawal from all lands taken in the 1967 war as well as the October conflict.

Saudi Arabia holds the world's largest known reserves of oil and has been among the leaders in a boycott of petroleum supplies for the United States and industrial nations who have diplomatic relations with Israel.

The embargo was declared total against the United States during the October Arab-Israeli War and was accompanied by cuts in production of supplies earmarked for Western Europe and Japan.

Yamani and the Algierian minister of industry and energy, Belaid Abde lam, spent most of Wednesday afternoon in meetings with various State Department officials, including Kissinger.

They described the discussions as "frank and helpful discussions" which will be continued.

The Saudi Arabian official was asked if the start of a Middle East peace conference would in itself lead to a relaxation of the Arab oil restrictions. "I don't think the conference itself will cause that," he answered.

He added that the results of the meetings beginning Dec. 18 in Geneva are what will count.

Yamani said, "We are ready" to relax restrictions, we "just want a reason." He added that the oil flow would come when Israel realizes "it cannot continue its occupation" of Arab lands.

A Plan To Follow

Professor A. H. Matheson of the Physics and Astronomy Dept. could be one of the heroes of the energy crisis on campus.

Matheson took a floor plan of Hasbrouck and with the help of the Janitorial Dept. eliminated unnecessary hallway lighting from the building. He was able to save 50 per cent in kilowatt usage and still maintain adequate lighting for the hallways.

Since Matheson's project, plans have been made to cut hallway lighting all over the campus. But, hallway lighting is not enough, stresses Matheson. "We need the cooperation of students and faculty in turning off classroom lights," he said.

Court Talks Center Around Erased Tapes

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon was described Wednesday as being "very, very disturbed" when he heard three weeks ago that 18 minutes of a subpoenaed Watergate tape had been obliterated.

"He was almost incredulous that these things ever happened," Nixon's chief of staff, Alexander M. Haig Jr., told U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica.

Haig recounted for the court the sequence of events that resulted in public disclosure that a crucial segment of a June 20, 1972 Nixon conversation with H. R. Haldeman was supplanted by a buzz lasting 18½ minutes.

Nixon had been told Oct. 1 by his secretary, Rose Mary Woods, that she believed she had recorded over 4½-5 minutes of that conversation accidentally while transcribing the tape, according to her testimony. Miss Woods testified that Nixon believed that the Haldeman conversation was not included in a subpoena issued Watergate tapes by the special Watergate prosecutor.

"I recalled for him the accident," Haig said, "and then informed him that counsel's opinion that this was not subpoenaed conversation had changed.

"He was very, very disturbed. He was almost incredulous that this could have happened."

Earlier, Miss Woods was called hurriedly to the witness stand for the third time and she again said forcefully that "I could see no way at all I could have caused the 18-minute gap."

She complained to the judge that news accounts made her feel she was on trial by newspapers, radio and television and that she had read that Sirica had reasonable doubt that she told the truth.

WASHINGTON --WHITE HOUSE RELEASED PICTURE--It shows President Nixon's secretary, Rose Mary Woods in her White House office. Miss Woods testified she was working Oct. 1 in her office, transcribing the tape of a conversation between Nixon and H. R. Haldeman when her phone rang. She said she thinks she pushed the wrong button on the recorder when she turned to reach back to answer the phone.

Milk Suit Still Pending

By F. RICHARD CICCONE
Associated Press Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — President Nixon's associate Murray M. Chotiner talked to Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell about a 1972 antitrust suit against the nation's largest dairy co-operative, according to a letter from Chotiner's partner.

Chotiner had helped funnel large dairy contributions into re-election Committee, which Mitchell headed after he left the Justice Department.

Over a period of years, Chotiner frequently has been a political adviser to Nixon.

The Justice Department is still pressing its suit, which accuses the Texas-based Associated Milk Producers Inc. of anticompetitive practices in marketing milk in 14 Midwestern states. The letter from Chotiner's partner, Marion E. Harrison, was introduced as evidence in the case Wednesday.

Harrison's letter was to George Mehren, general manager of the milk produces, and was dated Feb. 25, 1972, less than four weeks after the Justice Department's Chicago office filed antitrust charges on Feb. 1.

Harrison said he and Chotiner had decided not to approach Mitchell about the suit, because Mitchell had announced his resignation on Feb. 15 and would soon become Nixon's campaign director.

The U.S.A. Today: We're Slipping

By DAN HILL
Associated Press Writer

NEW HAVEN (AP) — The United States, after taking great strides in social betterment during the 1960's seems to be losing ground this decade. The president of Notre Dame University said Wednesday.

The Rev. Theodore M. Hesburgh said, "while we climbed up to a peak last decade, I think we've leveled off and are slipping back a bit."

One underlying threat of the current scandals in the federal administration is that people, particularly young people, will react with greater cynicism, he said.

"I like the present generation, they're wonderful," he said during a news conference at Yale University. "But it takes some work to turn them on sometimes."

The change from the "turned on" atmosphere of the 1960s is worrisome, he added, because "student life is a good barometer of life of the nation."

Father Hesburgh, a leading spokesman for higher education, was at Yale to deliver three talks under the university's prestigious Terry Lectures program.

Troops Fight Over Kien Duc

By GEORGE ESPER
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP) — South Vietnamese troops backed by bombers launched a counter-offensive Wednesday to retake a district capital and ease North Vietnamese pressure on a provincial capital, field reports said.

The action to retake Kien Duc, a district town 10 miles west of Gia nghia, capital of Quang Duc Province, apparently had the approval of President Nguyen Van Thieu under standing Saigon policy to retake all territory lost to the Communist side since the January cease-fire.

It widened the battle of more then a month near the Cambodian border for control of strategic supply routes leading southward to Saigon, about 100 miles away. Some South Vietnamese sources see the central highlands fighting as a prelude to a general North Vietnamese offensive next year.

As the fighting intensified to its highest magnitude of the cease-fire, the South Vietnamese government urged the 12 countries that endorsed the truce at a meeting in paris last February to act to dissuade North Vietnam from launching a general offensive.

A message said intensified North Vietnamese and Viet Cong attacks across South Vietnam and the influx of 100,000 fresh troops since the cease-fire "is a confirmation of the Communists' intention to launch a new offensive in South Vietnam."

The countries include the United States, the Soviet Union and China. Similar appeals in the past have failed to halt the bloodshed.

The Viet Cong's foreign minister, Nguyen Thi Binh, said in Warsaw that a "punitive strike" was necessary to deter the South Vietnamese government from violating the cease-fire.

Kien Duc, about 90 miles northeast of Saigon, was the fourth government position to fall since Nov. 1.

All-U.S. Lobsters

WASHINGTON (AP) - Foreign fishermen would be prohibited from catching lobsters in waters off the United States coast in a bill approved by the House.

The measure designates lobsters as Continental Shelf creatures which are unlawful for fishermen from any other country to catch. Crabs, clams and conches are already on the list of marine forms of life that are the exclusive property of Americans on the shelf.

Some observers say excessive fishing by foreign vessels has contributed to the declining lobster catch in recent years.

But the State Department said mos lobsters caught by foreigners were taken as incidental captures. A department spokesman said he doubted the bill would be effective in restoring lobster populations in the Atlantic Ocean off New England.

The bill now goes to the Senate.

European Nations Tighten Their Belts

By ED BLANCHE
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) - The British government ordered a compulsory 50-mile-an-hour speed limit on all roads Wednesday to combat worsening fuel shortages.

Trade and Industry Minister Peter Walker announced in Parliament that there would be new restrictions on heating in all offices and factories and on street and commercial lighting. Many offices and other public buildings have already cut temperatures to 65 degrees.

Walker stressed in Parliament, however: "Our reserve position does nothing to suggest that the government should now take action to ration petrol."

The steps were aimed at cutting down Britain's energy consumption, threatened by the Arab oil embargo and work slowdowns by coal miners and key power engineers.

Walker's announcement came hours after Norway banned Sunday driving and Belgium extended a similar measure for the fourth straight week.

Altogether, eight West European nations have forbidden Sunday driving. Most of these couttries also have compulsory spped limits ranging from 45 m.p. h. to 75 m.p. h. on some freeways.

The Norwegian trade minister, Jans Evansen, also announced that gasoline rationing would be imposed Jan. 7, the day Sweden and

Food Services No. 6

From The Computer To You

Menus planned and written by computers may seem like something you might see on Star Trek, but they are a reality in hundreds of hospitals, schools, and other food service institutions throughout the country.

"Contrary to popular belief, the problem of diet planning is not a nutritional, but a mathematical one," according to Dr. Joseph L. Balintfy, a professor of operations research in the UMass School of Business Administration.

Balintfy is a nationally recognized pioneer in menu planning by computer assistance. He received a $75,000 grant for the U.S. Public Health Service to design a program which would provide a computer written menu at minimum cost that would still fulfill nutrition and taste requirements. That was ten years ago.

What he came up with was an eight-course dinner featuring broiled chicken, the first menu ever written by a computer, and printed out at the Tulane University Computing Center.

According to Balintfy, "menu planning is a mathematical problem which is routinely being solved by nonmathematical means."

Since that chicken dinner ten years ago, computer planned menus have been used with success at hundreds of institutions nationwide, often at savings of 10-30 percent of the food cost.

"The economic potential of this new computer technology are now widely recognized," notes Balintfy. "Great progress has been made at UMass in the last three years in the mathematical characterization of food preference functions, and in the measurement of preference profiles of populations."

Balintfy admits that the use of mathematical models in the field of human nutrition is still in the development stages, but he is convinced that the talent and money needed for research will provide benefits well worth the investments.

Linking nutrition to such fields as statistics, psychometrics, operations research, and computer science can be a tricky business, and this "interdisciplinary approach", as he calls it, is only one reason why computer menu planning has had a tough time winning acceptance among food operations managers.

The other reason is fear of the computer — a fear which has, over the past decade, spread into a variety of other unrelated fields. But the intrusion of a computer into a foodservice operation can make the manager and staff feel diminished in importance, and even cause them to worry about the worth of their jobs in light of a high speed "brain" which seemingly performs functions far more quickly and efficiently.

Nevertheless, the use of computers in menu planning has spread rapidly. All 83 state institutions in Pennsylvania, for instance, use computers for management, food inventory control, complete cost data records on a per ration basis per institution, and a categorization of all foodstuff procurement. Many VA hospitals and military institutions are managed by computers. In 1970, 846 hospitals had computer installations, while an additional 2041 hospitals were hooked up to terminals. The U.S. Department of Agriculture is presently testing the efficacy of computer assisted menu planning in the National School Lunch Program, using two school districts: Dade County, Florida, and Memphis, Tennessee.

Basically, the computer's advantage is an enormous savings in time and money. All the data needed to plan a menu is programmed into the computer — information on individual recipes, food items, cost, nutrient content, number of servings, portion size, frequency, cooking procedures, and so on.

"Most nutritionists seem to share the mistaken assumption that the knowledge of the nutrient composition of foods and the recommended dietary allowance is somehow sufficient to plan a diet," argued Balintfy, "when in fact this information contains only a part of the coefficients of the system of mathematical equation that must be solved to determine non-negative quantities of food."

Despite its success, the concept of computerized menu planning has not been well-received at UMass Food Services. Former food services director Joel Stoneham's "basic concern" was that Balintfy's program is too new and, according to Stoneham, "unproven and previously untested elsewhere. This department needs sound operational information," he added, "and we can't afford to spend students' money on (testing) this sort of stuff."

According to Marie Cappadona, one of the two registered dieticians on campus, menus are presently planned by a meal-by-meal selection of the basic entrees, based upon the entree's variety, suitability, and production problems (physical limitations and logistics problems). Her choices are reviewed by a committee composed of assistant dining commons managers and other staff members. To this list of entrees, Ms. Cappadona adds the vegetables, desserts, condiments, and so on, until a menu cycle is developed for a period of one semester. The only nutritional concern is that each day's menu contains items from each of the Basic Four Food groups----dairy, meat, vegetables and fruits, and breads and cereals.

Not only would a computer planned menu save money, but it would provide scientific insurement of proper nutritional levels in students' diets.

However, the UMass dietary personnel are seemingly unwilling to accept this and, until they do, computerized menu planning for UMass students will only be something to see on Star Trek.

Lynton Becomes V.P. Of Academic Affairs

By SHARON HUGHES

A former physicist and the first dean of Livingston College at Rutgers University was named the University's first senior vice president for academic affairs yesterday.

The 47-year-old Dr. Ernest A. Lynton was nominated by the president of the three UMass campuses, Dr. Robert Wood, and approved by university's Trustees, at a full board meeting yesterday afternoon. He is to begin his duties this January.

Lynton was also named professor of physics for both the Boston and Amherst campuses. He will be teaching at both campuses at one time or another next semester, according to a spokesman from president Wood's office.

As senior vice-president, Lynton's duties include: reviewing requests about personnel actions (including tenure decisions) and academic budgets from all three campuses; making recommendations to President Wood on the budgets and participating in the planning and development of the universities.

Lynton was principally responsible for organization and physical plans at Livingston College while he was dean from 1965-1973.

President Wood praised Lynton's appointment saying,

"Securing a person who combines national reputations both for scholarship in the physical sciences and for academic leadership in the turbulent years of the 1960's is a major accomplishment.

"At a time when the university faces new challenges of achieving excellence, improving teaching, and charting new paths appropriate to the 1970's, Ernest's presence is welcome indeed."

The university's two other vice-presidents are, Peter B. Edelman, vice-president for university policy and Nan S. Robinson, vice-president for planning.

The Trustees also approved the nominations of two sociology professors to the Amherst campus Alice Rossi, professor at Goucher College and author of The Feminist Papers, and Peter Rossi, professor at John Hopkins University and nationally known sociologist, will begin teaching next September.

Clarifications And Corrections

The story in yesterday's Collegian on intercession programs in McKimmie and Patterson houses contained several mistakes. Corrections are listed below. The Collegian regrets the errors.

---the programs will run from January 6-26; not from January 7-24.

---only McKimmie programs are open to the entire university community, not Patterson's programs, as was reported.

---there are vacancies in McKimmie for participants who need housing, but there may be no vacancies in Patterson-check with them.

---The $5 pre-registration fee for McKimmie's programs must be paid when the courses start in January.

EWC serves the needs of all undergraduate women, especially commuters, as well as non-traditional women, staff, faculty, older women, women on welfare, and community women wanting to change their lives.

Senate Meeting The Ultimate In Confusion

The Report

The Student Senate voted last night to establish an adjunct committee of the Constitutional Steering Committee to investigate role definitions within the administrative leadership of the Student Government Association. Provided appropriate notice is given to the university community, the committee will be composed of all undergrads who sign up by December 10. The committee will report its findings at the first regular senate meeting of the Spring semester.

Commentary

By BRIAN COYNE

There is a certain degree of confusion and disorder at every Student Senate meeting. Last night, confusion and disorder reigned.

David Booker, speaker of the Senate, was continually asking the members of the senate to quiet down to allow discussion to take place. Whenver he relinquished the chair to debate the confusion increased because his replacements were not sufficiently versed in the rules of parliamentary procedure.

Emotions were extremely high last night. Internal conflicts within the leadership of the senate led to the passage of a bill establishing a committee to define the roles of the senate officers. The Unity Slate of the senate, in introducing the bill for the special committee, issued the following statement: "The basic issue is this government and how power is being used. We want to know what changes are going to take place to enable ALL SENATORS to have an active part in this government."

Throughout the meeting, senators were walking in and out of the chamber for conferences with other senators. Other senators simply left in disgust. At one point of the meeting, a quorum was not present. Senators who had left had to be brought back to the meeting in order to have enough people to conduct the meeting.

The regular agenda for the meeting was hardly even touched. Most of the meeting was spent on the special business of the new committee. An original motion was introduced, and was amended twice. Each amendment brought more discussion and more confusion. Knowledge of parliamentary procedure was at a premium.

"Can we have order please?"

"Could you speak up? I can't hear you."

"Point of order!"

"What are we doing?"

SORRY!

Brother Gomes & Sacred Cowboy

By KEVIN CAHILL

Andy MacKenzie and Gary Gomes are two UMass student disc jockeys on WSYL, 97.7 FM. From a tiny room in Sylvan Area's Cashin Dormitory strewn with wires, scratched records, and cheap electrical components, Andy and Gary play an odd variety of music Thursday nights from 7 to 10 that ranges from old Beatle tunes to avant-garde jazz and even includes Alvin and the Chipmunks.

Andy, "your sacred cowboy" to his listeners, is not sure who runs the two year-old station ("somebody named Jerry") and says simply, "I just come up here and do my show." Andrew is thin and bearded and has a fine radio voice, yet his monologues, half sarcastic and half insane, must mystify his entire audience.

After the show, however, Andy's manner changed from raucous to quiet and he related some interesting facts about himself. Now a 22-year old second semester freshman, Andy attended Emerson College in Boston for a year, but failed his courses and received no credits. He decided to take a year off from school and spent five months studying under the Indian guru Maharishi Mahesh Yogi in Spain. He termed the experience enlightening, but added that he is "not a fanatic about it anymore."

Mass Communications is Andy's major ("Couldn't you tell by my resonant voice?") and he did his first show a few weeks ago on WMUA, the main campus radio station. He hopes to get a regular show next semester and escape tiny WSYL. A scribbled sign on WSYL's door reads: "Broadcast radius 80 feet or less." Andy also reviews records and concerts for the Collegian under various pseudonyms.

His small single room in 503 Cashin is dominated by a stereo and 3 or 4 cartons of record albums. He sat surveying the records and decided his musical interests are "just about anything." The Mahavishnu Orchestra, Andy admitted, is his favorite group. Boston's free-form rock radio station WBCN has influenced him greatly, he said, because his home is in Norwell and "my radio couldn't get anything else."

Andy's cohort, Gary Gomes is a senior sociology major who lives in Greenough dorm and is from Fall River, "the armpit of Massachusetts" as he says. Gary is wild-eyed and frizzy haired with an equally frizzy beard. He moves and speaks nervously because of a slight cerebral palsy condition, yet is always open to conversation on any topic.

During the show, Gary sits on Andy's right, handing him albums to cue up on the turntables and occasionally shouting into the mike, Gary's knowledge of music, especially. modern jazz, is immense as is his collection of strange and rare albums. Former Student Senator and Campus Center Communications Coordinator, Gary is now the major music reporter and sometime editorialist for the UMass Collegian.

As the radio show entered its final minutes, Gary forced Andy to play a long complex piece by pianist Cecil Taylor. "Cecil Taylor is my favorite musician," he added excitedly. Andy answered the telephone. "Sorry, no requests. The guy who comes in at 10:00 will play them all for you," he said, lying.

Preparing to sign off, Andy leaned down and crooned into the mike:

"So from Brother Gomes, me, your sacred cowboy, and all the mad monks, we here at SYL wish you....realization."

WMUA Plans A Move

W.M.U.A. Campus Radio Station operates from within four or five compact rooms filled with electronic equipment tucked amongst the engineering Buildings behind the Graduate Research Center. Because of overcrowded conditions, an attempt is being made, although it does not go into effect for at least half a year, to move the station into the Student Union.

(Staff Photo - Steve Ruggles)

The record library containing about 10,000 albums, is filled to capacity and then some. These records have all been sent to WMUA from record companies for promotional purposes, with twenty to thirty new l.p.'s coming in weekly. A music director listens to each of the incoming records to eliminate those he judges to be purely commercial. Those which he considers to be good, are put on play list and from there are usually transferred after a month into the record library.

WMUA has no investigative reporting team. In its place a news director combines and edits incoming UPI and AP news onto tapes.

More than 20 DJ's, each doing two shows a week, have total control over their programs.

WUMV-TV

Student Aimed Closed Circuit

By MARY LAWSON

UMass has its own TV station, WUMV, in Room 167 of the Campus Center (CC).

One outward sign of what this 30-member staff is doing is the "Video Sidewalk", which students see weekday afternoons while passing through the CC.

"This is our most direct outlet to the community," said Chris Sophinos, a coordinator for the station in a Collegian interview. So far, WUMV is limited to closed circuit telecasts, but it hopes to develop a campus-video.

He explained that WUMV members show video tapes they have produced locally as well as professionally-produced tapes they rent from VTN (Video Tape Network). A week ago, there was a tape of the Nov. 26 john Mayall concert, produced by some of the crew.

Among VTN tapes have been Groove Tube, a satire which has been showing in Boston for nearly two years; Lenny Bruce without Tears, Ace Trucking Company and Cheech & Chong.

Bill McKinnon, another coordinator, said that in February the members plan to show some tapes from the Central Tape Library on the "Video Sidewalk". These tapes, unlike VTN's products, are student-produced works from around the country reflecting campus problems and events.

They also are going to get "Video Sidewalk" into the dorms. It will be a program in cooperation with the head of residence of each dorm.

Sunday night football games in "the Bluewall" are another public outlet of the station. WUMV is also showing the basketball games.

"People who are interested in media and see video as having a good potential have become members of the station," said Sophinos. To become a member, he said, students must attend two consecutive monthly meetings, which are in Room 102 CC on Monday nights, and cannot miss more than two after that. Twenty-five of the members are divided into four production teams, each with a coordinator. Each gets up to three credits for this independent study.

Sophinos said his production team is working on three productions, It taped NRBQ, and Clean Living in the CC Auditorium several weeks ago and with splice at appropriate places, interviews with group members. Sophinos said that the purpose of this is to get viewers to see what goes on behind these music groups and to give a more complete image of the group.

He said his team is also making an analysis of Mountain Farms Mall and its relation to the community. Another production they are working on is a multi-media show featuring NRBQ in the Bluewall. While NRBQ is being shown on the monitors and performing, the TV crew will videotape the spectators and NRBQ for later showing.

Sophinos said some of the other projects are sports, DVP speakers, glass blowing at the Rhode Island School of Design and the J.O.E. program. Possible future projects include videotaping some engineer classes each week and showing them in Sylvan, where there are many engineering majors, and a public affairs program with the music department.

Equipment and the station are accessible to university students, Sophinos said. Under an equipment lending policy, any student has access to one portable video system for a 12-hour period, once a week. The person must submit a request at least a week prior to use and attend three lessons on the function of the video system.

Randy Richardson, another coordinator can arrange videotape showings. For example, if a Peer Sex class wanted to see WMUV's videotape of V.D. Blues, he can be contacted at 5-1321 in the studio.

McKinnon feels that WMUV's main goal is to videotape events on the UMass campus and bring them to students who can't make the events because of space limitations and time conflicts.

Sophinos said that the station is on a very tight budget. This year's $2,500 is much less than last year's budget of $16,000, a substantial of which was used to replace uninsured stolen equipment.

Faculty Bulletin Arrives At UMass

By SUE ADLEY

A combination newspaper and weekly bulletin for UMASS faculty and staff has made its debut on campus. Called the University Bulletin, its editor is Katy Gillmor, who continues as editor of the Alumnus.

"The publication will be filled with news about the University, and features about people and events on campus. The regular weekly bulletin will be included," said Ms. Gillmor. "I believe that the paper will be a good channel of information for all staff here at the University. Because of its format, we're able to do certain things with it that we couldn't do before with just the bulletin as it was."

Evelynne Kramer, the managing editor, was hired especially for the job. She has worked previously as a professional reporter for many Massachusetts newspapers.

Concerning other staff that help produce the Bulletin, Ms. Kramer said that aside from Ms. Gillmor and herself, there are "two staff writers, and the Bulletin's designer, Richard Hendel, who works for the University Press." She also said that there are no plans at the moment for adding new staff members.

"The idea," Ms. Kramer said, "has been in the works for a long time. There is a core of people who feel that a publication of this type is good to foster two, three, and four way communication in a large University such as this one. For example, letters to the editor will be welcomed on any point or topic. These letters, along with the weekly bulletin, will hopefully be regular features."

On the subject of distribution, Ms. Kramer said that subscriptions were a possibility, but nothing definite has been decided on yet. "Plans for future issues really include most of the same thing that our first issue had--features, news, and the bulletin, and the features will often be about people other than faculty. There will be no advertising at all. Generally, I can say that we've a lot to write about because our resources here are very rich," she said.

According to Dan Melley, Director of University Public Affairs, the University Bulletin is being financed through the Public Affairs budget, which is made up of state funds. Other things financed under this budget include the University News Bureau, WFCR (five college radio), the graphic design shop, and the University photo center.

The first issue of the University Bulletin came out last Thursday, Nov. 29. Eight pages long, it included a feature on President Wood's recommendation for the new position of vice president of the University, a feature on Southwest, and another on the cow barns belonging to the School of Agriculture. The weekly bulletin was on the last page.

There are people who feel that the debut of the University Bulletin at this time is somewhat coincidental. Frank Olbris is the Secretary of the University of Massachusetts Employee's Association (UMEA), which is a local chapter of the Massachusetts State Employee's Association (MSEA). He said that his organization feels it has something to do with the parking fee situation. "The parking fee issue," Olbris said, "has divided the University community from the administration as none other has in our experience. You have a really bad situation where the workers don't trust the administration. In spite of the opposition, the parking fees still exist. Our conclusion is that the Administration is trying to manipulate the views of the workers, and gloss over the parking situation with a little public relations. The channel used to do this might well be this publication."

The MSEA, which has over 400 classified or non-professional University employees as members, recently made a statement saying, "Instead of dealing openly with the cause of disagreement (over the parking issue), the Administration appears to be trying to divert attention from a major wound in the fabric of the University community."

The organization also said that the approximately $16,000 which will be spent on the newspaper in the next six months could have been used toward parking fees this year. "If that money," Olbris said, "is available to spend on the production of the Bulletin and Ms. Kramer's salary, why is the Administration making the University employees pay so much for parking? I'm not saying this as an attack against the paper itself or its editors but this seems to be a motive of the Administration.

After being asked his opinion of the Bulletin last Sunday, Olbris said that "the lead story was not very interesting, and otherwise the Bulletin contained nothing much of vital interest from a non-professional point of view." He also said that it greatly expressed the Administration's view points, and thus it seemed to be aimed at the employees.

In response to the UMEA's statements, Evelynne Kramer said, "What they feel is not taken as a personal criticism. I'll still stand by the publication--it speaks for itself. We welcome the UMEA, its officers, or any other people to come to us with ideas for stories. My door is always open." Also in response, Katy Gillmor said, "I feel the same as Evelynne does about what Frank Olbris and the UMEA have said. I'm proud of our publication. I think we're accomplishing what we set out to do: provide a vehicle for information for staff and faculty - a paper geared to their needs."

In a random sampling of professors taken by the MDC to find out their opinions of the new University Bulletin, most made favorable comments. Professor Howard Ziff, head of the department of Journalistic Studies, said that the Bulletin was "very well done." "The article about the unionization election was balanced and fair," he said. "The cow barn feature was good. I believe that the publication fills a need. I look at it as an organ of communication. As far as it being a waste of money, that can run into a very long debate. I personally don't feel it's a waste of money."

Professor Cadwell Ray, president of the local chapter of the AAUP (American Association of University Professors), said, "Evelynne Kramer did a good job. It appeared that an attempt was made to express all view points. No one can really say much, though, until it's had a chance. When Oswald Tippo was Chancellor, the same kind of thing was tried, but then dropped because everything in it was also in the weekly bulletin and in the Collegian.

Dr. Duncan H. Rollason of the Zoology department said, "I thought the reporting was good and the articles well written. I think the MSEA's comments were slightly premature. The publication seems to be an honest effort to improve communication. If those who object to view points and ideas in it don't write letters, it'll be an organ that speaks for the Administration."

Art Exhibit Places New Focus On Israel

By LAURA DUBOWSKI

If you happened by the Colonial Lounge anywhere from 10 in the morning to 10 last night then you probably saw the Arts and Crafts Exhibit and Sale. This event was sponsored by the Hillel Foundation and the Pioneer Valley Community for Israel.

On display for both exhibition and sale were prints, paintings, sculptures, ceramics, jewelry and woven items. All in all there were 268 items. These were contributed by 48 artists. (It is to be noted that the arts and crafts were the work of Pioneer Valley artists and not just artists of this college community.) Of the 48 artists, 40 of them donated their works for free. All proceeds will go to the Israel Emergency Fund, for humanitarian purposes. Some of the ways in which the funds are utilized are for the construction and maintenance of hospitals and orphanages. The money in no way goes to the war effort.

One of the main purposes of this event and of all the events that have been sponsored by the Hillel Foundation this week is to give the public some idea of all the aspects of Israel. The coordinators of these events feel that too many people hear just about the war in the Mideast. This exhibition, along with the other activities, are intended to give people an idea of the cultural, educational and artistic offerings of Israel.

The general concensus of the coordinators as the week has gone on is that more and more people have increasingly come to the events and activities which have included a movie, a book sale and a cabaret. For those involved, this week has generated support for Israel among themselves, boosting morale and making them feel that they are not alone in the world. For the public some of their curiosity about life in Israel — other than the war — has been satisfied this week.

V.S. Prichett

A Character Out Of Dickens

By KATHI COLEMAN

What does a seventy-three year old world famous British writer have to say?

I have only seen V.S. Pritchett once. He looks very much like one of the more dignified Dickens' characters which he is so fond of.

Upon doing some research, I discovered he came from a financially insecure background, his father was a frequently bankrupt merchant. He quit school at 15 to become a leatherman's apprentice, then worked as a journalist on the continent for seven years. At 29, he began writing an endless line of novels, literary critisms, and short stories. He married at 36 and fathered two children.

What I wanted to know is how did he do it all.

The coward's approach has always been one of my favorites. With little difficulty, I phoned Smith College and asked for the writer-in-residence, V.S. Pritchett. His wife answered the phone and asked if my intentions were honorable, I assured her they were. Before I had a chance to get too nervous, the crackling accent of V.S.P. was on the line.

Much to my disillusionment, the author was a bit of a sexist in his Victorian way. I had noted that the greatest portion of his work is dedicated to his wife. I wanted to know the role she had played in his success. He said, "Very important. She has children and is very helpful.

The rest of the conversation was brief and informative. He has in no way found his short formal education a hinderance, rather a "stimulant". He favors late marriages so the couple will be eager. No single event in his life stands out in his memory as singularly persuasive or meaningul except perhaps travel. The favorite country of his travels is Spain, because of its people, "their simplicity, their pride." His main goal in life has been to be a good writer, but he does not believe he has achieved this, because "no one ever does". His favorite form of literature is the short story. He enjoys very much his position at Smith, both the freedom it affords and the insight furnished by his students. If he had the power to change one event in his life, he would like to have "more hair".

Pritchett and his wife have returned to their permanent residence in London. However, his most valuable advice will remain with me. It was directed to today's young people. "Be cheerful. Work hard and do not wait for inspiration to come from heaven. Make work a habit." He practiced what he preached.

UMass Chorale Performs At Bowker

By MIKE KNEELAND

"Singing is for the birds" is one cliche that doesn't hold true for the University Chorale and Chamber Singers.

Having rehearsed for more than three months, both singing groups will have made their debuts before next weekend.

Last night the Chorale singers performed with the University Orchestra in Bowker Auditorium. The 50 singers have been rehearsing four hours a week since school began. They are directed by Dr. Richard Dubois.

The Chorale's next performance is scheduled for Dec. 9th at St. Anne's Church in Chicopee.

The Chorale and Chamber singers will each perform Dec. 12th in Bowker Auditorium. There will be no admission charge.

Dr. Dubois said the Chorale will sing such pieces as "Laudate Dominum" by A. Scarlatti, "Vinea Mea Electa" by Poulenc, and "Abenlied" by Haydn.

Student soloists Kathy Hall, Irene Saloio, Donald Boyd, and Robert Ruplenas will be featured in "Trois Bemux Oiseaux" by Rauel. Marilyn Dyer, a soprano soloist, will sing "Fall Softly, Snow" by Daniel Moe.

The Chamber Singers will perform "Magnificat" by A. Vivalni with the University Orchestra.

Janice Erickson, a sophomore, says the singers are a "pretty close group", especially after tours.

Both the Chorale and Chamber Singers have established fine reputations both in the United States and abroad.

Dylan's Back!

By EDITH M. LEDERER
Associated Press Writer

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Concert halls were reserved anonymously. Arrangements were worked out clandestinely. But one of the best-kept secrets in rock music is out: Bob Dylan is making his first nation-wide tour in eight years.

In the casual style that has become his trademark, Dylan's comeback was announced in newspaper advertisements in 21 cities which said simply "Dylan-The Band" and gave details about buying concert tickets.

But that was enough for Dylan fans who've been waiting for years for the recluse legend of the rock-folk world to return to the concert scene.

The master plotter of Dylan's comeback is promoter Bill Graham, who managed to reserve nearly two dozen top concert halls across the country without telling their owners the name of the show's star.

Graham said: "We wanted to keep this a secret and avoid the hysteria as long as possible, and I think they had enough respect for this organization and myself that I wouldn't rent it for a hula hoop contest.

"I wanted to start a rumor that it was Howard Hughes who was the mystery star but I knew I couldn't produce him so I gave up that idea," he said.

To discourage scalpers, tickets are being sold only by mail with a maximum four per customer. But Graham said he's received reports that kids already were scalping tickets in Chicago, New York, Miami and Los Angeles — even though actual sales only began Sunday and nobody knew what the tickets looked like.

WMUA

Tonight WMUA will air a one hour program dialogue primarily about God and the reasons for believing in Him. Ideas on the nature of God, and the meaning of "faith" will be discussed. Wrapping up the program will be a discussion on the psychological implications of Christian beliefs.

The host will be Steve Lord, a member of the UMass Public Debate Program. Guests will include Mr. John Fite--staff representative of the Campus Crusade for Christ and Mr. Harvey Meister--a UMass senior and member of the Inter-varsity Christian Fellowship.

The Greek Way

Its More Than What It Used To Be

By BONNIE COHEN

To many people on campus, the only thing that fraternities and sororities represent is a crowd at the Pub on a week-end night or a crowd of cheering jocks at the homecoming football game. But to most members of the Greek system, sororities and fraternities represent a viable alternative to dorm living, with many added benefits.

The latter point of view is visible in the notable rise in the number of pledges at UMass. According to Joe Barboza, president of the Greek council, the number of pledges has almost doubled since reaching its lowest point in 1969-70. Nationally, the increase has been a bit more conservative. A 15 per cent rise in fraternity membership toward the end of last year has been noted by the National Interfraternity Conference.

The numbers would tend to indicate that the frat is indeed back, to some degree. According to President Barboza, the reason for this is the "closeness of people" in a frat or sorority house and the atmosphere which is "conducive to studying". Barboza also attributes the rise in the number of pledges to the work of the Greek Council Area Government, over which he presides.

But what about the same objections that drove membership in the Greeks down to its lowest point in the end of the sixties and early part of the seventies? Frat and sorority houses were condemned as being under six inches of beer at all times and concerned with "irrelevant" matters such as pledge formals and the homecoming parades. Another common complaint was that the Greek system turned out group followers from the same mold.

Barboza rejects these sterptypes and notes that the grade point average for people living in fraternities and sorority is higher than the averages in dorms. He said one of the reasons for this as stemming from the general improvement of study habits of most Greek members. These study habits are improved due to the enforcement of quiet hours in most houses, generally lasting from 7 p.m. until 11 a.m. "People are usually happier in a house", according to Barboza, "and are therefore more satisfied with school".

Another possible reason for the increase in membership is the living conditions at most houses. The houses cost about the same, and in some cases less, to live in than the dorms. They also offer a seven day meal plan instead of the five day meal plan offered by the University. Barboza said that people need to "escape from the cinderblocks and elevators in the dorms".

The Greek Council has been working towards a true representation of the Greek system, as well as providing social and community services to the University, said Barboza. Through its eight committees, the council sponsors such things as money raising events for organizations such as UNICEF, the American Cancer Society and the Belchertown State School.

The council also sponsors such things as homecoming events, a Christmas party and "Greek Week", (planned for April 21-27). Greek week consists of a series of events designed to "show the rest of the University that the Greeks are together".

The Academic Affairs committee of the Greek Council is working on a plan which would bring some University courses to the frat and sorority houses, as it is now done in other residential areas on campus. The committee is facing some obstacles in instituting this program, but hope to have it straightened out as part of their long range plans, said Barboza.

Another innovation in the Greek system is the introduction of co-ed fraternities. Sigma Alpha Mu is the self-claimed "ultimate in co-ed living". Actually, SAM is one of eight pilot fraternities across the country which is experimenting with the viability of co-ed Greek living. Many still wonder, however, why it is still called a fraternity when it houses both men and women....

Here's What They Think

By BONNIE COHEN

The mere mention of the word "sorority" or "fraternity" will almost always bring a reaction from people, whether it be favorable, adverse or non-commital.

In a random survey of UMass students, the most avid proponents of the Greek system were obviously those members and pledges of the various sororities and fraternities. Donna Arsenault, a member of Chi Omega, feels that her sorority is like a "big, but close family". Before she came into contact with any sorority, Donna "vowed that I would never join one". However, upon her first visit to Chi Omega, she "fell in love" with the people and surroundings of the house. "Very cold and unfriendly" was how Donna explained the dorm she lived in before she moved into the house, where she claims she has "met a really wide variety of people".

Not everyone who has pledged and joined a sorority has the same positive feeling as Ms. Arsenault. A former sorority member related to me an almost bizarre series of events that took place as she pledged for a certain sorority. (She has asked that her name not be mentioned in this article for fear that she will have "seventy screaming girls down her neck").

While pledging for her sorority, this candidate was taken around campus with a pillowcase over her head, and finally led into an unknown room. There, she was quizzed on certain questions concerning the sorority's history and members. Everytime she did not answer a question "satisfactorily" she was doused with such things as eggs, chocolate milk, and spaghetti sauce. A fellow pledge received a better surprise that night. As a prize for answering a question correctly, she won a trip to Hawaii, which consisted of two large garbage cans full of freezing cold water being thrown over her on a cold December night. Some prize.....

In another instance, this former sorority member was told to go over to a certain fraternity house and steal their composite, which is a framed picture of all the fraternity members. While doing this, the picture fell on the ground and broke, with the pledge falling into the broken glass and cutting her hands and legs. She was left standing in the house, bleeding, while the members of the fraternity screamed "beat her!". She was finally rescued by a friend in the fraternity.

In speaking to other Greek members, this appears to be an isolated and singular event, and this type of practice is not a part of all sorority and fraternity inductions. However, it still did happen.

Joe Barboza, President of the Greek Council and member of Sigma Alpha Epsilon, has quite a different view of Greek life. He has met, in his own house as well as others, alot of "really warm and friendly people who genuinely care about what happens to you". Joe noted that since he entered his fraternity, his average has gone up considerably, and he is a "much happier person".

Some criticism of the Greek system came from those who are not members of sororities or fraternities. Libby Wendt, a junior and an art major at UMass, feels that sororities are a "farce". She feels that the members "talk about sisterhood, and then turn around and are so catty."

Another common complaint about sororities and fraternities was that they are too time-consuming.

"No time" was the reason that Joanne Nemes give for not joining a sorority. She also felt that she couldn't find a sorority that was "really concerned with academics".

Some people have differing opinions on the usefulness and community spirit of Greek organizations. Last fall some Fraternity members got together to refurbish their house.

Make Street Listing Easier

Over intersession and the early part of next semester the Town Clerk's Office in Amherst will begin the great Street Listing Crusade. The Street Listing is important because it is used to update the Town's voting rolls and if your name isn't on the Street Listing then you can't vote. Last year the system used to compile the list on campus was a fiasco. This was not so much the fault of the Town Clerk as it was of state laws that are designed for communites with less mobile voters.

The system to be used this year has not yet been decided but an interesting sidelight of the decision is the lack of public notice. When I called the Town Clerk's Office I was informed that while the system they had under consideration was not a secret they could not tell me what it was because they did not know if they were going to use it. I was not aware that the process for collecting names for the voting roles was of such great importance that it has to be kept under cover for unknown reasons. It would seem better to open and freely discuss the proposed method to get as much feedback from the community as possible; especially the students who were the most adversely affected by last year's procedures. Instead we have a secret to be announced at some later date; perhaps when it is too late to change. Is the Town Hall so worried about criticism that they cannot let us know such a simple fact?

We would hope that even if we cannot comment on the new system we can discuss the old and have some input that way. As mentioned before, the importance of the street listing is mainly to registered voters on this campus. Last year the Street Listing Cards were distributed to each Head of Residence by an employee of the Town Clerk's Office. Unfortunately, this person did not understand just what the cards were for and left many Heads of Residence with the impression that you had to fill one out to licence your dog or qualify for welfare or something like that. There weren't enough cards for all the students to fill our and, even if there were enough, they weren't always distributed in the dorm.

Suggestions for this year included mailing the cards to each registed voter on campus at the address they gave last year. An enclosed letter of explanation could clarify what the cards are for. Because the mails are so slow especially when you've moved, at least one month should be allowed for the return of the cards. Some may fear that the cards will not be filled out by the person they are addressed to but instead by someone wanting to vote in his or her place. They should remember that before your name is dropped from the rolls you are sent a letter which must be signed and returned and not many of these are used illegally. The Selectmen have made student participation easier by moving the elections back so that students will be in Amherst when voting takes place. The Town Clerk should follow their lead and make street listing easier.

Further election reforms that are needed include a change in the ballot so that addresses are not listed. Because there is some friction between the students and the townies people often vote by address. For instance if you live in JFK it will appear on the ballot and voters will know you are a student. If you lived off campus your chances of election would be much higher. If this is not done then the campus should be combined into one precinct. This is unacceptable to the town leaders but if other changes are not made this might be necessary. It's time that students become first class voters in this town we've been second class too long. But if we are to become first class voters it will require active participation in town government no matter what the Town Clerk and the selectmen do. we can't have an effect on the town unless we get involved.

Brush Up On Your Orwell

Most of us have encountered George Orwell in some capacity or another. Usually, this happens in High School, where 1984 or Animal Farm are favorites of 11th Grade English Instructors who hope that the brevity and simplicity of Orwell will be more palatible to students who are bored to death with over-ritualized curiculum. But unfortunately, Orwell is often regarded by students as part and parcel of the entire High School routine, to be scimped through as quickly as possible. The lockers abound with dollar twenty-five summaries and "Classics Illustrated" comic-book editions of Orell's novels.

A more refreshing approach to Orwell must be cultivated in our nations schools. Failure to do so may speed up our rendezvous with 1984.

Orwell's devastating exposure of totalitarianism is the point which is often missed by students who approach the material with half-heartedness. Very rarely are students acquainted with any of Orwell's non-fictional works, which are written with the same unembellished English which make his novels so digestable. His satire of "Newspeak", the subversion o language by a totalitarian bureaucracy, is corresponded in quality by several of his essays, most notably one entitled Politics and the English Language. The satire "Newspeak" was aimed at specifically the "unfree" political regimes, such as Nazi Germany or Soviet Russia. His essays, however, were levelled against people who were closer to home: that peculiar species known as the English speaking intellectuals.

1984 was Orwell's prophecy of the ultimate triumph of the State over the minds and souls of men. Such a triumph, according to Orwell, could not be accomplished merely by the modernization of any repressive apparatus, such as the "Big Brother" techniques chillingly described in 1984. Such a triumph could come about only by converting the basic usage of the King's English into a technique of eliminating the capacity to think, rather than expressing it. The exposure of the corruption of political language was the greatest achievement of his overall critique of totalitarianism. Political language, as it had developed in his lifetime, was debauched to make "lies sound truthful and murder respectable, and to give an appearance of solidity to pure wind."

The struggle to control thought by manipulating language was a battle which Orwell had observed first hand in his short lifetime. He had broken with the upper classes from which he originated, recognizing fully the pretentious snobbery and meaningless inflation of upper-crust speech. On the other hand, his temporary fellow traveling with the British Socialists brought him into contact with propaganda which sought to convince the British of the glories of totalitarian dictatorships which paraded under the banner of the working class. Defending the indefensible by means of carefully chosen euphemisms and deliberate vagueness was the pattern of verbiage which gave him the inspiration for "Newspeak."

There is much debate over the necessity of requiring college undergraduates to participate in rhetoric courses. Anybody who has read Orwell seriously will be more skeptical of proposals to eliminate such requirements. The vulnerability of our language to subversion by power seekers is good enough reason for administrators and instructors to seek the perpetuation of a program which brings our usage of English into scrutiny and constant reexamination. We should make Orwell an integral part of such a program.

To The Editor:

I feel compelled to comment at this time on the overall decadence of Ms. Joyce Kosofsky's verbiage. She has distinguished herself as a journalist without rival, not for any ability or integrity she might have, but for her total and all too obvious lack of the very same.

It was with a great deal of distaste that I viewed her article some months ago entitled, "Screw you", a wonderfully lower class epithet which perhaps describes its author only too well. As a person who considers himself suitably vulgar at certain times, I must object to the use of such phrases both in the press and in all other forms of public display. I think that journalism requires something more distinguished and well-thought out than the distasteful ravings of Ms. Kosofsky.

It is, however, in regard to her current bit of drivel, "How to get out of a mealticket", that I would like to comment. In her article, she lays out, chapter and verse, precisely how to go about "beating the system".

There are, to my knowlege, two effects of her suggestions. The first effect is that anybody with a legitimate case for a mealticket exemption will now be far more carefully screened, and so the student will find it increasing hard to secure an exemption. (Which I do not feel was one of her aims). The second effect, though, and the most important, is that, if we have as little regard for our Area Directors, as she apparently has, and we lie to them; and we have as little respect for a Rabbi and the Jewish faith in general, as she apparently has, and we lie to the Rabbi; and we have as little regard for the concept of Financial Aid, as she implies she does, and we falsify information in order to gain an exemption; then perhaps we all may sometime share the total lack of respect which she deserves and the total bancruptcy of character, ethics, and most of all integrity of which she is so vacuously devoid. She has, for all intensive purposes, my sincere sympathy.

To The Editor:

I read in the Collegian today (Dec. 4), that UMass has received a supplemental grant for the free bus system. The article says that three additional buses will be purchased.

As a resident of South Amherst, and a student at UMass, I implore those responsible for scheduling the buses to consider us when you decide how to use them. Hundreds of cars come onto campus each day from South Amherst simply because we have no alternate way of getting there. Not only does this increase the amount of cars on campus, but it also contributes to the traffic jams in the center of town during the rush hours.

With the predicted fuel shortages in the upcoming months, to deny us a bus is only going to make matters worse, as one bus uses much less fuel than the number of cars that could be kept from running. All indicators point to South Amherst as the place where the buses are needed most. Please do not continue to ignore us.

To The Editor:

I should like to take issue with some of the rather blithe assumptions underlying Dave Eibel's editorial "Oil Blackmail" in Friday's Collegian. While it will be more and more difficult to tackle pro-Israeli righteousness as we shiver through the coming winter, I question his background assertions that:

1. Israel is totally in the right. Israel is a hard-nosed settler state that is carving out a home for a displaced people by displacing other people. They do it not so much hand in hand with the Lord as by an impressive ammalgamation of technology, organization, imagination and ruthlessness.

2. Israel is in imminent danger of annihilation. Since 1947, Israel has annihilated herself into a several-fold increase in territory, in the process soundly thrashing her annihilators three and a half times. Each time, the American public has been bombarded with apocalyptic predictions of disaster, followed after the conflict by wonder at the miracle of her continued survival. The history, should we care to look at it, comprises two successful preemptive strikes by Israel; five years of intensive training and massive inflow of Soviet arms produced only a hesitant and temporary questioning of Israeli superiority and brought Moshe Dayan to within 100 kilometers of Cairo. Even the most rabid Arab guerilla no longer talks of pushing Israelis into the sea. It is now merely a matter of regaining captured land and a just treatment for the Palestinians — not any different, really, from what the Jews of Europe demanded at the end of World War II. We might bear in mind as well that this most recent pass at the Israeli jugular was fought entirely on Arab territory. There was no invasion of Israel, nor was there intended to be.

3. Feisal is an international criminal. I find it intriguing that an economic boycott of South Africa or Rhodesia by an antiracist nation is called a sanction, while the Arab oil embargo is "blackmail". There are a couple of aspects of the Saudi ruler's decision that will undoubtedly go unnoticed: that he has given us four years of warning (which we neglected to heed in any way), and that he is not trying to force us into any new position. The official U.S. stance has been to advocate withdrawal from the territories occupied in 1967. The Saudi "blackmail" is directed only toward such a withdrawal, and is simply taking us at our word, When America stops its de facto support of the occupation, the tap will be turned on again.

There is too much of the kind of fiend-and-angel dialectic typified by Dave's article. The December wind blows cold through the tents of a million Arab refugees. Seeing them as so many little Hitlers, or equating sympathy for them with capitulation to tyranny is not only blind and cruel, it is unpardonably stupid, and ill serves the cause of peace in the Middle East.

To The Editor:

This is in response to the article on page one of Wednesday's Collegian dealing with the ARA study of Food Services. In particular the part about "vacant Hampden Dining Commons" is a complete fallacy. Hampden Commons is anything but vacant.

On the south side of the building there exists "Munchies," a small convenience store dealing in food supplies and toiletries. Next to it there is "Bites and Pieces", a snack bar offering everything from soup to brownies. Also on the south side there is a row of pinball machines that receive almost constant use.

On the north side is the Community Resource Center, open 12-8 each weekday, with every type of counseling imaginable. There also exists an area there for movies, theatre, meetings, etc. Every Sunday and Tuesday nights the Amherst Film Cooperative shows films that the average student can see nowhere else in the University. Every Thursday the Southwest Assembly meets there at 7:30. In the past two months there have been movies, dances, theatre in Hampden.

In the north lobby this week and last Jean Becker, with seed money from the Southwest Assembly, is running a project where students can learn to make their own greeting cards, and actually make them there.

The Campus Center recently submitted their plan for a Rathskellar in the basement of Hampden, scheduled for early next semester.

The only vacant space in Hampden is the backrooms which are being used by Food Services for catering services.

We invite Mr. Kurinsky to come and visit us in Southwest. Obviously he has been away too long.

We need to help local communities in and around Amherst. People need YOU! You can help others to help themselves by sharing a little of your life, time, and energies with these people who will really appreciate your energies.

You can tutor a child at Amherst High School in Spanish, Chinese, German...You can link up with an inmate in Northampton Jail who hasn't had anyone care about him for a long time. You can help organize Alcoholic Prevention Programs, you can work at old age homes, and you can initiate other community service projects.

You can do something that has nothing to do with the University, and at the same time learn about another side of American culture.

The kinds of things you can do are endless — really up to your own imagination. If you are interested in working with us, and earning up to 3 academic credits at the same time next semester, then we would like to invite you to a meeting at the Student Union Colonial Lounge on Thursday, December 6, 1973, at 7:30 p.m. If you can't make the meeting, contact one of us and we'll be happy to help answer questions.

I've had it with the Nixon administration. Open any newspaper and you can read how half of his cabinet is resigning, how everyday more and more illegal campaign contributions are dug up, or how the high price of food can be directly correlated to the great, wonderful grain sale to the Russians. Our oil exports have gone up and up during his five years in office to the point where the United States now faces an energy crisis of unvelievable proportions. And the fault lies with that schmuck in the White House.

The extent of his corruption is astounding. "Gee, I guess I accidentally erased the tape". Bullshit! It burns my ass to know that this raving maniac is in virtual control of the country, and we the people are essentially powerless to do anything about it.

But I call for everyone not to fall for Nixon's tricks. Don't forget, in spite of all our problems, that "der fuhrer" is responsible, and something is definitely wrong with this country if it doesn't put that S.O.B. in prison where he belongs. I hope that that poor excuse for an ex-V.P. and the Dick both rot there.

To The Editor:

Your article on Friday's front page about the Outward Bounders braving winter was indeed interesting, and it may be true that those 36 individuals spending four weeks in the mountains of Maine may be able to impress a Lap reindeer herdsman, but for me the impression stops in Lapland. There is much to be said for Outward Bound and my intention is not to belittle their program. Indeed, I have to attribute a great deal of my strengths to their Colorado course which I went through several years ago. What I wish to point out, howver, is that there is a way to achieve almost all that Outward Bound has to offer, at far less expense, and it is right here at UMass to boot. I am talking about the Outing Club.

For well over a decade now members of The Outing Club have been undertaking trips and expeditions that easily equal those of Outward Bound. We have sent trips to climb the Cascade peaks of the Northwest, to explore the Grand Canyon of Arizona, spilunk the longest caves of West Virginia and New York, climb the highest peaks in the East both in summer and in winter, canoe the raging rivers of Vermont and New Hampshire in early spring, not to mention hundreds of lesser trips. I would like to see the Collegian staff spend a little time promoting the valuable, uncomercialized enterprises and organizations within the university as well as mentioning the easily glorified antics that Outward Bound has to offer.

The Outing Club has something for everyone at all levels of expertise and experience. And it will not cost them an arm and a leg either. We exist solely for the promotion of outdoors activities within the university and in helping people participate in them. This we feel is as much a part of an education as learning a technical skill or discipline. We are in complete accord with the philosophy of Outward Bound, but that it is only good for certain individuals and in certain situations. Our program is geared to accomodate everyone at minimal cost and maximum convenience. And it allows them to choose their own level of involvement. Your heroic Poor Richard's reporter, Bonnie Asselin, has discovered the essence of what we are about. My hat is off to her.

May I extend an open invitation to all of you on the Collegian staff and the whole university to join us this coming semester for some fun and excitement. Cross-country skiing anyone?

Attorney For Students

On Reaching Majority

A vast majority (pun intended) of undergraduates will receive the rights and responsibilities of formal majority on January 1, 1974. The Legislature (due largely to the initiative of Senator John Olver of Amherst joined by Representative James Collins of Amherst) has enacted the eighteen year old age of majority bill to have effect in the New Year.

The acquisition of those rights associated with the age of majority is usually a leisurely process of accumulation ending on the magic birthday. In recent years the states have recognized the sophistication and independence of eighteen year olds and accordingly reduced the age for voting, drinking and now the "majority."

The significance is largely technical and is almost exclusively legal. Perhaps the most important pitfall to be warned about, is the enforceability of contracts. Persons should always read whatever they sign and be sure they understand and agree with the documents. The solemn act of contract is intended to really bind the parties legally to perform their side of the agreement or else respond in money damages.

Another change that can be expected will be defending oneself in court without parent or lawyer to help. Those choosing to exercise this right will be well-advised to consider carefully the effect of guilty pleas and records which should not be lightly accepted.

On the other hand, not all impediments to absolute freedom should be expected to change. It is not necessarily true that where the age 21 had a particular privilege associated with it that the same will occur at 18 now. The real question is what was the purpose of the rule and the relationship to the age 21? If it was intended to be the exact same thing as "majority" then 21 should equal 18. Where the intention was otherwise there is no assurance that 21 will equal 18. For instance, the argument recently made that the University dormitories used the age 21 for emancipating students on the basis of convenience and not because of majority strikes me as specious. The reason such an argument is being made is purely for fiscal protection. Obviously, if students over 18 were permitted to live off campus at will the resulting closing of dormitories and dining commons would, presumably reduce the energy drain they present. Even the central administration could move from Boston and negotiate a rent that didn't blow the minds of the legislators! But, that's just a "for instance", of course.

I hope that all students over 18 will be wary of newly acquired freedom and use it cautiously. The change is much more becoming responsible for oneself than becoming free. It may be somewhat hard to get used to, but hopefully it will be a Happy New Year.

Another wintry problem that may soon arise is the automobile accident. Icy roads and snowy highways make the first winter storm a matter of crunching concern. There are several things that participants in these crashing confrontations can do which will ultimately benefit them legally and in every other way as much as possible.

If you are in an accident:

First: protect against further injury by warning cars behind by signals, lights, or opening hood or trunks. Station a traffic controller if possible.

Second: See to the needs of any injured person using good first aid (don't move any person who may have a broken limb or back);

Third: Once a status quo of safety has been assured, then summon any assistance required - tow, police, ambulance or whatever.

Fourth: Always make known your name, address, license number etcetera to other drivers involved! Never leave the scene of an accident where property damage has occurred without doing this! If you hit a parked car and no one is around, leave a note and then drive directly to the police station and report the facts. Failure to do this may result in loss of license as well as high fines.

Fifth: Relax, there is no way you can undo the accident. See to the removal of the damaged car and its repair. Then, when all has quieted down, call your own insurance company and tell them what happened.

Sixth: If you have received a citation from the police, you have about one working day to challenge the citation before the clerk of the district court will issue a complaint. If you don't understand what the best course of action may be, do not wait until the last minute to ask a lawyer.

Corona Stabbed In Cell

By DOUG WILLIS
Associated Press Writer

VACAVILLE, Calif. (AP) — Juan Corona, convicted of murdering 25 migrant workers, was stabbed 32 times in an attack in his prison cell, authorities said Sunday.

Corona was listed in satisfactory condition after three hours of surgery that included removal of his left eye.

"Barring complications, there is no longer any threat to his life," said T.L. Clanon, superintendent at the California Medical Facility at Vacaville. He added that, "barring complications, the sight of one eye is preserved."

Corona was found in his unlocked cell in the medium security wing at 10:50 p.m. Saturday and was rushed to the hospital for surgery.

Clanon said four suspects were in custody, but refused to identify them or provide other details.

"We do not know the motive. We have no idea," said Lt. Gordon Steeves, the watch commander.

"Juan Corona is a loner. He is doing his job well. He does not mix. He is working on his appeal." he said.

Prison officials found a small hobby knife with a two-inch razor-like blade near Corona's cell and said it could have been the weapon. Such knives are not prohibited in medium security areas.

Corona, 40, a farm labor contractor, was convicted last January of murdering 25 farm workers and drifters whose hacked bodies were unearthed from shallow graves in northern California in 1971. He was sentenced to 25 consecutive terms but is eligible for parole after seven years.

The prosecution won its conviction on circumstantial evidence, telling the jury of 10 men and two women that a search of Corona's home and garage in Yuba City, Calif., turned up a machete with an 18-inch blade, a meat-cleaver, a double-bladed axe and a wooden club with stains. No explanation of motive developed in the six-month trial.

After his arrest, Corona suffered two heart attacks and was treated at the medical facility here, 50 miles northeast of San Francisco. Following his conviction, he was kept on as part of the work crew and Guthrie said officials thought he was "doing reasonably well" as an inmate.

Corona has repeatedly proclaimed his innocence and had been hoping to win a new trial on grounds that his attorney failed to present a proper defense. No defense witnesses were called.

In an interview last August, he said he was studying English, mathematics and typing for three hours every day so he could get a better job if he is released.

The stabbing of Corona came less than a week after the stabbing death in a Massachusetts prison of Albert DeSalvo, who once claimed he was the Boston Strangler.

DeSalvo was found dead of stab wounds in his cell in Walpole State Prison's hospital section last Monday.

Police Yell For Death Penalty

BOSTON (AP) - About 300 police officers, most from Boston, confronted Gov. Francis W. Sargent outside his office Wednesday, demanding at the top of their lungs that he sign a bill restoring the death penalty.

"I have not yet made up my mind what to do," Sargent told them.

He offered to have members of his staff meet with the officers in Gardner Auditorium. They wanted him there and he said he might show up.

The officers had earlier attended-as did Sargent-the funeral in the Brighton section of John Schroeder, a Boston detective shot to death when he interrupted a holdup last week. Schroeder's brother Walter was similiary killed three years ago.

The bill of officers urged passage for would restore capital punishment for nine sorts of murder, including that of a police officer.

Despite pleas of their leaders, the officers staged one of the loudest demonstrations in the memory of veteran State House newsmen.

Some of the shouted imprecations included "run-runner"- a reference to a sporting goods store Sargent owns in Orleans. Shouts also rang out of, "You automatically start out with 100,000 votes against you"-apparently a reference to the votes of policemen and their families - and "How many of the 10,000 went to Schroeder's funeral"-a reference to the number of signatures on an anti-death penalty petition presented to Sargent last week by Boston University President John Silver.

The Story Behind A Woman Major

DARTMOUTH, N.S. (AP) — Ask Eileen Stubbs about the time she and several companions were thrown out when they tried to crash a service club party at which Xaviera Hollander was speaking.

She'll tell you the story with a smile. But she would rather talk about her city and what she hopes to be able to do for it.

Mrs. Stubbs, the first woman to be elected mayor of this city of 65,000 across the harbor from Halifax, is also the first woman to be elected mayor of any Nova Scotia city.

Of her role as a woman in a responsible position with the city, she said, "I represent a type of freedom."

"We're going to have better-informed aldermen because unless we work as a unit and know what each of us is doing, we'll end up with problems," she said.

"There aren't going to be many decisions made around here without my knowing about them," she added.

Mrs. Stubbs has a dozen years' experience in municipal politics and has raised eight children. She is a grandmother.

Her hair is slightly graying. She dresses smartly.

Mrs. Stubbs doesn't see herself as a woman in a man's job but rather as a person in a job that demands attention. And she intends to do that jobs as well as she can.

One of her first changes was making the position a full-time job.

She'll talk to anyone who has a problem and work to resolve it.

She said, "I want to have a little town-big city here. My door is always open and people who know me can come to see me. Those who don't can come and meet me.

"I know my concept of the office may be a little idealistic, yet there is no reason why it shouldn't work."

Mrs. Stubbs has only two of her eight children at home. The others are married, working or at college.

Rehabilitation

WAYNE, PA.-NURSING HOME FIRE KILLS RESIDENTS - At least six elderly persons died when fire swept through the Caley Nursing and Rehabilitation Center at Wayne, Pa., west of Philadelphia. Others, taken to nearby hospitals, were injured or suffered from shock, officials reported.

Electric Shock Used To Cure Child Molesters

SOMERS, Conn. (AP) — With hypnosis, electric shocks to the groin and slides of nude children and women, doctors at Somers state prison say they have repressed deviant sexual drives in child molesters.

Twice a week for 10 weeks, 12 inmate volunteers lie on a couch as slides of nude children and adult females are flashed on a screen. Every slide of a nude child is accompanied by a painful electric shock to the inmate's groin area. There is no shock when slides of nude women appear.

Dr. Dominic Morino, chief of mental hygiene, said the therapy produces feelings of anxiety whenever the inmate thinks of a child as a sexual object. It also tends to enhance the inmates' desire for normal sexual relationships with adults, he said.

Twelve of the 70 convicted child molesters at Somers have gone through the program, which began six months ago.

Although such behavior modification programs are controversial, state Correction Commissioner John Manson said the alternative is to keep inmates behind bars with little chance of early parole. Child molesters are rarely granted early paroles because they are generally repeaters, Manson said.

Dr. Morino stressed that the inmates volunteer for the treatment. However he expressed "slight fear" that if such experiments prove successful some judges might make them mandatory for convicted offenders.

"These judges could view these programs as a panacea for crime," said Morino.

Altered behavior is sometimes called the "Clockwork Orange Syndrome" after Anthony Burgess's novel in which a British hoodlum was conditioned to vomit whenever he thought about sex or violence.

Manson said he almost abandoned the program when the movie came out because of possible adverse public opinion.

Behavior-changing programs are underway in prisons, drug-treatment centers and mental hospitals throughout the country. Dr. Morino noted that drug addicts were being treated in such a program at St. Elizabeth's hospital in Brighton, Mass.

Morino said Somers has the only program in the country for child molesters. It is funded under the prison's regular medical budget.

Under hypnosis, the inmate listens while a psychologist narrates a terrifying sexual experience about a child in the inmate's own fantasies or from his prison record. Roger Wolfe, who administers the program, said hypnosis creates a phobia about children as sexual objects in the inmate's mind.

Self-Help: The Key To New Drug Program

By JERRY HARKAVY
Associated Press Writer

SEBAGO, Maine (AP) — "Why do people mess with me." the stocky youth shouted.

Over and over, louder and louder, he repeated the words, then trailed off in a gutteral, bone-chilling scream.

Tom sat in an unlighted room with a half dozen other youngsters and revealed his fears of failure, rejection and inability to deal with people. Tom is not his real name.

"There'll always be someone to hurt me," screamed Tom. "The world isn't like the house. People don't give a damn for you."

For some 60 troubled youngsters like Tom, who've been in and out of reform schools, prisons, mental hospitals and drug addiction programs, "the house" — as Elan I is known — is the last hope for a normal life.

"We take the kids who have been in the most trouble, the dregs of the other treatment programs," said Joseph Ricci, a 27-year-old ex-junkie who co-founded Elan in 1971.

Since that time, the privately operated program has achieved an enviable record of rehabilitating youngsters whose emotional problems led them to drugs, alcohol, truancy and crime.

Its administrators claim a success rate of 90 per cent, far above that of comparable programs, public or private.

Why Elan works where other treatment centers fail was summed up by Marty, a 20-year-old from Chicago who completed the program last year and remained as a member of the staff.

"We deal with people as individuals," he said. "It's a self help program in which people change because they want to change, because they don't want to be what they were."

Originally established as a rehabilitation center for young drug users, Elan now provides therapy for adolescents and young adults whose feelings of anger and rebellion find outlets in various forms of antisocial behavior.

The program is housed in a three-story former academy in this summer resort town, which represents a sharp change of environment for most of the urban-oriented "residents."

Tranquilizers or similar medications are taboo at Elan, which relies instead on intensive group and individual therapy sessions to bolster the youngsters' self-esteem and prepare them for "re-entry" — the phase in which they leave the house and try to make it in the outside world.

"Primal scream" sessions, like the one in which Tom unveiled his anxieties, are one of several forms of group encounters used in the program. Another is the "haircut," a harsh verbal dressing-down which the residents give to one of their peers who backslides or fails to perform a required task.

Peer pressure is one of the keystones of the Elan program, as each resident is assigned duties and responsibilities of gradually increasing importance. With greater responsiblities come more privileges, like a lower bunk, instead of an upper, or a visit home.

Ricci, a graduate of New York Daytop drug treatment center, emphasizes that Elan does not believe in shaving heads or making youngsters wear signs. Such techniques, used at other centers, are degrading, he says, and detract from efforts to instill self-respect.

"We don't strip people of their dignity. We don't take away their individuality, and we don't degrade or malign their intelligence," he said.

Ricci acknowledges that the program is geared toward middle class youngsters, whom he describes as "the forgotten majority."

"There's no program in the United States designed to help middle class kids. And 'middle class' isn't entirely determined by how much money you have, but also by your character."

Although the $1,200 a month fee is steep, Ricci claims it's actually lower than the equivalent costs at most state and private institutions.

Pioneer 10 Transmits Pictures

By WILLIAM STOCKTON
AP Science Writer

MOUNTAIN VIEW (AP) — Accelerating steadily in Jupiter's fierce gravitational tug, Pioneer 10 transmitted pictures that revealed a 10,000 mile long atmospheric disturbance likened to a tropical storm or towering thunderhead on earth.

On Sunday afternoon the tiny spacecraft was 1.1 million miles from the planet and its orange, gray and reddish brown clouds, rushing at 32,300 miles per hour towards an historic fly-by Monday evening.

Jupiter began appearing increasingly egg-shaped in pictures Sunday because of pioneer's movement and the nature of the camera system. The planet's shape will become increasingly distorted, but computer techniques can compensate and give a more accurate picture.

The atmospheric disturbance was shown by Pioneer's camera in Jupiter's southern hemisphere. It was a white oval-shaped region in one of the reddish brown concentric bands that girdle the planet more than 500 million miles from earth.

Dr. Tom Gehrels of the University of Arizona said the disturbance might be a towering column of clouds.

On earth, clouds build into great towering thunderheads tens of thousands of feet high. Tropical storms seen from outer space appear on earth as great swirling disturbances in the atmosphere.

Astronomers have surmised for years that Jupiter is racked by 300 m.p.h. winds causing vast disturbances in colorful clouds. They hope that Pioneer 10, because of its proximity, will help them understand if Jupiter has basic atmospheric "cells" or the components of a storm.

Scientists continue to puzzle over Jupiter's unpredictable magnetic envelope, which is different from earth's well-surveyed envelope or magnetosphere.

Scientists had expressed amazement Saturday when the spacecraft instruments measured a dramatic drop in Jupiter's magnetic field and the electrons and protons trapped there. Levels returned to normal later but scientists couldn't explain why.

As Pioneer 10 drew nearer Jupiter, project scientists watched for instrument readings that might permit them to extimate severity of radiation belts believed near the planet. Engineers had feared they might damage or silence completely the 570-pound probe.

Atomic Power Distorted

VANCOUVER (AP) — A forum on nuclear power organized by the provincial government ended in criticism Saturday with participants and spectators saying the debate didn't inform anyone.

Dr. W. Bennett Lewis, a science professor at Queen's University in Kingston, Ont., criticized the forum for putting the emphasis on debate between proponents and opponents of nuclear power rather than on informing people.

"It's the first time I have been faced with professional polemicists — people who make their living going around telling horror stories about nuclear power," Dr. Lewis said.

Some spectators criticized Dan Ford, an economist at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and Dr. John Gofman, a United States physicist and author, two of the panelists opposing nuclear power.

PASADENA, Cal.-FIRST PHOTO OF COMET KOHOUTEK--Hale Observatories released this photograph of the comet Kohoutek taken by a Palomar Telescope while it was 196,230,000 miles from earth. The photo, believed to be the first to show the comet's developing coma and tail, was snapped in a seven-minute exposure by martin McCarthy, a Jesuit priest-astronomer. He is from the Vatican Observatory at Castel Gandolfo visiting here as a guest investigator. Small white dots are stars blured by the long exposure.

Comet Kohoutek: It's Finally Here!

By WARREN E. LEARY
AP Science Writer

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Comet Kohoutek finally has become visible to the naked eye. But you have to get up pretty early in the morning to see it.

Comet watchers all over the world are preparing to brave the early hours and cold weather to glimpse what could be one of the most spectacular sky shows in years.

Scientists once bilped Kohoutek as the "comet of the century," but are pulling back a little in light of the latest scientific data and a fear of "overselling" the public on what it will see.

Scientists at the Smithsonian Astrophysical Observatory here, the clearing house for comet information, say Kohoutek still will be quite a sight in the sky even though some earlier predictions about its size and brightness have been tempered.

Kohoutek became visible without the aid of telescopes or binoculars late last week, appearing the southeast sky about an hour before sunrise.

The comet now looks like a big, tailless star about 20 degrees above the horizon, but it is visible only to those with a clear, smogless, unobstructed view.

Kohoutek will swing around the sun in late December and disappear from sight for a few days. Until that time, it can be seen right before sunrise, but each day a little lower on the horizon. By Dec. 10, it will appear only 10 degrees above the horizon and by Dec. 20, almost on the line between sky and earth.

Scientists warn early morning viewers to take care not to look into the rising sun because the rays can cause permanent eye damage. Observers using telescopes should have added caution because the instrument can focus sunrays into the eye to do damage more quickly.

How you express yourself depends upon your camera.

Today almost everybody is getting into photography. And it's not the snapshot variety. People are doing sports stories, nature stories, portraits—you may even have a friend who's doing photographs through a microscope. Or a telescope.

You also know that everybody has his own idea about which camera is best. That's why it's important for you to know about the Canon F-1. Because it's the system camera that's fast becoming the favorite of professionals. And the new status symbol among photography enthusiasts.

The whole F-1 system includes over 40 lenses and 200 accessories. It's capable of doing virtually everything in photography. So whatever idea you have for a picture, the F-1 has the equipment to make sure you get it.

Because it was conceived from the beginning as a system, it works as a system. All the elements are quickly and easily interchangeable. No matter which lens or accessory you use with the F-1 body you won't have the feeling that something has been "tacked on."

What's more the F-1 is comfortable to handle. Years of research went into the design of the F-1 body and placement of controls so your fingers fall naturally into place. You'll appreciate this comfort when you're on assignment. It's also an important thing to keep in mind if you're investing in a camera you plan to keep a long time.

Canon has been in the optics industry over 37 years. We make microscope equipment, amateur and professional movie cameras and TV lenses. It's this experience that helps make our still cameras the best selling cameras in Japan. In America, it's just a matter of time.

See your dealer for more information. He'll also show you Canon's other SLR cameras, like the FTb and TLb. Both of which offer accurate metering, easy film loading, a wide range of lenses and the same standard of engineering that goes into the F-1.

Romania Seeks U.S. Business

By NICK LUDINGTON
Associated Press Writer

BUCHAREST, Romania (AP) — Romania's unorthodox leader says that during his visit to the United States this week he will ask American capitalists to come to his country and set up joint business ventures with the Communists.

"We are interested in realizing such joint companies with firms in the United States," President Nicolae Ceausescu said in an interview. "Several projects are in an advanced stage. They might be finalized during my visit to the United States."

Romania recently passed a law allowing foreign companies to own up to 49 per cent of joint ventures. So far, one American company, Control Data, has signed up to participate in the construction, beginning next month, of a computer software plant.

Romania is using joint ownership to gain American technology and substitute foreign investment for foreign credits. Under Ceausescu, the country has embarked on a near-frantic industrialization campaign.

Romania's industry is growing more than 12 per cent a year and the 1974 plan calls for industrial production to grow by 16.7 per cent.

Ceausescu, 55, will meet businessmen in Washington, Cleveland, Houston, New Orleans and Hartford. The U.S. and Romanian chambers of commerce are expected to sign a cooperation agreement during the visit, which begins Tuesday with talks with President Nixon.

He said one of his main targets in the talks with Nixon will be most-favored-nation status. That would give Romania the same advantages, such as lower tariffs, as the United States' best trading partners.

Ceausescu was asked if he is worried about visiting Nixon at a time when the U.S. President is troubled by the Watergate scandals.

"Forget that question," he snapped. "It is Romania's policy never to interfere in internal affairs of other nations."

Ceausescu is known to admire Nixon's foreign policy achievements. This will be his third visit with Nixon since 1969.

Russian Consumers Want "Real" Jeans

By FRANK CREPAU
Assocatied Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) - Stirred by repeated promises of more consumer goods, Russians are starting to ask why they can't have things like blue jeans.

The few pairs of Western blue jeans that appear in the Soviet Union are coveted items.

Some youths try to buy them illegally from tourists on the streets of Leningrad or Moscow. The reported black market price for a pair of genuine jeans is 100 rubles - the equivalent of $134 at the official exchange rate. They sell for around $17 in New York.

Levi Strauss produced the original about 120 years ago in the California gold camps, but the Soviet Union is still trying to close the jeans gap.

"Why is it so difficult to buy the needed things?" asked V. Morozov of Chelyabinsk who said he has been trying to buy a pair of jeans for years.

He wrote to Nedelya, the weekly magazine of the government newspaper Izvestia, to say he bought an imported pair four years ago but his son has worn them out and wants new ones.

Morozov said Soviet substitutes are no good and his son won't wear them.

The Marx Brothers in LOVE HAPPY (1949)

One of the rarely seen Marx madcaps returns. Of all the Marx films, this one is Harpo's own virtuoso creation. Harpo wrote the story himself in his fifties and still performed delightfully as the "enfant terrible". Groucho, in a deerstalker, goes sherlocking after M.M.

By SYDNEY OMARR

Add to Astrology Hall of Fame: Edward A. Wagner, Carl Payne Tobey, Manly Palmer Hall, Louis De Wohl, Blanca Holmes, Cedric Lemont and Nella Webb. The list is long and I will, from time to time, continue to add to it. One name I do not want to overlook is John J. O'Neill, a Pulitzer Prize-winning science editor who wrote me an historic letter on astrology, following one of my debates with astronomer Roy K. Marshall, who had implied that O'Neill really did not accept astrology. O'Neill verified my claim and went on to state that, "Astrology is one of the most important fields for scientific research today..."

ARIES (March 21-April 19): If flexible, you could take advantage of money opportunity. Accent is on adding to personal possessions. Sagittarius, Gemini persons could play key roles. Look beyond the immediate. Invest in what you feel is valid.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Cycle high; move ahead by taking initiative. Be independent in thought, action. Wear bright colors. Now is time to draw attention to yourself. Shake off fear, doubts. Review fundamentals. You will make valuable contact.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): One who seems aloof will attempt to open area of communication. Be receptive without revealing all you know. Discretion now can be a valuable ally. Virgo person is likely to be in picture. Be ready for significant change of pace.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Accent is on friends, desires, income derived from business, profession. You may be making decision regarding home, domestic situation. Gifts and diet sprees seem to be highlighted. Taurus, Libra persons figure prominently.

LEO (July 23-aug. 22): You may be at cross-purposes with yourself. Know it and re-examine motives, goals. Emphasis is on responsibility, achievement and aspirations. Professional superior is stubborn. But you won't win by arguing. Pisces may be in picture.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Good lunar aspect coincides now with journeys, correspondence, spiritual evaluation. You feel aware. You know what is expected. You assume responsibility. You also may be investing in potential rather than the immediate.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): If you delve beneath surface, you may find that you are willing to give up what you once thought was precious. You grasp subtle truth about one close to you — and about yourself. Pull reins where money is flowing nonstop.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Emphasis is on public relations, how you present yourself, your product, your dream. Vitality returns. What seemed lost can be recovered. Permit yourself the vision of a child. See new. See in untrammeled way. See in your own way. Be you!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Hunch illuminates puzzle. You see way out. You teach and learn. There is productive exchange. Aquarius may play important role. Work, health, essentials and routine — these are featured. Don't ask for miracle, but expect one.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Favorable lunar aspect coincides now with love, creativity, relations with young persons. You are able to express in way that increases popularity. You reach more people. You communicate in meaningful manner.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Concentrate on the basics. Build on solid foundation. You will be opposed — and appreciated. You receive proper credit along with lively criticism. Leo and Scorpio persons play roles. Older family member has definite say.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Accent in on the close range, the quick concept, the ideas as opposed to working philosophy. You tend now to be impulsive, impatient and quick to judge. Despite premature actions, you probably will come out smelling like a rose.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have a sense of drama, an impressive voice, a way of winning your way with opposite sex. You will do more traveling in 1974, and May probably will be your outstanding month. You are frank, truthful, persuasive. You enjoy teaching. You are intrigued with politics, law and theater.

Christmas At B'town

Christmas will come a little bit early this year for thirty residents of the Belchertown State School when the Belchertown volunteers of UMass hold their annual Christmas Party this Saturday at the State School. Entertainment will be provided by two folksingers. There will be games, dancing and sing-a-longs. Santa Claus has assured the Volunteers that he will arrive in Belchertown despite the energy crisis.

Some refreshments will be provided by the Volunteers, but UMass students are asked to bring cake, cookies and other baked goods. A tree trimming will be held and UMass students are asked to bring ornaments, preferably homeade. Since the residents will be trimming the tree, the more ornaments the better!

The bus to take UMass students to Belchertown will leave at 12:45 p.m., from Whitmore building at Haigis Mall. Not only is this THE social event of the season, it is the last social event of the season for the Belchertown Volunteers until February 1974. Anyone is welcome and thos volunteers who have not been able to make a steady commitment to the program are urged to make this last effort.

As for everyone else, pray for snow and we'll see you there. Any questions? Call Ken at 253-7461 or Mary Jo at 546-6953.

Foreign Students Offer Services

The Foreign Student Volunteer Program (FSVP), a part-time student volunteer program coordinated by the Center For OUTREACH Programs and the Foreign Student Office under the Office of International Programs, is currently underway.

FSVP, the first of its kind in the nation involving foreign students as paraprofessionals in Community Action Programs, was started in the summer of 1973 by the Foreign Student Office. Under the direction of Stephen Rathmill and John Spiegel, 4 volunteers were placed in the Spanish-American Center, the Alcoholic Prevention Program, the Northampton Jail, and the Hampshire Neighborhood Center. According to Abel Ponce de Leon, a volunteer working at the jail, "It was a good project which gave me a chance to learn about another part of America that I had not known before."

FSVP, supported by a grant from the National Association to Foreign Student Affairs, will be offered this semester to students during the January and Spring terms. There will be an orientation session in January and then, after defining a volunteer project, students will volunteer from 5-10 hours a week for the remainder of the semester.

Students participating in FSVP will earn 3 credits from the School of Education, and will be reimbursed for any travel costs. Students will also participate in a series of cross-cultural workshops.

Any foreign student at the University is eligible to apply. A meeting will be held tonight at the Student Union Colonial Lounge at 7:30. Student volunteers will explain the options. If you cannot make this meeting, call the FSVP Office at 545-2021 or the Foreign Student Office at 545-2843.

"Freiburg Abend"

All graduate and undergraduate students interested in learning more about the Freiburg Program, 1974-75 are invited to a "Freiburg Abend", December 10 at 8:00 p.m. in the sixth floor lounge, Herter Hall.

There will be slides and movies. Former students and faculty will answer questions about the program and about life in Freiburg. Light refreshments will be served.

Lift Ev'ry Voice And Sing, Brother

Tomorrow at 8:15 p.m., in Bowker Auditorium will be the scene of a concert of Afro-American Vocal music by the Voices of New Africa House, a choir of over 50 voices representing the five colleges in the Pioneer Valley.

Members of the choir, drawn from the five colleges are under the direction of Horace Clarence Boyer of UMass, a specialist in Afro-American Vocal music.

Selections on the program will range from early Negro Spirituals and Baptist Lining Hymns to popular gospel songs of today. Included will be several currently popular soul songs, and the original arrangement of "Lift Ev'ry Voice And Sing" widely known as the Negro National Anthem.

The choir will be accompanied by Avery Sharpe on bass guitar and John Betsch on drums.

Cepeda ODH

MANCHESTER, N.H. (AP) - Orlando Cepeda of the Boston Red Sox has been named the first Outstanding Designated Hitter by a panel selected by Manchester newspaper publisher William Loeb.

Loeb established the award this year at the suggestion of Manchester Union Leader executive sports editor Joe Barnea.

Cepeda, 36, beat out two other American League designated hitters, Tony Oliva of the Minnesota Twins and Tommy Davis of the Baltimore Orioles in ballotting by the seven-man panel.

Cepeda received four votes, Oliva two and Davis one.

Cepeda, who was released by the Oakland Athletics in November 1972 and signed by Boston as a free agent last January, batted .289 in 142 games during the 1973 season. He hit 20 home runs and drove in 86. He had a total of 159 hits for the season.

Oliva batted .289, belted 16 homers and drove in 91. Davis batted .293, with seven homeruns and 83 rbi's.

Other candidates for the Outstanding Designated Hitter award were Alex Johnson of Texas Rangers, Deron Johnson of the Oakland A's and Frank Robinson of the California Angels.

Celts Beat NY Again

BOSTON (AP) - John Havlicek sparked the Celtics to an 11-point lead at half time and the Atlantic Division leading team ran away to a 119-97 National Basketball Association victory Wednesday night over the struggling New York Knicks.

The victory, the Celtics 14th in the last 15 games, extended their division lead to 6½ games over the Knicks, who suffered the absence of their injured captain and center, Willis Reed.

Havlicek scored 14 of his 25 points in the first half as the Celtics moved to a 52-41 half time lead. The Knicks missed 15 of 21 tries from the floor in the second quarter.

New York managed to close the gap to four points, 67-63, late in the third period, on the hot shooting of Phil Jackson and Bill Bradley, but Dave Cowens and Paul Silas teamed to rattle off 10 points for a 79-69 Celtics lead at the end of three.

Boston broke it midway through the finale, running 13 straight points on the tiring Knicks for an insurmountable 98-79 lead with five minutes to go.

Kilmer In Hospital

WASHINGTON (AP) — Bill Kilmer was to remain in the hospital another night though the Washington quarterback's abdominal cramps have subsided, the Redskins said Wednesday.

A team spokesman said Kilmer, who entered Arlington, Va., Hospital at 2 a.m. Tuesday, was feeling much better.

After he was admitted to the hospital "for observation and tests," Dr. P.M. Palumbo, team physician, said it was hoped Kilmer would be released "in 24 to 48 hours."

Letters To The Sports Editor

Women Unsatisfied

To The Sports Editor:

In reaction to your sports fold out of last week in which you pictured active people in a circle on the front page and the only women were gymnasts — granted we have a great women's gymnastic team but there are also hundreds of women involved in other sports at this University. In case the Collegian staff wasn't aware of this, because certainly you give insufficient coverage to women's athletic events, there is an entire women's physical education department here and we do a lot more than splits. You owe an apology to the women's community.

Robin Rich
Celia Murphy
Mary Distilliaris
Anne Burnett
Marcia McConnell

Dear reationaries,

In defense of the cover of the special, I'm only going to say that Dave Vandewater did an excellent job representing the winter sports. If you looked a little closer, you'd notice that some men's sports were not pictured either.

As for your remark about the "insufficient coverage" of women's athletic events, I'll only refer you to the inside contents of the Special. This is the first time that all of the women's teams have had an article in a sports special.

Women's athletics are growing on this campus and so is our coverage of their teams. It's going to take time for us to give them sufficient coverage — but we are trying. Frankly, I'm tired of bitch letters like yours. Remember, this is YOUR newspaper, too. So, get off my ass and get your asses down here if you want to see better coverage.

Sincerely,
Stephen Crowe
Sports Editor

Slanderous Remarks?

Sports Editor,

In reference to your column on November 29 entitled "Pick A Sport", I wish to comment on your slanderous remark toward UMass wrestlers and followers of that sport.

When I first glanced at your article about winter sports, I was pleasantly surprised to see that the wrestling team was mentioned by a Daily Collegian Sportswriter other than John Böck. However, upon closer scrutiny, I noticed how, even though you state that collegiate wrestling is not at all like the All-Star Wrestling we've seen on T.V., you indirectly refer to the participants on the UMass team as "freaks" and their fans as "the curious" or "freak freaks".

I am interested in what caused you to characterize the defending New England Champion Wrestling team as such. Are you a "jock, fine arts freak, freak freak, or Mom and Dad"?

Is the world's oldest sport one in which only freaks engage and is viewed by "the curious"? I invite Steve Crowe and the rest of the University community to view a sport that allows individuals of equal weight to compete one-on-one until one man's prowess prevails. Participants in wrestling are not freaks, but normal people with a dedication to a sport that, perhaps, demands more from the athlete than any other sport at UMass. Therefore, I feel that the team deserves encouragement and support from the entire University community.

Carl Dambman

Dear Carl,

I never referred to the wrestlers as "freaks" in my column. If I did, as you suggest, refer to them as freaks indirectly, it was not done intentionally. I haven't yet been to a match at UMass but I'm very curious to see the team this year.

Pats Acquire Former Trojan

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) - Running back Claxton Welch of the New England Patriots of the National Football League has been placed on the injured list because of a foot problem and will be out for the remainder of the season, a club spokesman said Wednesday.

Replacing Welch on the active roster will be rookie wide receiver Edesel Garrison, coming to the Patriots as a free agent. He was a fifth round draft choice of the Houston Oilers this year and traded to the Los Angeles Rams during the pre-season. He was waived by the Rams during the early regular season.

Garrison played college football at the University of Southern California Trojans and was on USC's championship team last season.

Ram Coach Had Faith

By RON ROACH

LONG BEACH, Calf. (AP) - The Los Angeles Rams may be the surprise of the National Football League but they didn't shock their rookie head coach.

Charles Robert "Chuck" Knox, 41-year-old former assistant coach for Detroit and the New York Jets, took a Los Angeles team that finished 6-7-1 last year and has forged a 10-2 mark, clinching the National Conference Western Division title and a playoff berth.

And those two defeats were by a total of three points to the Vikings, 10-9, at Minnesota and the Falcons, 15-13, at Atlanta.

Knox promised owner Carroll Rosenbloom a winning team when he was hired to replace Tommy Prothro last Jan. 24.

"Our approach was always the same," said Knox, "one game at a time.

"I always had a great deal of faith in the team. I knew we had great leaders in guys like Joe Scibelli, Merlin Olsen and Charlie Cowan.

A key newcomer, ex-San Diego quarterback John Hadl, said, "He does nothing revolutionary. We're just so well prepared we're ready for anything."

Through concentration, Knox's team has cut penalties to an average of less than four per game. The club's depth has not been tested by a rash of injuries.

The Rams are being compared to the Miami team of 1972, and it's not an unfair comparison as Los Angeles can break Miami's season rushing record of 2,960 yards by averaging 243 in their last two games.

"We run the football a lot, which Miami does, and our emphasis also is on mistake-free football," said Knox.

"We wanted to become a physical team. We've outhit every team we've played," said Knox.

He said his was not a unique boast that he would produce a winner for Rosenbloom.

"Every coach feels he can win. In 20 years of coaching, 10 in the NFL, I've had good head coaches. I've learned from Blanton Collier, Weeb Ewbank and Joe Schmidt. I've learned from every assistant coach I've worked with and from fine players. Things rub off on you."

Women's Gymnastics On Display Saturday

By CANDY GROSS

This Saturday, December 8th at 7:30 p.m., the Women's Gymnastics Team will give a preview of what's to come for the 1974 season. The locally televised exhibition at Montachusett-Regional Vocational School on the Westminster-Fitchburg line will serve a three-fold purpose according to Coach Virginia Evans.

"We want to see how the routines of past team members are progressing and how the newcomers will react to a crowd while doing complete routines. There is also the fact that the money received for the performance will help relieve the strain on an already overextended athletic budget. This money willbe used to defray the cost of our participation in the Nationals in California, as we have every expectation of the team qualifying. Finally, exhibitions of this caliber contribute to the continual promotion of high level women's gymnastics in Massachusetts."

The exhibition will consist of the four main events in women's gymnastics, floor exercise, balance beam, vaulting, and uneven bars, with at least four full routines done on each. The show will open with all women who compete on floor doing some novelty precision tumbling and high level tumbling passes. Ann Vexler, Gail Hannan, Alicia Goode, and newcomer Diane Cantwell will then do their full routines with music.

On balance beam, the four routines will display various qualities. Diane Cantwell will be trying numerous superior moves including aerial front walkover and front and back handsprings. Ann Vexler will be combining some new tumbling tricks with her high leaps and Thanne Poth will exhibit some stylish dance with unique high and low transitions. Jodi Hitt will be given the opportunity to show her high degree of flexibility and flowing dance which has been aided through her work with the University Dance Group at UMass. There's also the possibility that either Jill King or Marion Kulick will perform on the beam.

A continual series of rapid basic vaulting will begin this next part of the program. Various competitive vaults will then be executed by Gail Hannan, Marion Kulick, Thanne Poth, and Diane Cantwell.

The final event of the evening, uneven bars, will start with the new mounts, dismounts, and inside combinations the women expect to put into their competitive routines. Betsy East, Heidi Armstrong, Gail Hannan, and Gail McCarthy will then put it all together and do their full routines. Freshman Carol Rogers may also be contributing to this event.

Although this exhibition will display quality gymnastics, it still won't show all UMass has to offer as Margie Combs and Linda Nelligan will give only limited performances due to earlier injuries. Also, Jeanine Burger, who's still recovering from a wrist operation this fall, will be missing from the line-up. In addition to the UMass Team, members of the Fitchburg-Leominster YMCA Advanced Gymnastics Team will do some vaulting and several beam and bar routines.

Minor League Rules

HOUSTON (AP) - The National Association of Professional Baseball Leagues-commonly known as the minor leagues-extended the contract Wednesday of President Henry J. Peters through 1980 at the group's meeting in conjunction with the major league baseball winter meetings.

Peters became president of the minors in Phoenix in 1971.

In other action, the association approved a resolution that would allow pro baseball teams to sign intercollegiate players between their sophomore-junior and junior-senior years.

The resolution said college coaches would like the rule because the fringe high school player would enroll in college rather than sign pro contracts.

The association voted down resolutions that would have:

-Set 25-man rosters for minor league teams instead of the current 21-player limit.

-Deisgnate each minor league team responsible for the travel expenses of its field manager rather than the team's major league affiliate.

-Require minor league teams to receive approval from its major league affiliates on opening date and duration of season and any legislation pertaining to the classification of players.

Varsity M Fall Capts Announced

By BILL BALLOU

The fall sports made their last gasp yesterday at the Varsity M Club luncheon and with their final breath announced who'll be the soccer and football captains.

Football coach Dick MacPherson introduced seniors Ed McAleney and Dennis Kiernan, who'll lead next year's football squad, while soccer coach Al Rufe brought along the new soccer captains, Jim Vollinger and Carl Vercollone.

MacPherson called Kiernan "a great, dedicated football player" and said he thought Kiernan was "the best linebacker in New England."

McAleney, MacPherson said, "has been everything we thought he'd be when he came here and more."

Both Kiernan and McAleney expressed their gratitude for being so honored, and Kiernan promised that "nothing like what happened over Thanksgiving is ever going to happen again."

Rufe introduced Vollinger and Vercollone, calling them both "fine soccer players and team men."

Each praised Rufe for doing a good job under tough circumstances. Vercollone noted that "it'll be unusual next year to come back and have someone you know coaching." Soccer's had three different coaches in the last three seasons.

MacPherson, in reviewing the past season, said "People tell me never to admit it if I think I do a bad job. Well, I feel I didn't do a good job and don't think the players did."

Also, in response to a question about future use of freshmen, he replied, "Yes, we plan to use freshmen from now on. Looking at the overall situation, it appears that freshmen have played some good football and helped their teams, and they seem to be staying in school. It looks like those who advocated their use were right, and my position was wrong."

MacPherson also went over next year's schedule, which includes Dartmouth and Colgate as new teams to be played and drops Harvard and Rutgers.

The luncheon was held for the first time at Chequers, moving off-campus from the Newman Center. One of the main reasons behind the move were the hefty amounts of money being lost by people who got tickets while parking at the Newman Center.

Swimmers Lose Again

By JOE MARTINS

The UMass swimming team suffered its second defeat of the new season at the hands of Wesleyan, by a tally of 63-50. It was more respectable than the 81-30 beating they took from Maine last Saturday. However, this time, the team had its divers who accounted for 2 first places and a total of 12 out of a possible 18 points.

Taking 7 out of a possible 13 places is indeed respectable — even enough for a win. But the team's real weaknesses were shown in such events as the 200 yard freestyle, individual medley, and backstroke. They could only muster up a total of 3 points in all these events — a sad indication of depth.

Freshman Dave Boucher brightened up the loss by continuing his winning ways and breaking the 200 yard breaststroke record and being clocked at 2:25.5.

The UMass freestyle relay team blazed through the 400 yds. at a time of 3:36.7 and are undefeated so far this season.

Yesterday's double winners for the Aquamen were Dave Crooker (another freshmen) and Jeff Crause. Crooker breezed through the 500 yard freestyle, and fought out Wesleyan's Coker by winning the 100 yd. freestyle. Jeff Crause was a picture of concentration as he came out on top of both diving events. Another winner was Dick Blaisdell in the 50 yard freestyle sprint at a time of 23.6.

As for the two losses thus far this season, Coach Bay Melamed explained that the team had lost "too many kids" from last season, and is short on good butterflyers and sprinters.

With an air of confidence he added that "we will have to do with what we have."

Coach Bay is new, and he admits that he doesn't know who's who in New England swimming circles; but after Maine and Wesleyan explained "we're finding out."

AROUND THE POOL — Next home meet for the Aquamen is Tuesday Dec. 11 at 7:30 p.m. — Boyden Pool.

Jim Lynch puts the Minutemen up 2-0 as he puts the puck over Mike Capone's prostrate form in first period action at Orr Rink. For the Minutemen, it was a complete reversal of form from one week ago against Salem State. The icemen checked closer and hit harder than they had in their first two games and won with a 100% team effort.

Pucksters Pound Ephmen, 5-1

By DAVE EIBEL

The UMass Minutemen put the Seven Day Ponds Beauty Plan to work and the result was a five to one victory for Jack Canniffs icemen over the Williams College Ephmen. Skating and good defensive play, which were not part of the UMass repertoire a week ago, were injected into the attack with earthshaking results.

Team Captain Chickie Rheault manned the nets and seemed to keep the Minutemen calm with his confident goaltending. Of the thirty-nine shots that Rheault faced, only one by Ed Spencer got by him and on that one he couldn't be faulted. Spencer picked up a loose puck in the slot and caromed a wrist shot off the right post behind the UMass goalie at 9:55 of period number two. But the Ephmen could not repeat on Spencer's effort even when they enjoyed a two-man advantage during the third period while Bill Mintiens and Tim Ryan were in the sinbin.

Except for an early flurry by the Ephmen, the Minutemen held sway throughout a first period in which they outshot Williams by 16-13. The Minutemen played like men possessed, and went after the puck like a pack of hounds after the fox. Their efforts were rewarded at 6:10 when Mark Sullivan tipped in a goalmouth pass by center Kevin Conners after the freshman had carried the puck all the way up ice. With the teams playing five-on-five, Jim Lynch made it 2-0 UMass, when he picked up Bill Mintiens pass just past the Williams blueline and deposited the puck behind a helpless Mike Capone in the Williams goal. At 14:24, with the Minutemen enjoying a 4-3 advantage, Lynchie potted his second in a row when he tipped in a Bill Mintiens slapshot from the point.

The second period saw Williams unsettle the Minutemen with some good body checking of their own and it forced the Minutemen into some sloppy clearing early in the period which led to Spencer's score. Just prior to the lone Williams' marker, Rheault made a scintillating stop off Tom Deveaux when he broke in on a two-on-nothing with Dan Yeadon.

The Minutemen regained their composure soon after, and made it four to one at 14:51 with Williams' behomoth left-winger Jim Harkins was in the box for tripping. Jim Lyons did all the work on the play, deking two enemy Billy Harris who slid it in for his second marker of the young season.

Only twenty seconds after the third period began, Nimbo Nims counted his first goal of the schedule and the third UMass powerplay goal, when he potted a Jim Lyons rebound on a play in which Capone was injured and replaced for the remainder of the game by soph Paul Nelson. Even though Williams had three powerplay opportunities in the final stanza, great UMass penalty killing and excessive Ephmen passing caused Williams to come out empty handed.

Zambonies — Rheault made an unbelievable stop in the third with the Minutemen two men short...a deflected shot was about to fall over the line when he swiped it with the fat part of his stick over the crossbar...Bill Mintiens was a standout as he took a regular shift in place of injured Dave Allesandroni...Freshmen, in the words of Coach Canniff "played a helluva game"...Refusing to be over-confident after the win Canniff simply said that the team was "coming around."...Tim Ryan picked up three penalties in his first varsity start and was obviously overpressing...the momentarily-revived Minutemen face Norwich on Friday night in Vermont....

Hoopsters Trounce St. Anselm's By 40

By EARLE BARROLL

MANCHESTER, N.H. — UMass ended, finally, its four-year follies with a major liability on its schedule, St. Anselm's last night, 87-47 and now the Hawks can settle back in their own league with New Hampshire College.

In the process Jack Leaman equalled the life-time win mark of 119 (2-0 so far this season) held by Harold "Kid" Gore, 1916-32, in a scintillating second-half avalanche that left St. A's a shattered, disarrayed bunch. Not to mention the equal of some of Gore's ancient victims.

"I think once we got in front of them," said Leaman, "they just fell apart." Translated: it was a matter of the mind and the body giving the total athlete the hint. "But we really didn't play that well either in the first half," added the understayed Leaman, "which allowed the Hawks the comfort of being in a ball game they should not have been in."

The Minutemen went through a twenty minute first half stretch that would not have left them on the court with Harvard a few days back. "We are still a young team," explained Leaman, "and it will take us time to learn to play as a team but in the first half they just disappointed me."

For you statistics freaks, check these margins of flux: 10-2, 10-11, 18-11, 22-18, 36-25, at the half. And all that Leaman told his cagers in the locker room was "go out there and have some fun."

Fun, of course, at St. A's expense. The appearance was a complete reversal. And a devastating fast break that began with the board work of John Murphy, Al Skinner and Greg Duatre, culminated in a flurry of layups and short poppers tore the fires out of anything that resembled basketball at St. A's.

In fact the above mentioned left their coach in dire straits trying to keep the score within reason. "What could I do?" said Leaman. "I took my first team out with over eight minutes to play." And then why not? The second five proceeded to coup de grace as efficiently as the starters.

"I was really pleased with the play of Murphy," said Leaman of his big center who demolished the hero of this motley crowd, the limbersome (6'7, 220) center, Ed Shannon. "And Rick Pitino did a real good job of controlling the floor show."

In the end St. A's resorted to a Dwight Lamar air show (crowd pleasers, but not good basketball) that featured 30 to 40 footers. Of every bunch of ten, two somehow went in and the other eight missed by six feet or more. John McMenanin took the most shots, scored the most (20) and has a sore wrist for it.

And next year Jack Leaman's crew can rid themselves of St. A's ad infinitum and try it again in the hills of West Virginia.

Trembling Walls

Joshua blew his trumpet and the walls of Jericho came tumbling down; Delilah cut Samson's hair off and the hero lost his strength; Eve ate an apple and got kicked out of the Garden of Eden...And now? And now the women want athletic scholarships.

Sure, they're blowing their horns. Up until now they've been refused athletic scholarships, both by UMass and by their guiding organization, the AIAW. But then the AIAW changed the ruling and now women can receive financial aid for participating in athletics. There goes the apple.

The AIAW decided to leave it up to the individual schools to determine how the money will be distributed. They can either give it out to women on a "need only" basis or they can award on athletic acheivement. So if they wanted to keep a Kathy Lawson or an Anne Vexler at the University, they could whip a little aid on them.

But the UMass women coaches seem to favor the need basis policy. That's a big plus in their favor. They say they will only offer the girl a scholarship once she enrolls at the University. They won't go out and recruit and wave big dollar signs in their faces. That's good too.

But where are they going to get the money from? Oh my God — not from the sacred Barber scholarship fund? That's where the men's coaches go to help entice their big studs to play here.

So far the Barber fund has been a men's club, and only the men have been allowed to use the facilities. But in this day of co-ed bathrooms, nothing is sacred any more.

This is what the women are aiming for. They'll take their profits from basketball games gymnastics and swimming meet gate receipts and deposit the money in the pot. Then they'll demand a joint savings account with the men's department.

There goes Samson's hair.

And some of the coaches, like Al Rufe (soccer) and Ken O'Brien (track) have little or no hair to sacrifice.

There are a lot of problems that come along with scholarships. Some schools have declared that they will not compete with any schools that have women on athletic scholarships. Mt. Holyoke is one, and Smith College will probably also adopt this policy. There — you automatically have scheduling problems.

Who will get the scholarships? Sure, they say now that it will probably be on need basis only — But that's what the Presidents of the Yankee Conference have strongly recommended for the men. Somehow, it doesn't work. Al Skinner's here on a free ride and his parents can afford to buy him a brand new car.

How long would the women last before they, too, fall into this rut? How long would it be before coaches start competing with other schools for the top high school players? And how long would it be before they offer the "blue chippers" money before they even get here?

To answer that last question — it's already happened. Women's athletics are not the lily white virgins program most of us thought they were. Two women on the UMass gymnastics team were promised scholarships before they came here...and they received a full ride for their first year. (Then both were dropped.)

Anne Vexler's scholarship came out of the Barber fund (before anyone knew it was forbidden by the AIAW); Margie Combs' deal was done on the sly. Ms. Combs thought she was getting aid from the school, but as it turned out her coach was taking her bill and having it paid on the side. She never knew who her anonymous sponsor was.

I don't know — The designers of the new scholarship policy, composed of coaches and students, can see the evils that haunt the men's system. And now they have that gymnastics horror to also consider when they make up their policy.

They don't want to be like the men — they want to be entirely different. But unless they plan it out thoroughly the walls are going to start to shake.

Undermanned Track Team Slips At URI

By SCOTT HAYES

There's a saying that goes something like "you can't win them all." For the UMass Indoor Track team, the adage holds true, expecially when it has had to spot the opposition nine points in each of the first two meats.

As a result of inadequate practice facilities and the need to cut the squad to thirty members for away meets, UMass hasn't brought its pole vaulters to the meets. The result has been an automatic nine points for the opponents, and now instead of a perfect record, the Minutemen are 1-1.

The story in yesterday's meet with Rhode Island, which UMass lost 64-54, was URI's big edge in first place finishes. The Rams captured nine firsts to only three for UMass.

Bob Adamson was a double winner in the meet. The standout jumper took first in the long and triple jumps and second in the dash. Adamson captured top spot in the long jump with a jump of 22'6 1/2''. That wasn't all for the elder of the Adamson brothers, however, and he won the triple jump with a distance of 45'1 1/4''.

The only other winner was Marshall Pendleton. Pendleton led a sweep of the 50-yard dash, with Bob Adamson and Ken Adamson right behind him. Pendleton and Bob Adamson were clocked in 5.5 seconds.

The Rams picked up another quick nine points with a sweep of the 35-pound weight throw.

For UMass Ron Harris was able to garner second in the high jump, while the Adamson brothers took first and third respectively in the long jump.

Other top performers for UMass included Curt Stegerwald, Jim Hennessey, Chris Farmer and John McGrail. Stegerwald and Hennessey finished second and third in the hurdles, and Farmer placed second in the mile with a fine time of 4:19.2. McGrail, also competing in his first track meet at UMass, ran a 9:13.2 in the two-mile, good for second.

Scott Herman and Tom Lonergan wound up second and third in the shot put. Herman threw the shot 45'9 1/2'', while Lonergan's throw of 44'11'' gave him third.

The two relay teams won, but at that point in the meet, the outcome was academic. With the score 64-44, URI had the meet wrapped up, but both relay teams ran for pride and gave UMass ten points.

Members of the winning mile relay team were Tom Beland, John McClellelan, Larry Whitfield, and Francis O'Keefe. The winning combination in the two-mile relay included Chris Farmer, Jim Hunt, Weeden Wetmore and Ted Boussiere. Time for the mile relay was 3:30.6 and the winning time for the two-mile relay was 7:56.8.

Tom Grundy set a new school record in winning the two-mile. Grundy was timed at 9:05.5, breaking the old record held by Bob Black. Black ran a 9:09.2 way back in 1949.

Simon Says:

No rationing before March 1

by Jim Luther
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Nixon administration will not ration gasoline before March 1, federal energy director William E. Simon said Thursday.

In testimony before the Senate Government Operations Committee, Simon indicated the start of a rationing program might take even longer, once any decision to ration is made.

That decision will be made this month, Simon said.

Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., the Senate's most influential policymaker on energy matters, told Simon the nation is wasting one million barrels of oil each day that the rationing decision is delayed.

It would be up to Simon to administer any rationing program, and he said he does not look forward to the prospect.

He and Roy L. Ash, director of the Office of Management and Budget, testified before the committee on a bill to create a Federal Energy Administration to oversee the government's fuel production, conservation, allocation and rationing programs for the next two years.

Simon heads the interim energy office which President Nixon created by executive order.

The Nixon administration is weighing various methods of gasoline rationing, but Simon said he wants to see how the public is responding to voluntary conservation programs, such as lowering home thermostats and reducing driving, before a rationing decision is made.

Under one type of rationing being considered, a motorist or family would be entitled to a basic allotment of gasoline each week; any purchase above that amount would be subject to a heavy surtax of 30 or 40 cents a gallon.

In another energy development, Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger said he did not want to speculate whether recent discussions with Arab officials mean any change in the Arabs' oil embargo policy.

"We have not engaged in public discussions as to the methods of how the oil embargo might be mitigated," Kissinger said at a news conference.

The House Commerce Committee continued work Thursday on a Senate-passed bill giving Nixon powers to cope with the fuel shortage.

And the Senate held a second day of debate on Jackson's bill setting up a $20-billion, 10-year program of energy research and development.

Brinegar Says:

...But the crisis may be disruptive

SAN JUAN, P.R. (AP) — The energy crisis need not have a major impact on American living styles and employment if the crisis is handled "with care and cooperation," Secretary of Transportation Claude S. Brinegar said Thursday.

In a speech before the National League of Cities conference, Brinegar added, "Disruption, yes, but not frozen homes or massive unemployment."

He later told a news conference that the nation's ability to avoid what he called the "terrible alternative" of gas rationing depended partly on the weather.

As of now, the winter has been mild, he said, and rejected a reporter's suggestion the fuel shortage was worsening.

"I don't think the crisis is getting worse by the day," he said.

Brinegar appeared with the administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, Russell E. Train, before an audience of mayors and city councilmen.

Two mayors, Joseph Alioto of San Francisco and Moon Landrieu of New Orleans, served as "respondents" to the two federal administrators.

Alioto said the federal government was lagging behind in efforts to push mass transit systems.

He urged that one-half of federal gasoline tax income be diverted away from highways and fed into mass transit systems. The current federal gasoline tax is four cents per gallon.

Brinegar reacted negatively to the Alioto proposal, saying "highways still need support." He said the problem of finding federal funds for mass transit systems needs a broader approach than simply rechanneling an existing federal tax.

Long time, long time

A friend in deed, a friend in need--I rush and surge and cannot stop. Suppose we break when my head is straight, my wheels set in motion--everything in tune. Could I then consider former motives truthfully--and if so, would I or should I attempt to rationalize? I think not. My conscience is too intense--time will turn the trick. BUT TIME IS SO LONG.

Diversion of a different type to quell anxiety?--maybe. But after so long?

It has to all happen, it must--or the cycle never breaks.

Why can't you see some truth, you fight all change with eyes clinched shut--and torment in pain at the chipping away of barriers. Must this always be so--right down to trivia?

Life has many twists and turns, some of which offer no sanctuary--just the intricate task of survival to face, and the inescapable, interwoven reality therein. You've shunned advice and a helping hand--the doors will all be closed soon. Where to then, sheltered one?--Perhaps there's more to bear.

The incumbent executives of the Campus Center Board of Governors were re-elected last night for a year term. Seated left to right are: David Winchester, vice-chairperson, James Lindsey, chairperson, board secretary, and Bill Worden, secretary-treasurer.

Weather

"Well, dear," she said as they entered his room, "If there aren't going to be any more dark and stormy nights, how will I ever find satisfaction in my life? I mean, after all, my life would certainly stop being stimulating if everyday were to become a bright sunny day."

Comic comments on controversial construction. See p. 17, or thereabouts.

Board bogged in election

For a while last night, I thought I was sitting through the most scandoulous election in the history of student governing groups at UMass.

It turned out to be the most hilarious election, and certainly the most intriguing Board of Governors meeting I've ever attended. And I've been faithfully covering them for the Collegian for about two semesters.

The meeting started out innocuous enough. The incumbent officers were nominated for their respective posts, chairperson, vice-chairperson and secretary treasurer.

Jim Lindsey, board chairperson, spoke in favor of his candidacy saying, "I think I've done good things since I've been in office. There are many things I haven't done. That's why I'm running again".

He ran unopposed and won easily.

Next, was the election of the vice-chairperson. Incumbent, Dave Winchester, emphasized the need for "continuity" on the Board since many members will be leaving in January, others at the end of spring semester. I interpreted his request for "continuity" to mean his re-election.

But, unlike the first race, Winchester faced opposition — from the chairperson of the board's food services committee.

"I feel I could handle the job in a good manner", said Hays.

Ballots were cast and the results announced: A TIE! Seven for Winchester, seven for Hays and one abstention. Tension covered the faces of most members.

One member, Mike Curran, quickly broke the silence. He said, "Perhaps we should break a few minutes to...uh...

"Politic?", quickly replied Lindsey, with a smile.

The meeting broke up for a five minute caucus. Most people gathered in small groups and talked in soft tones to each other. A couple of people ran around from group to group and spoke with excited facial expressions, their hands were flying quickly to the pace of their words.

An informed source on the board leaned over to me and whispered, "The caucus is a disguise. The real reason for the break is to find another member, and bring him here to break the tie.

Then....ENTER...a missing member, Tony Tartaglia, wearing a print dress with tan stockings. He had been at the Top of the Campus where he was working as a wine steward at the Madrigal dinner.

They sat down to take another vote. Bill Worden looked terse as he announced the results, "The vote was eight to eight; it looks like someone voted twice." HOW SCANDALOUS!

"We'll vote again, and this time everyone stay in your seats," Worden said sternly, as he passed out ballots for the third time.

They were filled out very quickly and Worden began checking the ballots against the names on the Board's roster. Only to discover that 16 persons were present, so the original eight to eight vote wasn't a fraud. And a second missing member had entered, making the final vote 9-7.

HILARIOUS!

I guess I should have realized the meeting would be unconvential when one member, Howard Levin, gave kisses to everyone. (chocolate candy one, that is).

Also, the meeting wasn't held in the usual elegant setting on the ninth floor of the CC, but in a mediocre room on the first floor of the building. Besides, the microphone, essential to any meeting when members chat among themselves, wasn't there. The ever present pitchers of iced water were set on the table as usual.

But, back to the election. Incumbent secretary-treasurer, Bill Worden was re-nominated. He described the job he had done thus far:

"My duties as secretary have been taken over by a full time secretary and the RSO office has taken over the treasurer's part. I've been two things; Jim's trouble-shooter and a person other board members could entrust their complaints to when they didn't want to do to Jim", he said. He too, was re-elected.

My narration may sound incredible, but that's what went on after the meeting. It may sound equally incredible at this point, to say, that the Board is actually better managed, more reserved and more effective than any other undergraduate student governing body I've seen. And with jurisdiction over policy making in the Campus Center, they're probably the most powerful.

Well, that's the way it goes in student government. If you'd like to join and are qualified, they'll probably take you.

Sharon Huges

Motions passed

The Campus Center-Student Union Board of Governors last night approved the following motions:

--Evelyn Wood's request for space in the Campus Center for next semester. They will be charged for the number of sessions they have per night on the room rate schedule. Payment will be pre-paid.

Warfield in concert Saturday

Acclaimed around the world as one of the greatest vocal artists of our time, William Warfield, the distinguished American bass-baritone will appear in concert on Saturday at 8 p.m., in Bowker Auditorium.

The Fine Arts Council Third World Cultural Series event is being presented also as a part of the Paul Robeson lecture series sponsored by the Institute for Pan-African Culture and coordinated by Professors Max Roach and Archie Shepp.

Mr. Warfield's New York recital debut in Town Hall on March 19, 1950, propelled him into the front rank of concert artists. Every season since then he has filled a heavily booked schedule of recital and orchestral engagements in North America and other continents. His many concerts for the U.S. Sate Department have covered nine countries of Central Africa, five in the Middle East and 10 countries across Asia from Iran to the Philippines.

As an orchestral soloist, William Warfield is in constant demand by conductors both here and abroad. He has appeared with the New York Philharmonic and the Philadelphia Orchestra and he toured Europe as soloist with the latter Orchestra. A festival favorite, Warfield has been featured often at the Lewisohn Stadium, Chicago's Ravinia and Grant Parks, Hollywood Bowl, the Civic Arena in Pittsburgh, the Long Island Festival, New Jersey's Garden State Festival, and many other American summer series.

Butterfield, an alternative living style with an alternative dining style

Butterfield

Imagine a university dining room where students eat supper in a family-type atmosphere, and where meals are served by passing food around the table rather than standing in line to receive individual portions.

Such a place does exist on this campus; but it won't be found in a traditional dining commons. Rather, it is a typical scene at 5:40 p.m. in Butterfield dormitory, when approximately 100 of the dorm's 120 residents gather in the dorm's basement dining room for their evening meal.

The atmosphere is generally considered to be conducive to social interaction, something which the four-floor dorm has a reputation for being a leader in. One of the prime reasons for establishing a kitchen in Butterfield four years ago was to provide a chance for the residents to get to know and work with each other on a regular basis. And the idea worked.

According to the professional chef and manager Norman Paulin, "If it wasn't for a couple of Butterfield people, it (the kitchen) wouldn't be here now. It's very hard to make an operation like this go."

The obstacles that have to be overcome in running a small-scale food service operation for and by students are obviously many. But at Butterfield, the problems that have to be ironed out have consistently proven to be worth the effort in light of the end product. Butterfield residents almost unanimously agree that the quality of food, and the dining atmosphere, far exceed anything that a traditional dining commons could possibly offer.

The menus are written by a student, in cooperation with Paulin, who orders the food and cooks the dinners. Paulin works through the university and independent purveyors to purchase food. Breakfasts are cooked to order by student chefs.

Butterfield residents get fourteen meals per week (breakfast and supper) for the same price as a ten-meal ticket at the dining commons, $284.75. Lunches are an additional $.50 per meal. The cost per meal is lower because they don't have to pay mortgages on the dining commons buildings. One-sixth of the total operations budget goes towards student labor. Some residents have "gravy" jobs, which means that they literally work for their meals by cleaning off tables and the like. Otherwise the pay rate is a standard $2 per hour for all jobs.

"To me, every job is equally important," said Paulin. "Whether it be washing dishes or flipping pancakes."

Pride, and the size of the Butterfield "community," are important assets in making Butterfield go. Students who work in the kitchen "know that they are feeding their roommates," as Paulin put it. But still there are the usual problems, according to Paulin, who cited final exams as a classic deterrant in keeping students from showing up for work. But, as Paulin said, undependable student employees are a universal problem even with professional employers and the dining commons.

Butterfield even has the equivalent of Basic Foods, in the form of special accommodations for sixteen vegeterians who cook their own meals on a rotating basis.

But despite the workability of the Butterfield plan, the consensus is that the establishment of small kitchens in all dorms would be largely unfeasible.

"I'd like to see it happen," said Paulin, "but the chances are pretty slim."

As it is, Butterfield residents from time to time take what they have for granted and, on several occassions in the past, had to be reminded that each and every resident must be responsible for maintaining a clean and efficient operation.

Much of Butterfield's success can be attributed to luck and the dedication of a few outstanding individuals, most notably Ann Mundy, who will resign as Head of Residence effective May, 1974.

The Butterfield kitchen is considered by many to be the nucleus of dorm life, a concept which may not be adaptable to many other dormitories. The more obvious problems of setting up kitchens across campus include, build them, the ideal personnel (both students and professional), and of course the question of what would happen to the dining commons if every dorm had its own kitchen.

Planning Center Reconstructed

The Student Development and Career Planning Center is in the process of reconstruction — literally. In Berkshire House, just outside the Southwest tunnel, walls are being taken down and rooms remodelled. Broken plaster lines the halls.

"The biggest problem has been visibility," said David Andes, a counseling intern at the Center. The move to Berkshire House from Whitmore will hopefully make the center more earsily accessible to students desiring counseling or other services offered by the Center.

The center was formed by the merger of the Counciling Center and the Career Planning and Placement Center in September of this year.

In an interview at the Center, Andes felt that the counselors and staff of the Center "would like to be more available" to students. The Center, according to Andes, is equipped to deal with a large spectrum of problems, both academic and personal, because of a staff which has "a wide range of professional capabilities."

A large amount of information is also available for career planning. Brochures describing various businesses and their employment procedures, career brochures, graduate school catalogues and aptitude and placement tests may be used by students wishing to plan their futures.

Also planned for the Center when remodelling is completed are: credentialing service for preparing resumes; a video tape room; an office for information on teaching certification; and an interview and counseling offices, according to Andes.

New workshops and courses were also started at the beginning of the semester, and according to Andes, they seem to be meeting with success. Some of these new programs are: a community center in North Village, directed by Simon Keochakian, which provides recreational and social functions for the residents; Psych 190, "The College Experience" is taught by Ted Slovin and attempts to assist new students at UMass in becoming aclimated; a Career Exploration Seminar, led by Susana Krivatsy and Don Banks, which explores through discussion various careers and occupations; a Workshop for Couples conducted by David Andes, which Andes says tries "to help people develop a style of communication which produces intimacy."

Susana Krivatsy feels that "people are working hard and extending themselves to their programs," but the Center needs a "formation of goals." However, Ms. Krivatsy doesn't feel this is possible until a permanent director is appointed. The problem has been discussed by the staff, but action cannot be taken until funds are allocated from Whitmore for this purpose.

UCF-moving toward community visibility

The United Christian Foundation Board met Wednesday night to discuss a wide range of business and political issues which its task force have been dealing with on and off campus.

The board begun its meeting with a non-denominational community social meeting and a worship service, a regular procedure designed to increase student and community involvement. Among the 14 persons present last night, it was agreed that the group needs to become "more visible in the community."

UCF task forces include committees on peace action, counseling, racism, and religion. Other groups deal with internal business and policy.

The UCF peace action group, which includes a handful of UMass students, is trying to create awareness that the U.S. is supporting a repressive regime in Indochina. A strategy conference on the V-1 bomber will be held Dec. 16, and an Indochina Unity Organizing Conference is scheduled for Dec. 15.

A counseling task force is planning a workshop dealing with self-destructive behavior of students and will deal with topics such as drug abuse and suicide. This task force participates in the campus resource network and the campus counseling network. A racism committee which is not yet totaaly organized is supporting the United Farm Workers movement.

Other general activities in which the UCF is involved include Fred Robinson's upcoming lecture on Last Tango in Paris and presentation of a speaker on energy policy.

Information about UCF activities is available at its office at 319 Hampshire House.

National leadership and its problems

Ford fourtieth, first under 25th

Vice-President Gerald R. Ford.

by Jim Adams
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Gerald R. Ford was sworn in as the nation's 40th vice president Thursday night, becoming the first man to take office under the Constitution's 25th Amendment.

With President Nixon at Ford's side and with Mrs. Ford holding the Bible, Chief Justice Warren E. Burger administered the 71-word oath in the House chamber. Among those present were the Cabinet, members of the House and Senate, Supreme Court justices and the diplomatic corps.

The four Ford children were in the distinguished visitors' gallery and the public galleries were packed.

In a brief speech stressing the hope for national unity that has been his theme since his nomination, Ford said he saw neither Republicans nor Democrats in the chamber.

"At this moment of visible and living unity," Ford said, "I see only Americans.

"I see Americans who love their country, Americans who work and sacrifice for their country and their children. I see Americans who pray without ceasing for peace among all nations and for harmony at home."

In prepared remarks for the Senate afterward, Ford said he was grateful to senators for confidence they expressed "in the capacity of our political institutions to meet new challenges without the extremes of passion and partisanship that have brought less sturdy republics to ruin."

Ford was sworn in just over an hour after the House, by a 387 to 35 vote, compeleted Congress' confirmation of his nomination as vice president.

Republicans broke into applause as the electronic vote counters on each end of the House chamber hit an absolute majority of 218 votes for Ford's confirmation.

Afterward, the full House and spectators jamming the public galleries applauded as Ford himself entered the chamber and joined Speaker Carl Albert on the speaker's podium.

Ford, who has been House Republican leader, had served in the same chamber for 25 years.

During an intermission between the confirmation and the swearing-in ceremony, Ford went to the White House to deliver his confirmation resolution to Nixon.

After they posed with cameramen, Nixon told Ford that delivering the resolution was his last act as a member of Congress."

Ford replied, "I'm no longer a member of Congress."

And Nixon laughingly cautioned, "Are you sure? You haven't been sworn in yet. You still have a 15-minute drive. Don't give up your salary until you get your hand up," a reference to the oath-taking.

When he returned to the House for the ceremony, Ford, accompanied by Nixon, was greeted with enthusiastic cheers, whistles and applause from Democrats as well as Republicans.

Ford took the oath solemnly until he stumbled on the words near the end and broke into his broad, familiar smile.

Most of the House debate on Ford's nomination had been in his favor.

Alexander Haig denies ''Devil Theory'' on tapes

by Harry F. Rosenthal
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon's top aide dropped a "devil theory" into the White House tapes mystery Thursday, saying there had been in-house discussions that "some sinister force" may have caused 13 minutes of an 18-minute buzz.

With that, U.S. Dist. Judge John J. Sirica adjourned his tapes hearing until experts come up with a more technical answer for the buzz that wiped out a crucial Watergate conversation taped in the President's office.

The tests, now being conducted, should be finished next week, he said.

Alexander M. Haig Jr., the former four-star general who now is Nixon's right-hand man, said "there was no finite explanation" for the discrepancy between the 4½ minutes Rose Mary Woods may have erased accidentally and the 18¼ minutes that actually are gone on the Watergate tape.

"There have been several theories," he said. "Perhaps she was tired and didn't realize how long she was away from the machine, or perhaps she touched the high-speed rewind. If that took 4½ minutes, it might have wiped out 18."

Miss Woods, Nixon's personal secretary, has testified she may accidentally have pushed a tape machine record button on Oct. 1 when she stopped transcribing a June 20, 1972 tape to answer her telephone. She said her conversation lasted no more than from four to five minutes.

There are two distinct overriding tones on the tape — loud for five minutes, soft for the other 13.

Asked whether had been any discussions that someone other than Miss Woods might have erased the tape, Haig replied:

"Yes, there have been discussions of what I have referred to as "devil theories'. Specifically, the night we returned from Memphis Nov. 20...I met with the President's counsels and they were very concerned that evening because the tests they made that day convinced them at that time that the machine used by Miss Woods could not have made the tones...

"That therefore suggested that some sort of outside energy force had been applied to the tape. I refer to that as the devil theory today."

Haig said the existence of two tones was "a source of great distress" and the thinking was that one was caused by Miss Woods "and then, perhaps, some sinister source had come in and applied the other energy source and taken care of the information on that tape."

Asked by the judge whether anyone had suggested what that force might be, Haig said, "No, your honor."

He said checks were made to determine who had access to the tape and it was determined there was no one but Miss Woods, presidential aide Stephen Bull, the Secret Service and the President himself.

After court, Haig strongly indicated he believed Miss Woods was the cause of the 18-minute gap.

"I've known some women that think they talked for five minutes and have talked for an hour," he told reporters.

Vulture visit court everyday

MIAMI, Fla. (AP) — Each day maintenance men climb to the roof of the Dade County Courthouse where they flap their arms, wave brooms, sticks and rolled newspapers in a vain attempt to dissuade dozens of vultures from roosting on the building.

For 30 years the roof of the 28-story courthouse has been a favorite daytime perch for the vultures which fly South in October to avoid the winter cold.

The maintenance men say the vultures cause problems because their feathers clog drainage pipes along the edge of the roof, occasionally causing flooding into the floor below.

The men are shy about discussing what they call their vulture "elimination measures."

But each morning the building staff goes up to the roof and spends several minutes whistling, swearing, waving and shouting at the birds.

"For 30 or 40 years people have been making jokes about them," said one maintenance man who asked not to be identified.

Jeff Simon, who studied the habits of the vultures while a student at the University of Miami, said the birds arrive at the courthouse each morning about 30 minutes before sunrise.

They sit almost exactly three feet apart and rearrange their positions when a new arrival throws off the pattern.

The vultures take a lunchtime break at a sewage plant on nearby Virginia Key, returning to the roof in midafternoon. When the sun begins to go down they head back to the key to spend the night.

Truckers confront highway patrol, abandon blockade

by Neil Bibler
Associated Press Writer

Truck drivers angered by higher fuel prices and lower speed limits abandoned their blockades of two major Ohio roads yesterday after confrontations with highway patrolmen.

Officers and drivers scuffled briefly on Interstate 70 east of Columbus as tow trucks moved in to break the blockade. After the confrontation, some 200 drivers voluntarily climbed into their rigs and started down the road.

Traffic was reopened on the Ohio Turnpike near Elyria when patrolmen and two National Guard tow trucks removed a tractor-trailer rig from the highway.

While traffic began moving again on the Ohio Turnpike and Interstate 70 — both major east-west routes through the state — highways were still jammed in the Toledo area. The turnpike remained open around Toledo, but other major routes were stalled.

In Pennsylvania and Delaware, truckers said their protest efforts were shifting away from highway blockades.

In Wilmington, Del., trucker spokesman John Sassi urged drivers to pull their rigs into Washington, D.C.

In the central Pennsylvania town of Lamar, Gil Dollar said a representative of the truckers had gone to Washington in an effort to persuade federal officials to act on the truckers' complaints.

But in Washington, White House Press Secretary Gerald L. Warren described the blockades as a state rather than a federal matter.

The Ohio Highway Patrol said it arrested 19 truckers Thursday, but most were released on bond.

While the truckers' protests have been limited mostly to Eastern and Midwestern states, there were rumblings of support from truckers in the West.

"I'm driving until I see other truckers blocking the road, then I'll turn off my engine and sit on my cab with my .356 magnum pistol and let the government move me," Robert Cannon said in Los Angeles.

Cannon, 38, said he and his $50,000 rig have been stranded for two weeks because shippers don't want to risk a cross-country run until they know fuel is available all along the route.

Other drivers said they are lucky to get 25 gallons of diesel fuel at any one truck stop. They said their big trucks get only four miles per gallon.

In addition to the uncertainties of obtaining fuel and the high prices when they find it, drivers say they are hampered by new restrictions imposed on drive time because of the energy shortage.

Drivers who own their own trucks are hit hardest by the increased costs of diesel fuel, but hired drivers are hurt by reduction in drive time and speed limits because they are paid by the mile.

It's a Ginkelvan

OTTAWA (AP) — If fuel shortages drastically cut airline and auto travel, Canadians may soon step from the jet age into a Ginkelvan.

The Ginkelvan is an octagonal-shaped small bus designed and soon to be manufactured by a Montreal couple named van Ginkel.

Dutch-born H.P. Daniel van Ginkel and his Montreal-born wife Blanche designed it to lure motorists our of their cars and reduce downtown traffic jams in cities like New York and Montreal.

Now, they believe, the current fuel shortage will make their Canadian-designed and manufactured vehicle even more attractive for encouraging greater use of public transportation.

Sargent's energy speech on TV today

BOSTON (AP) — Gov. Francis W. Sargent will deliver a statewide television address on the energy crisis Friday evening, the governor's office said Thursday.

The address, scheduled for 7:30 p.m., will originate at the studios of WBZ-TV, Channel 4 in Boston, a spokesman said.

Sargent is expected to announce his next steps to deal with the state's energy crisis, which reportedly will include a special session of the legislature in advance of the scheduled return date of Jan. 2.

There have been reports that the governor will ask the legislature for additional emergency powers under the Civil Defense Act. It has been contended in some quarters that Sargent already has all the authority he needs to deal with the crisis in Massachusetts and a special legislative session would be unnecessary.

The governor's press spokesman, Thomas Reardon, said the television speech will be divided into three parts: the dimension of the energy problem; action the state can take, and action which can be taken by the federal government to ensure that Massachusetts doesn't suffer disproportionately from the enrgy shortage.

The television format was chosen, Reardon said, because "it is the best way to reach everyone."

'Jesus is my main man'

Jim Otis

Jim Otis is a man in search of answers to what he calls the evils that exist in the world. "I feel I've begun to find the solutions in my main man, Jesus Christ," he said.

Jim attended UMass Boston for a year. After becoming restless with academic life he later joined the Air Force. Due to a family crisis he received a discharge a year later.

Taking advantage of the G.I. Bill, he decided to attend UMass Amherst for a change in scenery. After returning to school he began to look into various religions. Part of the interest grew out of the impersonal situations he found at UMass.

"People at UMass are hard to get to know. There is a cold air about them. Nobody ever looks you straight in the eyes. I found the warmest people to be those concerned with faith," he said.

Jim sought answers in the Bah'ai, Morman, Jewish and Christian beliefs.

Jim said he felt that, "Every religion I looked into had Jesus Christ as a central figure. I began to turn toward Christianity."

Previous to his discovery of Christ he was only concerned with his physical self.

"I was only concerned with satifying my external needs, my physical body. I even considered myself superstud. I had everything a man could want. Yet I felt a deep emptiness," he said.

"Now that I recognize Christ, I will no longer jump in bed with every girl I can. I'm concerned with an emotional committment," he added.

As his interest in Christ grows, Jim has begun the search to satisfy his spiritual and mental self.

"My life has changed, now that Christ is the concern of my life. I used to have a swelled head. I was in control of my ego, but now I want Christ to be," he said.

He continued, "I want Christ's way to be part of me. It's more than a religion, it is a belief, a way of life. Jesus the Lord can help solve problems within me."

Jim believes he has a great deal more to learn before he can call himself a true Christian.

"I still have to read more of the Bible. I'm a slow reader. Everything I have read so far is full of wisdom and warmth. Many of the words are relevant today. Christ's way can easily be worked into everyday life," he said.

Attending prayer meetings helps Jim understand Christ and the Bible better.

"At the meetings you can see the living Christ and brotherly love everywhere. People hug one another freely and you know it comes from the love of Christ. After I leave the meetings I'm ecstatic," he said.

Jim believes the second coming of Christ is necessary because man has failed him so badly.

"The wars and hatred are the result of mans failing. For all the people that suffer, Blessed are those who suffer for they shall inherit the kingdom of heaven."

"I realize that I cannot nor do I expect the world to change overnight. The seed must be nurtured and disciplined," he said.

The Christian belief has affected Jim directly, "I no longer see women as merely sex objects. I notice simple things like the clear blue sky against the library. I realize the guy sitting next to me in class is my brother. All these new attitudes are because of Jesus Christ."

Jim sees the second coming of Christ to be in the form of a bright light in the sky, with Christ descending to earth on a cloud.

Jim further stated, "Men will throw down their guns. They will hug their brothers. There will no longer be hatred in the world. Hopefully He will come soon."

He's a real UMie, not just a star

He is not a star athlete. When he walks into the Blue Wall the sorority girls don't stop to stare. He has never done anything of major importance to get his picture in the Collegian.

But senior Ira Caplan is much like most of us who go through college getting lost in the crowd.

He is, however, as unique as the Peil Penningtons and Al Skinners. In his own group of friends he is well-liked.

Like most guys here he dates girls. And like most guys here he gets his share of "shut downs".

During the Cambodian invasion he was part of the crowd who protested Nixon policies. His voice helped raise the roar which was heard in Washington.

Since then he's leaned more to the right. At 22-years old he thinks students are occasionally politically-irrational.

At high school in Worcester he played baseball. Everyone knew him there.

Still, he doesn't mind being one of 18,000 undergraduates. "I've met a lot of nice peopl here and it's a nice area," he says. "Coming here gave me a chance to examine a new life style."

Ira Caplan will graduate in January. When he returns home a great many people will know him.

His younger brother Lee is a freshman, and like Ira he too will probably get lost in the crowd during his four years here.

Fortune Society:

Alternative to prison

Two ex-prisoners from the Fortune Society spoke Tuesday about their experiences and their relationships to Attica. The Fortune Society was represented by two well-known members, Mr. Ben Johnson and Mr. Ken Jackson. Mr. Jackson started the meeting off by telling what the Fortune Society is all about, how they got started, and what we can do to help.

The Fortune Society, started as a result of the play "Fortune IN Men's Eyes". Mr. Jackson said that if anyone saw the movie, they got ripped off, for the movie is nothing like the play. An inmate wrote and produced the play about six years ago.

Mr. Jackson next told us how he got involved with the Fortune Society. He said he became involved as a result of a commitment he made to his lawyer about six years ago. He promised his lawyer that if he got him off from a charge, he would do anything. So his lawyer asked him to tell society about his past and to help ex-convicts. It was a hard thing to do, since it meant changing his whole life-style but he decided to to it anyway.

Mr. Jackson said that the Fortune Society has more to offer than the so-called prison reform system. He said the Fortune Society gets the prisoners and the so-called free men in action with one another. He commented about the old saying "sober as a judge", Well don't believe it he said, because once he attended a cocktail party, (the purpose of the party was to discuss prison reform systems) and the judges talked more bull than a little bit and were drunk as "old beaten down dogs."

Mr. Ben Johnson spoke next. He told us that he met Mr. Jackson in a reform school.

During the Attica uprise, Ken was one of the men sent in the yard to help solve the problems of the uprise. Mr. Johnson said he was one of the men in the yard during the uprise and oh how he wanted Ken to die in that yard, since he was sent in to calm down the riots. But he now was glad that nothing had happened to Ken. Because, he said, Ken is really one of the true real men in this decayed society, who knows what society really is about and wants to do something to change it.

Professor Dugas aides Franco-American relations

"Est-ce vrai que les grenouillent ont plus de plaisir? Is it true frogs have more fun?"

Professor Donald Dugas of the French department has been asking this queston for a long time. He started asking it back in 1969, when he headed a federally-funded program for bilingual education in Lewiston, Maine, and he's still asking it now, as he prepares to launch the Franco-American Institute this coming spring.

The Franco-American Institute, or L'Institut Franco-Americain, is a program within the French department which aims, according to Dugas, "to get the department's head out of the clouds."

"There's a need for a new leadership among Franco-Americans," he said, "who can tend to public institutions, federal and private spending in educations, as in bilingual programs — a leadership who can be active in the communities."

The Institute aims to fulfill this need by generating study of French-Canadian culture, its history, language, and people — particularly the people who came to New England from Canada.

Dugas, himself of French-Canadian ancestry, said, "The French have been in this area since the 1840's, they have been mostly skilled laborers attracted by agents for industries down here, and they have spent billions of dollars to maintain their cultural ties, in times when that sort of interest was considered unpatriotic."

"In the past their life had been run by the Church, the priests and nuns served as their main liason with political life. But in the last ten years, Church influence has waned, and left a void," he said. "The French who have succeeded here are those who allowed themselves to be Anglicized."

Dugas spoke about his experience in the Franco-American town of Lewiston, Maine, saying, "In upper Maine, when I went there from the University of Maine in 1969 as a consultant in bilingual education, I found out how little I understood."

"Many of the children spoke no English, but the teachers were all Anglo-American even though the town was 70% French. We were trying to develop self-esteem among the kids, and we passed out 'frog power' stickers. (Little green frogs saying 'frog power', or 'Frogs eat what bugs them') I got in trouble for that.

"The assistant to the superintendent was hostile toward the French, and accused me of trying to foment divisiveness. The Anglo teachers didn't like it either, when I forced the issue to a head."

"I felt my integrity was at stake because my assistants were being treated as guests in the classrooms instead of as real teachers. I would not head this program and have no teachers I insisted that they hire bilingual teachers, but they wouldn't.

"I felt this couldn't go on. We had some funds left, so we started a bilingual newspaper, and I worked with an Indian program for a while. But we weren't too bright, financially, and so we went under after nine months."

He explained that the Institute, here at UMass, is part of an attempt to encourage cultural diversity.

"A lot of things ethnic groups have done have caused a lot of ego-pain. I don't want to encourage that," he said. "I believe that assertion of a culture does not have to lead to violent confrontations."

"I'm trying now to contact groups of Franco-Americans in this area. I've just finished placing some ads (about the Institutue) with WERB, a French station in Holyoke, and once a month I do WFCR's Tout En Francais on Canadian culture. There are a lot of French people in Easthampton, others around Holyoke and Springfield." he said.

He said that he's not sure yet if the Institute will address itself to all of New England, or just Massachusetts. "The program," he said "will be concerned with the Canadian language, and with Franco-American society in New England, our history. This is a first attempt to deal with issues that are not purely literary. Our readings will be political."

"We'd like to see French Canadian students take part," he said, "they can really help us, and would enjoy these studies."

Professor Marjorie Fitzpatrick will also be teaching in the program. She has been teaching courses involved with Francophone countries. Other new programs in the department are French Business, French Journalism, and French Social Sciences.

Black student movement

The times they have changed

In putting together the second part of this series, I was confused by my own prejudices. In order to write complete and accurate account of the events surrounding the establishment of a Black Studies Department here, I have tried to relate the events from an outsider's point of view. Because the decisions made at that time affect each and every one of us now (including myself), my views might seem unintentionally biased at times.

This is the 2nd part of a 3-part series dealing with the history of the establishment of the Black Studies Department.

Wed., Nov. 13, 1968: The student Afro-American Organization released the University from its ultimatum demanding the disarming of University police by 3 p.m.Friday.

President Lederle and other officials met with black representatives that day for 3½ hours and reported that progress was being made.

Robert Henderson, spokesman for the black students appeared before the Student Senate to clarify the group stand on the disarming of the police and the other demands.

Mon., Nov. 18, 1968: The alleged beating which touched off a series of protests and led the Student Afro-American Organization to issue a list of 21 demands to the University, was a hoax, Dean of Students William F. Field said.

He said a white UMass student and his black guest admitted that they made up the beating story by four white youths on Nov. 7. Dean Field announced the white student whom he refused to identify had been suspended from the University. The white student's suspension was automatically referred to the University Discipline Board. The Dean attributed the discovery of the hoax to the Student Afro-American Organization, members that brought the information to him. Field stressed that although the beating was a hoax, there existed "racial tensions that need immediate attention".

Tuesday, Nov. 19, 1968: In an opening statement Henderson said: "The student Afro-American Organization has been impressed with the honesty and sincerity of the administration in dealing with the demands which were presented. We feel that the administration's response to our demands will be one that will be acceptable to the entire University community.

"We are highly pleased that an effective channel of communication has been established between the administration and black students. We hope that the general university community and the public at large will have a better understanding of what we are trying to accomplish, i.e., one cohesive university community."

It was disclosed that in order to continue further study of some of the proposals, several committees would be established consisting of administrators, faculty members, and students. A monitoring committee was set up to "watch over the other committees" and to make sure that "no stone is left untouched". The members of the monitoring committee included, Tom Minogue, President of the Graduate Student Senate; Paul Silverman, President of the Student Senate; Robert Henderson and Chuck Reed representing the Afro-American Organization; Dr. Jeremiah Allen, Associate Provost; and Glen Gordon, secreatry of the faculty senate.

Demands presented

Listed are the results of the demands that was given to President Lederle on Nov. 8. The first demand: a public apology from the administration for the beating of the black visitor and his white UMass friend was ignored since it was discovered the alleged beating never occured. Demand number two originally asked for the firing of two officers, the hiring of a minimum of 15 black police, and sensitivity training for all police. Associate Provost Allen answered for the university. He said the hiring of any black policeman or security officer will have to wait until a vacancy occured on the force.

Concerning the demand that Police Chief Alexander Blasko and Officer Peter Sienkiewcz be fired, Allen said that if charges are presented against these men, they will be brought before the proper university board.

As for the introduction of a black curriculum, Allen said that the members of Afro-Am would draw up a list of proposals which would be forwarded to the monitoring committee which would then submit the proposals to the Faculty Senate Academic Matters Committee. That past April, the faculty senate voted to institute courses in black history and black culture. The recruitment of black teachers is "recognized by all concerned as a problem which has to be attacked".

Another demand asked for black doctors in the infirmary. Dean Field said that Dr. Gage told him that of the 7000 doctors graduating from medical school last year, only 107 were black. He said when vacancies occur in the infirmary, "we will solicit a black doctor". President Lederle said, "It is one of the injustices of society that there are so few black professionals.

In order to increase the number of out-of-state black students admitted to the university within the 5 percent rule, John Child, assistant Dean of Admissions, was assigned to work with the black students to help indentify potential out-of-state black students.

Sensitivity training for house officers was begun. Paul Silverman explained that while it was not compulsory, "we will make it available to any who wants it". Concerning demands eight and eleven, asking for more money for Afro-Am and for a black arts festival, Silverman said the group would draw up a specific funding proposal which would be brought before the Senate, DVP, and Fine Arts Committee.

CCEBS Program Discussed

The demand which caused the most confusion that of no black students in the CCEBS program to flunk out was discussed in greater length by the group. It was also discussed whether or not the same policy should be applied to all freshmen. As a result, a thorough review of the present policy concerning the academic status of failing first semester freshman was conducted by Dean Field and Dr. Allen. Dean Field complimented the black students for bringing to the administration's attention this weak point that needed immediate attention.

Demand number ten asked for permission to use Mills House as a center for Afro-Am activities. Field reported that John Messenger, central area coordinator began to study the feasibility of using dorms in the central area in addition to housing a small number of foreign and graduate students.

In reply to the demand for more black administrators, President Lederle said "We have a policy of no discrimination. We will hire anyone who is qualified to be on the payroll."

Concerning sensitivity training for professors, Dr. Allen said a group was being formed to work with the faculty on this matter. Senate President Siverman said Sue Brady, chairman of the Student Union Governing Board, had invited the Afro-Am Organization to submit a list of names for new rooms in the Campus Center to the appropriate sub-committee.

The proposed conduct code would apply to all members of the university community in order to protect any person on the campus from being subject to improper behavior. The monitoring committee would also be responsible for establishing the code.

As for demand 20, asking for a clear explanation of sanctions to be taken against any dorm or fraternity which shows any form of racist behavior, Field claimed that the sanctions already existed as outlined in the Student Handbook.

Liberation Through Awareness

Monday, December 16, 1968 — Thirteen events centering on the theme of "Liberation Through Awareness" were held this weekend. One part of the L.T.A. was a panel discussion on the subject of Black-White Student Power. The panelists were Paul Silverman, president of the Student Senate; Gil Salk of the MLK Social Action Council; Robert Henderson, Afro-Am leader, and John Wilson, chairman

ON SITE TRAINING FOR PROSPECTIVE TEACHERS IN URBAN SCHOOLS -- Sacred Heart School, 27 Everett Street, Springfield was the "on the spot" learning location for a seminar sponsored by the Center for Urban Education Teacher Education Program of the University of Massachusetts for interns this past week. These prospective teachers for Urban schools are shown here learning how the new math is being taught at this inner city school before going into the classrooms to see "on site" for themselves and to benefit from the observations of teachers in the school. Shown here are Portia Elliot, assistant professor of education at UMass, with prospective teachers - all students in the Center (from left in front row): Bruce Cassavant, Denise Buxton, Jean Trautman, Sue Coombs, Anne Fleming. In rear Larry Kerstein, Delphine Pyles. The program at the Springfield Catholic School is under the supervision of UMass doctoral condidate, Sister Dorothy Pilkington, SSJ.

'Colleges cause problems'

BRUNSWICK, Maine (AP) — The president of Bowdoin College says the liberal arts school, by breeding arrogance, may be partly responsible for the manifest failures of the "best and the brightest" in government.

In light of the Kennedy administration's role in Vietnam, Johnson's in the "Great Society" and now Nixon's in Watergate, Dr. Roger Howell Jr. says it is possible to see a pattern of "arrogance associated with the rational capability."

But the cherubic-looking Rhodes Scholar and noted historian says he has no firm plan aimed at rooting out the sin of pride from the products of Bowdoin-Maine's eldest and most prestigious institutions of higher learning.

Black studies

of the Holyoke Community College Afro-Am Organization.

The topic was considered in three parts - Black Power, White Power, and Student Power. Salk said that there could never be a black-white coalition on this campus because even a white-white coalition is impossible. Silverman, disagreeing, remarked that whites have no unique problems. Henderson, disagreeing, remarked that whites do have many unique problems, including racism and apathy.

March 2, 1970-Chancellor Oswald Tippo released the following statement concerning the Mills House situation: 1) Mills House has been designated as a black culture center; 2) Investigations are being continued to determine exactly what happened Thursday night. The facts which are being obtained are helping to dispel the rumors that have caused some of the dangerous tension; 3) Every effort is being made to assign comparable space to the white students who were in Mills House as quickly as possible, so that they can live together.

The residence and student affairs personnel in neighboring dormitories were helpful in providing temporary accommodations for those displaced students. Restitution was made for the expense and inconvenience that the displaced students had been subject to, and the University moved their belongings as quickly as possible; 4) Student Senate leaders and Central Area Council members had been responding magnificently and the University was deeply grateful for their help. They were meeting with the involved groups to work for constructive solutions to the problems which have developed. These efforts had already begun to reduce tensions.

Campus Reaction

After the Mills House takeover the campus comment of that time was:

One student commented, "Those 75 students are paying for their rooms out of their pockets, or their families, while the campus as a whole is contributing 100,000 dollars per year to the C.C.E.B.S. program. This may be asking too much, but I feel that there should be some sense of gratitude to the students that are making the educations of many Black students a little easier. Summarily ejecting 75 students from their dorm is certainly not going to increase the popularity of Blacks on this campus."

Another student said, "Equality is a virtuous work. It once had a meaning, but today it appears to mean a variety of things. One could almost say that, today, equality connotates a form of superiority, on one or more levels. Does a person achieve equality with another by breaking a law, in order to secure an advantage over his adversary and, then, being allowed to go unpunished? True, laws are made to be broken but disobedience requires punishment. Is not an injustice done when due punishment is refrained because of anxiety and apprehension of backlash? What kind of future lies in store for this great nation, or for that matter, this great institution, if a minority can regulate and direct a majority by acts of violence and demands for better this and that? After, all, violence breeds destruction and destruction breeds waste."

Crisis Not Due To Low Supply

To say that there is a shortage of available fuel is an understatement. But to say it is because of our supplies running low is not really where it's at.

It is estimated that there is at least another 100 years supply of oil, possibly more, within the borders of the United States. Yet we import oil.

Government taxation combined with "environmentalists" has kept most oil companies from getting new sources of supply. Yet the major oil companies, or conglomerates, are also to blame.

Foundations run by such oilmen such as Rockefeller have financed these groups. For what purpose?

We also notice that Dictator Nixon has an advisory board, just like he said on his recent fireside chat. The board has advisors from Exxon, Arco, Sunoco, etc. For what purpose?

I feel the purpose is to have the monopolistic oil companies control our fuel supply with the government just as involved and just as guilty.

Restriction of freedom of movement is a sure sign of a dictatorship. Gas rationing restricts freedom of movement. Gas rationing seems to be the solution offered by Nixon. But by rationing gas, the oil companies put a tight squeeze on the rest of us, thus increasing their monopoly. What you will see is a dictatorship by the oil monopolies with Nixon's endorsement.

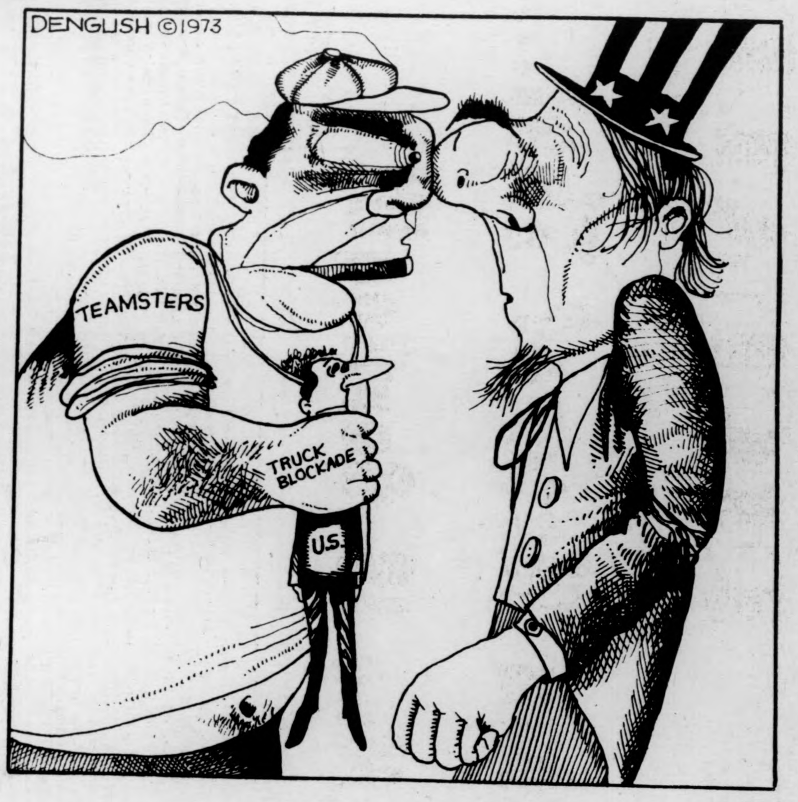
While there are many other factors involved, the solution to this is not government control. The reason that all this came about is because of too much government control and involvement in business.

This brings me to another point. Our radical leftists have become ambiguous. They are calling for more and more federal control of certain phases of government yet cry out how oppressive government has become. Yes, leftfielders, government is oppressive. But you want to increase their power. The increase in power is what has made government oppressive.

I have said a lot of things in my columns. A lot of people tend to forget a lot of what I say. But the one thing I want you all to remember is that the oppressiveness of government is directly related to the amount of power that the government has. It doesn't matter who's running the show. The form doesn't matter. It is the amount of power that matters. To put it another way, the more power a government has, the more corrupt it becomes and the more oppressive it becomes.

I don't want to give the government more power. These are the people who have brought you Vietnam, the oil crisis, the possibility of another Vietnam in the Mid-East, inflation and oppressive taxation, among other things. The situation will get worse as the government gets more power.

Bob Estelle is a Collegian columnist.



To The Editor:

"The basic issue is this government and how power is being used."

I think that pretty much sums up Wednesday night's encounter session in the student senate. Over the past few months, a number of sisters and brothers in the senate have been attempting to deal with some basic problems not covered by a mere agenda of bills and by-laws. You know, things like what are areas of student interests and need, do we, as senators and representatives, and you, as students and our constituents, actually, in practice, have any REAL control over our lives as members of this university community? Do we have power (non-theoretically) as equals with the faculty and administration, or are some more equal than others? Are we going to believe it when we tell each other that our community is a zoo (as Southwest is termed) or that we are animals (Blue wall any night, dorms any weekend)? Shall we continue to benignly resign ourselves to the mentality of thinkspeak and animal farm?

Such vehament clashes in the Collegian over who is right, wrong, and just in the Middle East and we can't even define and act upon our own problems. The Unity Slate and the senate as a whole is beginning to seriously deal with these questions.

We are not trying to recreate woodstock or find instant solutions. What we are attempting to do, is to lay the foundations for a non-exploitive, cooperative, and responsive community where we have real and independent control over our own lives. Nothing more, nothing LESS.

As a primary step in that direction, senate meetings next semester, will be held at least one in each residential college area, open to all people from that area for non-token input, questions, and involvement.

Some of the questions the senate and the unity slate are working on at present, (not just for study but to act upon) are as follows: an evaluation of the grading system, competition as a detriment to learning, competition versus cooperation, faculty power grades, course content and your input, degree requirements, why? who owns the dorms and dining commons, how much you pay out for them and why, why the police on campus are armed, their authority to search dorms, offices, make arrests, ties with town and state police, existence of undercover people and why, the influence of alumni and trustees, wages and working conditions of student workers, areas of mutual interest with campus unions, amore effective student government, improved communications among students. Freedom from the back room cigar smoking mentality the administrations co-optation and paternalism. We are not saying that we can answer all of these questions or that the senate will, in every instance, make the wisest decisions. What we ARE saying is that we, as students, can and must develop a REAL community, with specifialy defined STUDENT interests, and gols, with a real control over our own lives. It can be done but only with everyones active participation. Nothing will be handed to us and no one can fight our struggles for us. As Martin Robinson Delany once said, "Every people should be the originators of their own designs, the projector of their own schemes, and creators, of the events that lead to their destiny -...the consummation of their desires."

We are continually reevaluating our roles and functions and hope that any brothers and sisters interested enough to take control of their own lives will drop in and speak to us in the Senate Office any time and the Commuter Lounge, Wednesday and Thursday from 12:00 to 4:00.

To The Editor:

With reference to Nathaniel Clark's letter appearing in the Dec. 6 issue:

If Mr. Clark was really concerned with the level of journalistic expertise displayed in the Collegian, he would have done well not to have written his letter to the editor, or at least to have made sure it would never be published. His letter constitutues a display of mock erudition meant to belittle people who are capable of expressing themselves in a straightforward, natural manner, as is Ms. Kosofsky. Mr. Clark may be consoled, however, by the thought that his letter was probably the source of some amusement among members of the Speech Department.

Everyone has the right to express their own opinions, but not to castigate others because their views are different. I would therefore recommend that Mr. Clark adopt a more constructive approach, and voice his opinions not as attacks upon editorial columnists, but as a columnist himself

The Juan de la Cruz Boycott Committee, the UMass support group for the United Farmworkers, is calling on all friends of the U.F.W. to come to a mass picket at the Northampton Food Mart on Rt. 5, Saturday, December 8, from 11 to 4.

This chain is a very important target for the clean-up campaign in Western Mass. In early October, Food Mart made a committment to the United Farm Workers to sell only U.F.W. lettuce and no grapes. In the past weeks they have flooded their stores with "scab" grapes. The boycott committee now will begin another campaign against Food Mart so that "scab" grapes will be refused and returned to the union-busting grower-Teamster alliance in California. Unless a committment is a strong one it is absolutely useless to the U.F.W. We must work to keep our Western Mass committments strong.

Food Mart has decided to take on the U.F.W. Last week store managers persistently heckled picketers. The boycott is gaining momentum all over the U.S. and Canada. On November 16 the National Conference of Catholic Bishops unanimously adopted resolutions endorsing the grape and lettuce boycott "until such time as free secret ballot elections are held" for farmworkers to decide which union they want to represent them.

Cesar Chavez says, "We boycott because we have hope." We are not going to give in to the Teamsters let alone a chain the size of Food Mart. We not only have hope, we have strength. Strength comes in numbers. Show your support for the farmworkers' struggle by coming to the mass picket on Saturday. Bring a friend. Bring a guitar. VIVA LA CAUSA!

I'm writing in response to your recent article about WMUA. I would like to clarify a point about the News. From the article it sounds as though the News Director programs every item in every newscast. The newscasters are responsible for their own show. Each individual announcer has been encouraged to gather stories of local interest to use in their programs. We also use stories from the UPI and AP wire services plus the UPI audio service. The individual newscaster combine all their sources and put together their own ten minute programs which they do live. We also have two Public Affairs shows which are produced in conjunction with the news department. The University Week in Review and Special Reports Teams present news stories of significance.

To The Editor:

The Coalition for Environmental Quality (R.S.O. #347) just got another of a steady stream of notes which we classify as "why don't you do..." We get these every couple of weeks, sometime its simply a description of a problem, and sometimes there are some materials attached to the suggestion. What the environment movement, not just C.E.Q., needs are committed people! Suggestions are a dime a dozen. Its the easiest thing in the world to stand on the sidelines and comment on the action. Few things in this world are accomplished by comments. Why don't you get glass recycling going on campus, is an easy thing to say, but where is the suggestor pricing 55-gallon drums? Where is the commentator spending nights operating a crushing machine? Where is the "interested spectator" when it comes to rounding up a truck and driving it to a collection depot?

We don't live in a television set. To get action in the real world, you don't simply turn knobs. It's work to type letters, file, collect paper, answer telephones, write newsletters, mail materials on request, investigate problems, argue with administrators, schedule events, research a position paper, arrange for a speaker, follow up on public meetings, try and understand regulations, and countless other small tasks required to change the world.

But when you do change the world, if only a little, the personal rewards (because there's rarely a crowd nearby cheering) can be great; a sense of mastery over your fate, a job well done, the sharing of success with other volunteers. Not all attempts succeed, but there is no comparison between failing because you didn't fight, and having fought well. Think about what you are missing in developing your potential when you turn in a superficial suggestion, or "occupy time", or whatever. Maybe passivity encourages passivity, and if the reverse is true, just a small committment tomorrow may lead to a much more satisfying life style in the future.

The world we live in today is the sum of the decisions of everyone in all the yesterdays. The energy crisis, the political mess, the environmental deterioration can lead to two reactions: withdrawal, or a mature decision to do something to improve the world for tomorrow for us and our children. How about it?

Nixon with Pat, slips away to attend special appointee dinner

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon slipped away from the White House Wednesday night and dropped in unannounced at a dinner gathering of several hundred presidential appointees.

Accompanied by reporters, the President and Mrs. Nixon attended a reception earlier in the evening given by Romanian President Nicolae Ceasesuc.

Still accompanied by reporters, the Nixons returned to the White House after the reception.

But about a half hour later, with the press uninformed, the Nixons drove off again to the Washington Hilton Hotel where Nixon's chief of staff, Alexander M. Haig Jr. was the featured speaker at a dinner gathering of top officials of the Nixon administration and their wives, a total of some 350 persons.

According to Deputy Press Secretary Gerald L. Warren, who reported on the presidential outing this morning, Nixon spoke about 10 or 15 minutes.

He discussed generally the importance of the work done by the people in government departments and told the officials that he appreciated their work, Warren said.

Warren said the President and Mrs. Nixon stayed for about 20 minutes at the dinner which has become an annual get together since it was started in Nixon's first term.

Boston State patient shoots doctor in head

BOSTON (AP)-An escaped patient shot a doctor in the head today, then isolated himself in a ward at Boston State Hospital, officials said.

The patient was reported still armed.

The doctor, Gerald Wolberg, 35, of Wayland, was reported in poor condition at Carney hospital in Dorchester where he underwent emergency surgery.

Supt. Michael Nelson of Boston State Hospital said the patient, whose name was withheld pending notification of his family, had escaped from the mental facility Tuesday. Nelson said the patient was not considered dangerous at the time.

Shortly before noon today, according to Nelson, the patient returned to the hospital with a gun and confronted his former psychiatrist. The patient pulled out the gun. Dr. Wolberg, chief of psychiatry, entered the room and asked the patient to come with him, Nelson said.

PREXY EVALUATION is the new thing, this Fall, at Indiana U., where the Bloomington Committee to Evaluate the Office of the Presidency is seeking student opinion.

An editorial in the Indiana Daily Student says "This is the first time in the history of the University such an opportunity has been offered, and I.U. is one of only a few universities in the country to organize such an evaluation."

Sponsored by the Student Association, the evaluation questionnaire is openended. Besides seeking information about personal contacts by students with the University President and the results therefrom, the form asks, "What do you believe the President and-or the Office of the Presidency should be doing?"

DR. HIP OBIT CELEBRATED on west coast, says a report in the Bishop's U. (Quebec) Campus, this week.

The popular mecical column, "Dr. HipPocrates," has been discontinued by its author, Dr. Eugene Schoenfield of San Francisco. The column made its debut in 1967 exclusively in the Berkeley Barb, before it was syndicated in the alternative press and sold to campus newspapers.

Dr. Hip cites as his reason for killing the column the fact that so many books about sex and drugs have appeared that the need for the column has dissipated.

At a farewell, seaside picnic of granola, health foods and "unhealthy" wine, Dr. Hip encouraged his guests to start trying to work out their sex and drug problems for themselves. He plans to write books like the one nearly completed, "Natural Foods and Unnatural Acts", and a screen play to follow.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Libra stands tall for principles even while giving appearance of compromise. Libra is associated with Venus and the number 6. This is the natural seventh sign and is related to partnership, marriage and dealings with the public. Libra is gentle toughness and innate creativity. Libra wins while conceding. Basically, Libra is awareness, a mature kind of realization. Libra pretends in a creative way, is the artist, performer and one who reflects for us the joys, pains and foibles of life.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You may have to revise plans to fit budget. If you take care of details, the big picture will take care of itself. Avoid asking for too much. If you measure and time moves, you emerge with more than you probably deserve.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You get boost from one in authority. Element of timing is in your favor. You seem more capable now of communicating, convincing and putting thoughts into action. Cycle remains high--strive for fresh approach.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Make peace with family member. Be diplomatic. Also, it is necessary to be discreet. Keep confidences. Don't cast first stone. One close to you may fee abused. You have some concessions to make, to say nothing of apologies. Be grown up!

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Money, investments, opportunities provided by friends--these are highlighted. Be selective. Avoid fooling yourself. Eschew wishful thinking. See in light of actuality. Pisces, Virgo persons could play important roles.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): What appears to be opposition is likely to be a favor in disguise. Prestige rises. Legal decision goes to your advantage. Don't shirk responsibility or challenge. Older individual pulls strings for you. Show appreciation in tangible manner.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Finish what you start. Aries, Libra persons are likely to be involved. Reach beyond what appears to be a limit. Spread influence. Advertise, publicize and distribute. Correspondence communication is more important than might be apparent on surface.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): New contact proves fruitful, especially where member of opposite sex is concerned. Leo, Aquarius may be in picture. Check interest rates. Take inventory. Be aware of tax advantages and otherwise. Mystery will be unraveled.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Measure moves. Take time to be sure. Accent is on how others react to your plans, assertions. You don't win by forcing. You gain by explaining, moving back in order to get a more accurate survey. Aquarian is involved.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You put ideas into motion. Lethargy is replaced by optimism and action. You have chance now to expand. Short journey proves fruitful. Popularity increases. Avoid feeling that one who serves you is not doing job. Be considerate of background limitations.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Money position should be taken with regard to fine points. Be aware of subtle nuance, hits. Scorpio, Aquarius and Leo individuals could play prominent roles. Young person may want too much, too soon.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You get pleasant surprise regarding values. What you own increases--your assets could multiply. This does not occur in flash-in-pan manner. Rather, it is likely to be result of careful planning, perhaps plodding.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): This can be a period of adjustment. Strive to uderstand those who appear to have strange whims. Don't commit yourself. Listen and observe. Taurus, Libra persons seem to be involved here. Display affection.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are introspective, spiritual rather than religious in orthodox sense. You will be on more solid footing in 1974 with April indicated as an outstanding month. You attract persons born under Pisces and Virgo. You are somewhat of a perfectionist. You are your own worst critic.

HOUSTON (AP) -- The National League voted unanimously today to move the San Diego Padres to Washington, D.C., for the 1974 baseball season.

League President Chub Feeney made the announcement at baseball's winter meetings after the owners had spent two days debating the sale of the club.

Feeney said the new owners, a group headed by Washington grocery chain-store owner Joseph Danzansky, would have to meet certain conditions set down by the league by Dec. 21.

There had been a threat by the City of San Diego of a lawsuit should the Padres break their long-term lease with the ballpark. There was a report Thursday morning that Danzansky's group had offered assistance to the National League in any possible legal action that came as a result of the move to the nation's capital.

"The move is conditional on certain things that have to be done," said Feeney. "These conditions are being discussed."

He said that C. Arnholdt Smith, current owner of the Padres, had made an effort to keep the club in San Diego, but "his attorney informed us today he would not be able to keep the club."

Football Team Never Jelled

By BILL BALLOU

Two weeks ago last Saturday, Boston College beat UMass 59-14. It was an embarrasing end to a disappointing season, the fifth loss in a 6-5 record that was supposed to be much, much better.

Wins over Villanova (21-20) and Rutgers (25-22) in the early going made the pre-season predictions seem reasonable, and about to be fulfilled.

But back-to-back losses against Yankee Conference rivals Rhode Island (41-35) and Connecticut (28-6) reduced the season to "also-ran" status and left as just academic the BC fiasco.

"I'm extremely disappointed about our 6-5 record," says Dick MacPherson, reflecting on the season. "I think the biggest disappointment of all, though, was having to return the Beanpot to Connecticut.

This is the first time we've lost it since I've been here, and I think now it means a lot more to the players. It's kind of like a girlfriend; you don't realize how much she means to you until someone else starts taking her out. Then all of a sudden she's really important."

The chief reasons for the loss of that Beanpot stem from a weak running game and an inconsistent defense. At no time in the season could a UMass runner be counted on for even a couple of yards. The pre-season loss of Rich Herman, the early-season injury to Jerry Mondalto and the chronic ailments Bob Wolfe had all year pretty well decimated the ranks of the running backs.

"After a few games," says MacPherson, "we got the fullback position taken care of, but we never did get anything out of our halfbacks."

The people in the offensive line weren't of much help either. It was no secret that the line would be inexperienced, but no one expected it to be as bad as it was.

"The offensive line never did come around," MacPherson says, "and we never could find a running back who could overcome the problems of the line."

A pre-season injury to Walter Parker and a knee injury to Gary Mika left Bill Wolfe the only healthy tight end. Mika played hurt, and Wolfe improved as the season progressed, but the tight end position was never quite right.

The defensive problems were even more of a mystery than the offensive ones. UMass had four all-conference choices on defense (end Ed McAleney, also a third team small college All-America, end Tom Bradshaw, linebacker Dennis Kiernan, and cornerback Bob Parrott) but as a unit things never came together.

"I was really disappointed in our defensive line," MacPherson says, "we thought it would be much better than it was. Bradshaw got hurt and that hurt us quite a bit.

We weren't as strong at linebacker as we thought we would be and we just never found a guy who could replace John Healy."

Along with Healy, according to MacPherson, went the confidence of the linebackers and the rest of the secondary.

"The linebackers kept worrying about what was going on behind them," he says, "and the other people in the defensive backfield worried about doing two jobs instead of just worrying about their own."

MacPherson is pleased with the way something went--the kicking game. "Our kicking was just fine," he says, "but we've got to do something about our punt protection. There was just too much pressure on Andy Dutkanicz."

Dutkanicz did have a fine season, averaging almost 39 yards per punt, but had several blocked or partially blocked. UConn did the major part of their offensive damage on two plays where the punt protection broke down.

"We also need improvement," MacPherson says, "on our field goals and PAT's. Gret Sprout might be the man, but we're not sure of it yet." Sprout, John Ames, and Dutkanicz all had their foot in it at one time or another, with Sprout being the most effective.

In a season filled with valleys, the high point, MacPherson thinks, was the Rutgers game. At the time it appeared as though it would send the UMies on their way. However, nothing of the sort happened and the game turned out to be the one that sent a previously undefeated Rutgers team plummeting to a 6-5 record.

"I really believe we'll be a more cohesive unit next season," says MacPherson looking ahead.

They'll have to be. This season showed how far six individual all-stars will get you.

Christmas Gifts

This being my last column of the semester, I decided to give Christmas presents to those connected with sports at UMass.

Let's begin with the football team. Are you listening Santa? To Dick MacPherson, head coach, a running back would be just fine. Not just any running back. We want to give him the new Tony Dorsett model which must be imported from Pittsburgh. The Dorsett has a guarantee for another three years and could bring national recognition to Alumni Stadium.

And Santa, let's not forget next year's co-captains, Ed McAleney and Dennis Kiernan. Give both of these men fine senior seasons so that the pros will think of them. Each of these combatants were named New England Defensive Player of the Week at one stage during the season. (and also cure McAleney's belief in witches)

Another reminder Santa, is that three of our football players will be working on Christmas Day. Tim Berra, Andy Dutkanicz, and Peil Pennington will be performing in the North-South Shrine Game. Please Santa, with all your powers, make this threesome perform flawlessly for all the scouts in attendance. The Patriots could use a good punter, quarterbacks are always needed, and a wide receiver, return specialist is a double threat.

Moving on to the basketball team, I think I can be reasonable when dealing with you Santa. These men have gone to the NIT three of the last four years and I feel I should tell you what I want to give them. To Coach Jack Leaman - a microphone so that everyone at the Cage can hear what he tells his team during time-outs, not just those sitting behind the bench. To Jim Burke - a free six-pack for his performance last Saturday night. To Al Skinner - invite some professional scouts to watch him perform his magic, and also allow him one free dunk in every pre-game warm up. To Peter Trow, our three sport athlete, the Purple Heart. He deserves it for all his efforts. To Bill Endicott - three hundred dollars to be paid by Charley Finley for growing that mustache.

As far as the hockey team goes, please give Chick Rheault a suit of shining armor to be worn while playing goal. Give John Binkoski a shutout in a varsity game. And give Coach Caniff Jim Coleman for one more year.

It would be a big mistake, Santa, if I were to forget giving gifts to my fellow Collegian sports-staffers. So here goes: to Walt Powers - a big assist so he can score in his new endeavor. Unfortunately, Santa, I have some bad news at this point. Dave Eibel should not get a present this year. Instead Dave should pay Charley Finley three hundred dollars for shaving off his mustache. (this will also help Finley pay Endicott) But now back to the subject of giving.

To Steve Crowe - the rights to cover day-by-day the many misadventures of the Pittsfield Rangers. To Steve DeCosta - a new beard. To Mike Brophy - five hundred business cards with the words, "Mike Brophy - Morning Sports Editor" on them. To Bill Ballou - the rights to collaborate on a book spanning the career of Marcel Paille. To Earle Barroll - a lifetime scholarship to UMass. And last but not least Santa, to Marty Kelley - reserve a room at the Mass. General so he can have plastic surgery.

Gymnast Stalk Weak Panthers

By WALT POWERS

The Pittsburgh Panthers are ready to pounce on the UMass men's gymnastics team, but Coach Tom Dunn isn't losing any sweat. Pittsburgh's biggest weapon in this Saturday afternoon encounter will be their ability to put the spectators to sleep.

The team that Pitt brings to the Boyden Gym is the doormat of Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics League. Like Boston State, UMass' opening meet victim, they are undermanned, and boast a team composed almost entirely of freshmen. All indications point to another lopsided debacle, so the fans will have to be content with watching individual routines.

These routines could make this a good meet to watch. "For the true fan, if he wants to see UMass, it will be a good meet," says Dunn. "We will be throwing compulsories at Pitt despite their lower scores."

Performing at all-around will be Gene Whelan, Steve Schudri, and Bill Brouillet. Phil Aubrey and Scott Dicker are set for the floor exercises. Aubrey will solo on the high bars and Douglas on still rings with Tim Beasley on parallel bars. Brian Hassig will take pommel horse chore and Jim Laiosa is set for the long horse vault.

Actually the toughest meet of the afternoon will take place at West Point, where the best UMass freshmen and sophomores will battle Army in a J.V. contest.

As for those planning to attend what looks like a lopsided sleeper against Pitt, take heart. "The essence of gymnastics is not competitive, says Coach Dunn, "it is the gymnast against himself."

URI Blast Matmen, 37-3

By JOHN BOCK

For a change the preseason wrestling polls told the truth. They picked the University of Rhode Island as the number one team in New England. UMass was picked number two.

A 37-3 pasting by the Rams Wednesday night on their mats left the Minutemen with no argument with the polls. It was one of those nights when nothing seemed to go right, but there was a chance when everything could have.

Take the 118 pound match for example. UMass frosh Gene DiObilda caught the Ram's Rich Adham in a five point move and should have gone on to beat him. Instead Adham came back and won by virtue of a riding time point. At 126 URI's Scott Pucino continued his dominance over Larry Reynolds as he handed him a 5-2 decision.

The 134 pound match went to Rhody too as Gary Thunell upended Bob Schab, 5-2. At 142 the roof really fell in. UMass' Russell Chateauneuf was wrestling an old adversary, Joe Savino, and in a head on collission ended up defaulting the match and occupying a room in Kingston's South County Hospital. At the time of the injury Russ was two points behind and really hustling Savino for a takedown. Both men shot at the same time and bumped heads. There was no apparent serious injury but Chateauneuf will be out of action for a while.

At 150 Steve Jabaut is still wrestling himself into shape for the Minutemen and ended up a 9-2 loser to URI's Dave Hovey in the process. The only win of the evening for UMass came as Cliff Blom won a grudge match against Greg Gamon, 10-9. During the match Gamon elbowed Blom in the mouth three times and was almost disqualified.

Captain Steve Benson gave his 167 pound match away to NEUWA Champ Jim Urquhart, 7-4. Benson slipped up on two takedowns and let Urquhart sleaze one of his own in for the final score. Said Benson "I was really mad at myself because the one move I use works every time, but I went for it this time and let go before I was ready. As for the match we had a lot of bouts that could have gone either way."

The 177 pound match was no surprise as Stu Horowitz showed why he made it to the quarter-finals of the nationals last year by sticking UMass' Robin Osborne in 7:10. John Connolly continued being susceptible to cradles by dropping a 16-3 decision to Rhody's Tad Sargent. And at heavyweight Rhode Island's Junior College All American, Ray Miro, lateral dropped frosh Dennis Fenton for the pin. Up to that time Fenton was giving Miro all he could handle.

The Minutemen have a chance to get back on the winning track this Saturday as they host the Engineers of MIT and the Wesleyan University in a round robin triangular. UMass will be going without the services of Cliff Blom, who separated his shoulder in practice Thursday. Also out will be Chateauneuf and George Ireland, who continues to convalesce with his elbow. Neither team is picked to give UMass much trouble. Standouts for MIT are at 118 and 134, as both men placed in the NEIWA Small College tourney. Wesleyan hasn't wrestled the Minutemen in four years, but they shouldn't be too much trouble either. They have good wrestlers at 177 and 190, Harmon and Kowalski. Both men wrestled for New England High School power Wayland High from Wayland, Mass. The meet will be starting at 6:00 p.m. in Boyden Auxilary gym.

UMass Cagers Take On URI

By STEVE DECOSTA

The Minutemen begin their defense of the Yankee Conference basketball crown tomorrow in Kingston when they meet Rhode Island.

The cagers are 2-0 and flying high after an impressive second half against St. Anselm's.

The Rams are 1-1, with a loss to Brown and a victory over BU to their credit.

Jack Leaman calls the game, "probably our most formidible test to date."

URI is led by new head coach Jack Kraft. Coach at Villanova for twelve years (in which he led the Wildcats to eleven post-season tournaments) Kraft has inherited the job vacated by Tom Carmody.

The problem is he hasn't inherited much else. The Rams have only one player on this year's squad who played in every game last year, Jerry Minetti.

What Kraft does have is the knowledge of the game that he brings with him. The Rams, according to Leaman, "play Kraft's 1-2-2 match-up zone. Their defense this season is better than last and they have more discipline on offense, but they will shoot it up there at times."

The Rams are small; their biggest starter is Minetti at 6'5. Minetti will play one wing on 1-2-2 offense and will probably be flanked by 6'4 Carlton Smith.

The point man will be Joe Charles, a player who Leaman calls "much improved" from last year.

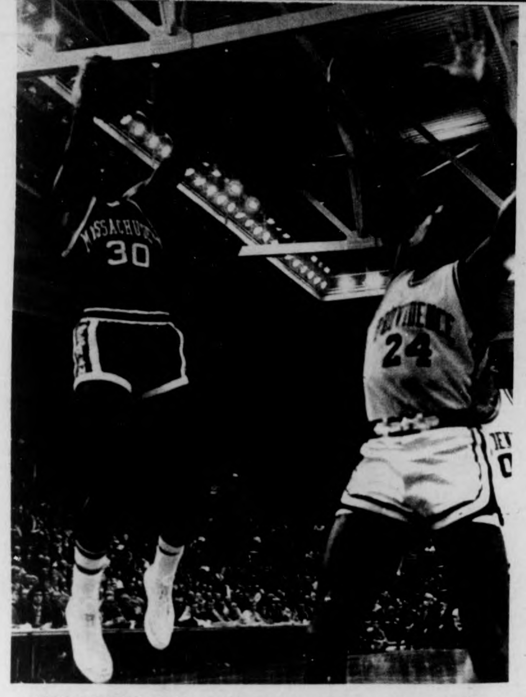
The Rams will use a double low post with Steve Dolecki and Randy Hughes under the boards. Hughes is only 6'3 but is cast in the Al Skinner mold. Leaman calls him "a leaper who can really get up there."

The Minutemen will start the same five as in their first two games: Skinner, Murphy, Endicott, Pitino, and Duarte.

Leaman was pleased with his team's second half performance against St. A's. "We finally got our offense together," he said. "We have played good defense in all four halves this season but only one good half of offense," he continued. "Maybe now we have it all together."

SCHEDULING DEPARTMENT- Having announced last night that West Virginia will be on next year's schedule, Leaman disclosed today that UMass will also meet Fairfield next season in, get this, Madison Square Garden. The series will continue for two more years as the Minutemen and Stags will switch home sights in 1976-77. Fairfield is the only New England basketball power not presently on the UMass schedule.

Leaman said that "scheduling is the key to a good season, but it is a most difficult job to deal with a lot of different in trying to arrange games against teams keeping enough home games to satisfy our fans." The coach praised Bob O'Connell saying "he has done a good job in helping us to improve our schedule."



TWO OF THE BEST--Al Skinner a jumper over the outstretched limbs of Providence's Marvin Barnes. Skinner's jumper will again be displayed in the YanCon opener vs. URI.

Trackmen Bid To Upset Strong UConn, Manhatten

by Scott Hayes

According to Coach Ken O'Brien, tomorrow's tri-meet against Manhattan and Connecticut will be the most difficult meet of the season.

Of course, there's the UMass-UConn rivalry, but the meet is important for several other reasons. UConn has a win streak of 42 consecutive indoor victories, and Manhattan is the defending NCAA Indoor Track champion.

UMass would love to play the part of spoiler by snapping UConn's streak and gain recognition by defeating last year's national champions. Coach O'Brien explained that since there will be such a high level of competition, the meet will "indicate just how good we are."

O'Brien added that he is going to pull out all stops," in an effort to come out on top. This means that cross country standouts Randy Thomas, Bill Gillin and Tom Maguire will see action. Thomas and Maguire will run the two-mile, while Gillin will be competing in the mile. Steve Crimmins, the school record holder in the 600-yard run will also be running. Crimmins is returning after suffering from a sprained ankle.

Manhattan has to be considered the favorite going into the meet. With individual such as Andy Bessette, an NCAA finalist in the 35-pound weight throw and Herman Bigelow, a 7' high jumper, Manhattan has the edge. Other outstanding performers include Mike Keogh, Matty Centrowitz, and Peter Squires. All three members of Manhattan's IC4A championship squad. Squires was the top finisher for Manhattan in the IC4A's, taking third, Centrowitz ran a 4:02 mile in high school. In addition to the fine cross country runners, Manhattan has Tony Colon, the IC4A mile champion, who has been timed in 4:00.2. Ken McBride, the IC4A record holder in the triple jump and Dave Phelan are outstanding jumpers. McBride's best jump was 52' and Phelan has leaped 48' 6".

Manhattan has the outstanding individuals, but will be up against two well-balanced teams. UMass shouldn't be discouraged by the fine statistics of Manhattan, and as Coach O'Brien explained, "We're optimistic about the meet." The mentor added that the team is ready, and he anticipates a close meet. Every event will be close and only 10-15 points may separate the three teams.

Since the teams are strong, the times might be the fastest of the season. The competition will be fierce, with depth playing a major role in deciding the winner of the meet.

SHORT SPRINGS--Squires finished thirty seconds in front of Randy Thomas in the IC4A meet last month. Gillin and Centrowitz will face each other in the mile. In the IC4A's Centrowitz beat Gillin by thirty-six seconds. These matchups should prove interesting on the track.

Pucksters Start Tough Trip

By BILL BALLOU

Two years ago, the UMass hockey team, then undefeated, went on its bi-annial Norwich-Middlebury road trip and came back undefeated. It was an indication of the strength of that team which went on to win the Division II championship.

This year's team has no concerns about coming back undefeated, but nevertheless their two-game trip to Vermont this weekend will serve as a good barometer of their strength.

It's a good thing the Minutemen won Wednesday night. If they had gone north 0-3 chances are they would have come back 0-5. Both Norwich and Middlebury are good teams who would have been happy to take care of what would have been a demoralized club.

Norwich is traditionally strong. They're tough in their drafty, little rink, and this season are expected to be play-off contenders. So far they've tied Northeastern 6-6, and lost to Vermont 11-4. It looks like their problem has been the same one afflicting most Div. II teams — inconsistency.

Middlebury, you'll remember, was the team UMass routed in the first round of last year's playoffs. They lost both games down here last season, and by healthy margins, but two years ago almost upset UMass in their rink.

They're a mystery team, and in recent years not as strong as they once were.

UMass came out of Wednesday night's 5-1 win a much looser club, and much healthier mentally.

The play in goal of Chick Rheault, reminiscent of last year, was a key factor, especially in the second period when the Minutemen suffered a letdown.

Rheault will have to continue like this, at least in the first few games, as the defense awaits the return of Brian Mulcahy and the younger players get their feet on the ground.

Jack Canniff did a good deal of experimenting Wednesday, and at first glance appears to have come up with a couple of penalty-killers who can help. Before that game UMass had been horribly inadequate there, but Jim Lynch and Scott Stuart did a good job, with occasional help from John Muse and Kevin Conners.

The UMass power play, useless against Merrimack, was much better too. It clicked on three of six chances, including the prettiest goal of the year, with Billy Harris hitting an open net after a set-up by Jim Lyons.

Canniff can be expected to stick with the combinations that beat Williams. He'll probably stay with three lines (he had been using four) and will definitely start Rheault in goal.

It's Norwich Friday night, Middlebury Saturday night, and by Sunday morning Canniff should have a pretty good idea where his team is headed.

it's a very personal thing i do that is read by thousands. some agree, some don't agree, some don't even read. but it's there for perusal at whim. and maybe even reaction. or feedback.

you don't really know who decosta is. except for the fact that his picture graces the top left-hand corner of a collection of words that bear his name and are products of his creation on the bottom right-hand corner of the collegian every friday morning.

i am a sportswriter. some might think that i have degraded myself in my choice of topic. why not news. why not the political process. why not the perils that face the world. why sports.

the sportswriter is a fan. i am a fan. but i don't live and breathe my choice of pastime. i simply do and enjoy.

i have an advantage over other fans. i have a working dialogue with players and coaches. but that is all. my opinion matters little. and my writing ability can be debated until the end of time. and no two people will have the same regard for the style. nor should they.

for sport is not a matter of style. red smith, ray fitzgerald and yes, even steve decosta have a style. but what can a style impart.

sport is a matter of people. from the best athletes to the worst. the most knowledgeable fan to the most ignorant. the most articulate writer to the obvious hack. the paunchy fifty-year old sitting in his living room on Sunday afternoon trying to regain his lost virility to the football widow whose only excercise is running up and down the stairs. they all figure in sport.

but sports is not that silly metaphor. it's a great line for hacks. and sociology professors. but it just doesn't hold.

in fact, sports is the antithesis of life. it is the escape sought by many. it is the chance to identify. to be someone else for a second. a play. or a game.

it is a chance to regain the elusive lost youth. to change gate. to admire what someday will transpire.

it is a chance to be yourself. to show your brilliance in participation, and not having to be ashamed, although many are, for a less than superb performance.

it is a chance for a writer to put everything together. to report. tell just what he's seen or heard, or heard about. a chance to put words into meaningful order to turn an unseen event into a part of consciousness.

that is i. that is decosta, doing the best i can, for myself. and for you. and only hoping i can do it well.

Make a Note of That...

Moe IS Coming!!!

by Barbara Voorhees

stooge (stooj), n., 1. A foil esp. for a comedian. 2. Moe. 3 Larry. 4. Curly. 5. Shemp. 6 Joe.

Chances are pretty good right now that come the first week in May next year I will be able to tell Moe (Three Stooges) Howard to spread out. And to pick two. In person. Right here at UMass.

Finally, after receiving a flood of letters, phone calls and personal visits from Stooge fans and a number of petitions containing over 2,000 UMie signatures, the stooges over at the Distinguished Visitors Program (DVP) committee have gone and done it. They've invited Moe.

Plans for his visit are sketchy at this point but one thing is for sure. He's coming. For a fee of approximately $1427 and probably for two days during the first week in May.

As a member of the DVP committee and the UMass community I sat through all the smug, stupid shit discussions about Moe Howard's seriousness and his intellectual capacity. And then there was the big question. Is he distinguished? Famous is a synonym for distinguished.

so sad that there was such a big response for a Moe Howard program while other DVP programs receive little or no attention.

But, thousands of Umies seemed to know what they wanted. And they wanted Moe.

This is Stooge country. I've known it since 1971 when I came here to visit and went to see several Stooge shorts at Mahar (AAhaa!) Auditorium. There was a standing-room-only crowd.

Before the films, one of the sponsors of the show went on stage to announce that none of the shorts starred Curly.

Such havoc! Such hissing and booing!

One guy jumped from the audience onto the stage and scrawled, "Fuck Joe! Fuck Shemp! We want Curly!"

across the blackboard. These were not only Stooges fans, they were Stooges connoisseurs.

In October when I wrote to Moe and asked him to come I did it because I knew my friends wanted to see him.

Will he speak on invading the Campus Center?

Being a member of the DVP committee gave me the authority and the free stationery with which to write to him.

When Moe wrote back and said he'd be delighted to come I brought the idea before my fellow committee members who didn't seem so delighted. They didn't say no, but they didn't say yes and there were mumblings about getting more serious speakers.

So I talked things over with Bill Ballou who is my friend, fellow Collegian staffer and the most avid Stooges fan I know. He took things from there with a letter to the editor informing all of the Umies of what was going on. And the Umies reacted.

We are a generation which has grown up in front of the TV set and therefore in front of the Three Stooges.

It was in 1958, when most of us were somewhere between two and eight years old, that Columbia Pictures sold its backlog of pre-1948 Three Stooges shorts to TV. All of us must admit to having seen one or two.

And it was in 1958, that Columbia Pictures refused to renew its contract with the trio, which, although members had changed somewhat, had been throwing pies, picking two and giving five together for 36 years.

The Three Stooges began their career in 1922 as just that, stooges, to vaudevillian Ted Healey.

Or being a Gigolo at T.O.C.?

In 1934 the trio was made up of Moe Howard, who had also done some Shakespearean acting, his brother Curly Howard and Larry Fine. When Curly fell ill in 1946 he was replaced by a third Howard brother, Shemp, who in turn was replaced at his death in 1955 by Joe Besser.

The Stooges began making shorts in 1933 and in the course of 24 years they cranked out 194 flicks for Columbia Pictures. The shorts were designed as curtain raisers to be shown before the main feature at movie houses. On TV they were able to make it on their own.

When Columbia refused to renew the contract there was talk of breaking up the trio. But with renewed interest in the Stooges brought about by TV showing of the shorts, the trio began to receive offers for night club performances and other engagements.

Moe is the only Stooge left who does engagements. He lives in Los Angeles and wherever he goes he brings his wife along. So she'll be here in May too.

Talking to him on the phone last week we asked him if he'd like to do some other dates in the Boston area when he's out here in May. He said that was fine with him as long as he didn't have to play Filene's basement.

Or overcrowded dormitories?

Culinary Delights Japanese Style

by Dean Tucker

Dining out can sometimes be just an excuse to get yourself away from the stove, but usually anything you can eat in a restaurant you can cook at home.

Goten of Japan, Rte. 116, Sunderland is not the kind of place that makes dining out a substitute for the kitchen. It is a cultural experience as well as a haven for people who are looking to please their palate.

The dining experience at Goten of Japan begins with a cocktail in the lounge. For those who like specialty drinks, there are several to choose from...all made from Japanese spirits. And all quite potent. There is also Japanese beer.

After drinks you are escorted into Goten's dining room and the hints of authentic decor seen in the lounge are in full bloom here. The walls are covered with watercolors that depict Japanese history. The lighting is intimate and the tableware is class. The atmosphere is a bastion of elegance, good taste and warmth.

After being seated, you are served Japanese onion soup and a green salad with a house dressing conceived by the head chef, Shindo.

The menu consists of several varieties of beef, chicken and shrimp. All dinners are seven courses. The cooking of your meal is done at a hibachi that is part of the dining table.

After soup and salad your personal chef appears with a wagon full of food. Shrimp for a hot appetizer, then steak, chicken or shrimp for an entree. All entrees are cooked with piles of fresh mushrooms, noodles and vegetables.

The entree is placed on the hot grill, and as the food begins to cook the chef becomes a whirling dervish, hands afly with spices, herbs, sauces, and knife preparing the food for bite size eating.

The raw ingredients become a culinary delight at the hands of the chef. You applaud, then eat. Delicious.

This is usually enough to fill even the most ravenous diner, but there is still the traditional green tea with a dessert of sherbert, ice cream or fresh melon. Then perhaps some Sake or a liqueur.

Goten has been crowded, weekends, since it opened a month ago. Friday and Saturday diners are advised to make reservations early. For those who prefer smaller crowds, week nights (Goten is open seven days), are better.

Goten also serves lunch from 11:30 'til 2:00. A meanu of unique Japanese treats is moderately priced.

On a typical UMass budget, Goten is not an every week affair, but for the few times a semester you can afford fifteen or twenty dollars for a date, it is easily one of the best dining trips you can take in the area.

Time: A Preoccupation With a Perspective Phenomena

by Carol MacBaren

We as students, and as people in general, almost all seem to share one thing in common, and that thing is time.

Almost from birth, we have this obsession with time ingrained into us. What mother doesn't try to get her baby on a convenient schedule? Then there is the old line, "hurry up, you'll be late!".

Being surrounded with clocks hasn't helped the situation any. Wherever we turn, it seems that we are surrounded by clocks of some kind. We even carry our clocks with us for fear that we might be put into a situation where we have no access to any clock, and thus be late.

Clocks are not our only means of measuring time. Calendars are just as popular. Their only major difference being that they measure a much greater unit of time.

Our obsession with time manifests itself in many ways, and has numerous side effects. These side effects are as large as the obsession itself.

First, the manifestations. By observation, you will find that a large number of people are clock watchers. By this, I mean that there are always people looking at their watches or at a clock to see if their class is over yet, thus making time seem to drag out longer than it actually does. There are also the countless schedules that we consult daily. When is the next bus? When is my next class? When do I eat? Et cetera. Calendars are marked to remind us of what we must do on a specific day at a specific time, almost to the point of leaving nothing to occur by happenstance.

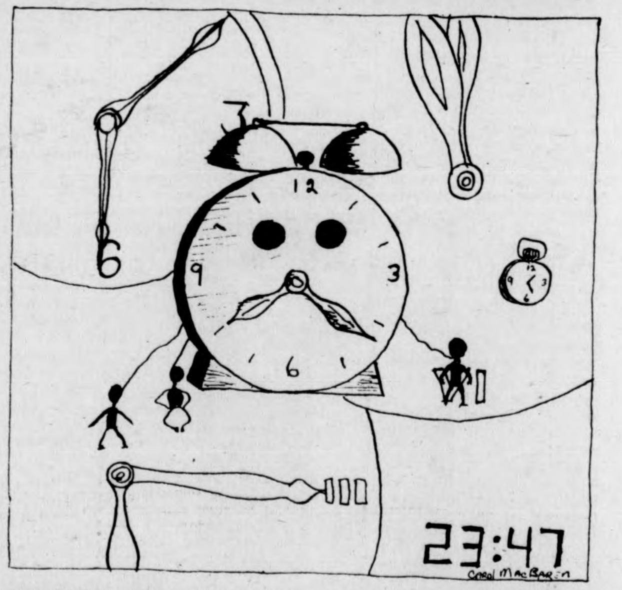
Second, the side effects. Among the effects of time, I think that hurry is one of the biggest. We always seem to be in a hurry to get somewhere, to wait in a line, to complain about the time we are wasting waiting in the line, and what we could be hurrying off to do, if we weren't waiting. We hurry to get there, and hurry to get back. The alarm clock is our tool in reminding us that we have to get up and hurry through the day.

Then there are the deliberate procrastinators who seem to defy time and hurry, only to make themselves more a slave to time than people who just follow blindly. There are other effects, but I don't have the "time" to go into them now.

One of the questions that I find myself asking now, is "what is time?" What is it that we are subservient to? There are theories about time. Theories about time stretching for an object as its velocity approaches that of the speed of light, or that time is the fourth dimension, but what is a concrete definition of time?

Surely, it cannot be the finite divisions by which we measure time. It couldn't be that mechanical, yet we spend most of our lives measuring something that we don't know about.

It is the same out in the "real" world as it is here. But right now, time is our major stumbling block. With less than a week of classes, and finals looming not much further off, we all wish that we had more time. But no matter what we do, or how you look at it, time goes on and we keep right on measuring it and hurrying to beat it.



Abortion

"I Knew Abortion Was Available, So I Wasn't Scared."

by Barbara Voorhees

During the last school year approximately 250 women in some way associated with UMass community went to see Elaine Fraser because they were pregnant. For each of these women, pregnancy was a problem; a problem which had to be talked about and dealt with.

Elaine, who acts as the lone problem pregnancy counselor for the UMass Health Services, estimates that of these 250 women, 225 chose to have an abortion.

* * * * * * * *

Sara is 27 and a UMass undergraduate. When she missed her period a few months ago she was nearly certain that she was pregnant. She was using a diaphragm as a method of contraception and rather than inserting it into her vagina and over her cervix immediately following her period as she had been instructed to do, she waited a few days.

"It was just such a pain to put it in right away," Sara tells you.

During those few days she had had intercourse with her boyfriend.

She went to the infirmary 38 days after her last period. They told her to return in four days for a pregnancy test.

She returned and the test was positive.

"I never had any doubt in my mind that I would get an abortion. There was just no question. I knew without thinking," Sara tells you.

"I didn't want to get married; I just didn't have that type of relationship with the man. Even if I had wanted to marry him I wouldn't have wanted to be pregnant."

"I knew abortion was available, so I wasn't scared. I think that my boyfriend was probably more frightened than I was."

When she first learned that she was pregnant Sara decided to go through with her abortion without telling anyone, not even the man involved.

"In the end though I decided not to go through it alone. I told him and I told my best friend. I never went to my boyfriend to ask him what we were going to do, however, I knew what I was going to do."

The infirmary doctor gave Sara an internal exam to make certain that she was pregnant. She was and the doctor called Elaine Fraser immediately to make an appointment for that afternoon.

"Elaine was a very warm, empathic person," Sara tells you. "The whole thing is a lousy experience but it was very painless, considering. Elaine told me what the whole thing was going to be like."

Sara's abortion was performed just under a week after she discovered that she was pregnant.

"It went fast so I didn't have that much time to dwell on it. I never thought about it as a baby. I don't think of abortion as murder."

She decided to have her abortion in Amherst and made an appointment at Amherst Medical Association, 170 University Dr.

"The people there were great too. One woman stayed with me the whole time."

Sara's boyfriend drove her to and from the medical center.

Besides the usual local anesthetic given to abortion patients, Sara was also given nitrous oxide or laughing gas.

"It made me feel almost jovial. It was a levity most inappropriate to the situation."

"All I can say is that it was a very personal experience. It was very thought provoking and it made me be reflective about life in general."

"Yes, I was depressed. I was depressed both before and after for about a week altogether. I guess it's because someday I would like to have children. Not now, but someday."

Sara no longer thinks about her experience very much. She feels that if she did, it might begin to bother her somewhat.

She no longer goes out with the man who made her pregnant.

Sara believes that there is still a stigma involved with being pregnant and having an abortion and does not willingly make her past experiences general knowledge.

For those women who may find themselves in a similar situation, Sara says, "Don't push the panic button and don't wait too long to do something."

She says that she staunchly believes that abortions should be made available to any woman who wants one.

* * * * * * * *

Pregnancy tests are performed at the UMass infirmary. A woman who suspects that she is pregnant should wait at least 14 days after the date she expected her menstrual period to start, before she has the test done.

A woman may see a doctor before her pregnancy test, but this is not necessary.

Sterile containers used for the test can be picked up at the outpatient department on the first floor of the infirmary. This container should be used to collect a sample of the woman's first urination of the day. The sample should be brought to the infirmary laboratory between 8 a.m. and noon Monday through Friday or before 10 a.m. on Saturday or Sunday.

The report of the pregnancy test will be available after 4 p.m. on weekdays and after 3 p.m. on Saturday and Sunday. The woman must meet with a doctor who will interpret the results of the test. No results will be reported over the phone.

If the results are positive, the woman is given an internal exam by the doctor. Results of a pregnancy test urinalysis are sometimes not dependable; by internally examining the woman the doctor can make sure of her condition.

Each woman who finds that pregnancy is a problem for her is referred to Elaine Fraser, 318 Hampshire House, 545-2661.

Not all of these women will go to Elaine, but she feels that most do; whether they know what they want to do or not. She deals with undergraduates, other women associated with the University and sometimes with women who are not directly associated with the University at all but are pregnant from University men.

Since September she has been employed by the Health Services. Before that and since 1970, she was employed in the same position by the United Christian Foundation.

Elaine feels that when a woman comes to her she has already passed through her most difficult time — that between thinking she is pregnant and having it confirmed.

She finds that problems are most likely to arise when a decision about what to do is imposed on the woman by her family, the man involved or her friends.

"When all of her friends are blase about the matter and tell her that, of course, she should get an abortion, the woman who basically does not believe in abortion and does not want one can be very deeply troubled. The same goes for the woman whose parents tell her that, of course, she will get married, when the last thing she wants to do is marry the man," says Elaine.

Elaine says that she does not persuade any woman to make a particular decision of what to do but is there to talk with and to inform of different alternatives that are available.

"For those who choose marriage, well, we have a clergyman here," she says. And for those who decide to keep their child without marrying, there are other alternatives and other counselors.

And for 90% of those who went to see Elaine last year there was abortion.

On Jan. 22, of this year, the U. S. Supreme Court overruled all state laws that prohibited or restricted a woman's right to obtain abortion during the first three months of pregnancy.

A woman no longer had to go to New York for an abortion although she may choose to. Abortions are performed throughout Massachusetts. They are performed here in Amherst.

In Boston, the price of the operation is generally somewhere around $150 and in New York or Springfield, it is generally around $125. At Amherst Medical Associates, 170 University Dr., it is $125.

If a woman is covered by the University health insurance plan, up to $125 of the cost of an abortion will be paid for by the insurance company.

Of those 225 women who chose to have an abortion last year, Elaine estimates that 135 chose to go to Amherst Medical Associates (A.M.A.) She believes that even more would have gone there if they had been able to get an appointment soon enough.

A.M.A. is not only an abortion clinic. Other offices are located there and abortions are performed only as a part of the gynecological and obstetrical services offered there.

Abortions are performed there only on Tuesdays and Thursdays. Jeannie Jones, one of two abortion counselors at A.M.A., estimates that six or seven abortions are performed each Tuesday and Thursday.

Four doctors from Hampden County Gynecologists and Obstetricians Inc., Springfield, alternate, with one per day offering his services at A.M.A. There is also a staff of nurses.

Before having an abortion, a woman must have a blood test at the infirmary to determine her blood type. If her blood is Rh negative, she must have a shot of Rhogam after her abortion in order to prevent the built up of antibodies in her blood which could affect future pregnancies.

A woman must plan on spending at least three hours at A.M.A. on the day of her abortion. If it is a University woman this will be her first and only visit to A.M.A.

She is instructed not to eat for six hours prior to the operation, to shower before coming, to arrive a half hour before her appointment and to bring someone with her.

The waiting room at A.M.A. is like any doctor's waiting room: the carpets, the comfortable couches and the tables strewn with magazines. Among the magazines are a lot of little booklets on birth control.

A woman who has come for an abortion is escorted to a cubicle where either Jeannie or Pat Green, the other counselor, tell her about the abortion process.

She is then taken to what is termed the "recovery room" where she undresses and waits for the operation. There are three beds in the recovery room and there may be as many patients at any given time.

The operating room is across the hall.

The abortion method used at A.M.A. is called uterine aspiration. The woman lies on her back on the flat table generally used for gynecological examinations with her legs apart in stirrup-like supports.

The doctor conducts an internal examination to verify the pregnancy and check the angle of the uterus. The walls of the vagina are held apart by a speculum.

Xylocaine, a local anesthetic, is injected at the back of the vagina behind the cervix. Although the anesthetic blocks pain, the woman may sometimes feel cramps similar to menstrual cramps.

Nitrous oxide, laughing gas, which gives a feeling of lightheadedness, will be administered through a mask if the woman requests it.

The cervical canal is widened by the introduction of a series of increasingly larger metal rods.

When it has been widened enough the doctor inserts the hollow-tubed vacurette into the uterus until it touches the embryonic sac.

Vacuum pressure is turned on for 20 to 40 seconds and the fetal and placental tissue are passed through the tubing into a bottle. When the uterus is emptied there is a tug on the vacurette.

With an instrument called the curette the doctor goes over the lining of the uterus to insure that all tissue has been removed.

The entire procedure takes from five to ten minutes. A counselor will usually stay with the woman throughout the operation.

A few minutes after the operation the woman is escorted back to the recovery room. That person who has come to A.M.A. with her can stay with her in the room until she feels ready to leave.

Elaine Fraser says that the post-abortion depression so often talked about is pretty much an old wives' tale. She says that most women feel a sense of loss immediately after the abortion but that is all.

The woman will probably bleed for up to two weeks after the abortion with a flow similar to that of menstruation. No tampons should be used.

She is instructed to rest for 24 hours after the operation and to postpone intercourse for approximately 10 days to two weeks.

For a University woman there will be a post-operative examination at the infirmary two to three weeks after surgery.

Future methods of contraception are discussed at every step along the way: with the infirmary doctor, with Elaine Fraser and at A.M.A. where plans should be finalized.

(I thank you, Elaine Fraser, and "Sara" for all your help.)

Street Musicians/ They Stopped At UMass

By Roberta McCann and Michael Allain

They pack their bags and set out from San Francisco in converted bread vans. They leave the Cannery and Ghirardelli Square where street musicians are a common sight. They're heading East. They're not going to need much money. Just enough for food and gas. Between Frisco and Chicago there's nothing but mountains, prairies, and forests. They stop in Boise, Idaho. Idaho's answer to New York City. They play in a small bar to the local folks. The folks like them and give them a few dollars for gas. They think it was worth it.

For Bob Goldstein and Richard Cohen, a couple of traveling street musicians, the word "schedule" is foreign. They only work when they're in the mood — playing on a sidewalk, a college campus, a park — wherever a crowd might gather.

According to Cohen, a twenty-four year old former architecture major at U. of C. at Berkeley, "We're not doing it because we're down and out. We're not here because we can't get into clubs. We're doing this because we want to. It's not like a hard luck story."

They aren't stars and they don't make millions. They've never cut an album, and probably never will.

"It's hard to make a living playing music," said Goldstein who at twenty-six has a B.S. in Business from U.S.C., "but we've found the easiest way. The easiest thing for us to do is make money."

But money isn't their only reward. They are two good musicians, with an ability not only to make people stop and listen, but to clap their hands, laugh, and sing along.

"I can't work without an audience," Cohen said, "We've been in bands before but there are too many hassles. I just want to get people singing and laughing."

And the best way to do it is not in a small smokey club before a drunk audience, it's out on the streets. With street musicians, people have no obligations. If they like what they hear, they can stay. If not they can split. The relationship between a street musician and his audience is an honest one with no strings attached.

"People shouldn't come into a club and stare at the performers just because they paid to get in," said Goldstein, "We just have our own theatre that we take with us wherever we go."

Halfway across the country, their third musician, a guitar-player with his wife and child, splits to return to Frisco. They regret it, but then it's easier to get the gig together with just two. One less ego to worry about. Late summer in Ann Arbor, Michigan. They play the campus for a few days, then move on. They're heading East, to New England — in time to see the foliage. They first see the Atlantic somewhere in Maine. They play in Maine, Vermont and New Hampshire, all outside, that's the way they like it. It's getting cold. They head South. They play Boston for a while. Then Cambridge — a disappointment. Harvard Square turns out to be a newsstand with too much traffic and too many high rise buildings. They head West, stopping at UMass. The architecture is wiered to them — Futuristic.

Last Thursday and Friday afternoon, they played in the Campus Center Concourse. Earlier on Thursday, fifteen minutes into their first set, they were told to move from their impromtu stage between the University Store and the Concrete Coffeepot by Dudly Bridges, the C.C. Manager of Building Operations.

The hassle reminded them of when they were at Syracuse University in New York, said Goldstein. To play there, they had to fill out various forms and pass a complex security check. But Bridges turned out to be very cooperative. A couple of phone calls and Cohen and Goldstein were directed to the concourse across from the Bluewall. A good spot to play.

A street musician has exactly ten seonds in which to attract people's attention — to make them stop and listen — to sit down, clap and sing along. Not too long into their first set, a crowd of about 150 people had stopped on their way through the Campus Center.

In a matter of minutes, the two streetsingers had gained complete control of the ever-increasing crowd.

Bearded, curly haired Goldstein hammered away at an old Gibson six string guitar — jerking, jumping, darting at the crowd, while Cohen stood in the background, plucking away on a stand-up bass fiddle as tall as him, his right foot stomping in restrained frenzy.

They ran through one song after another with little time in between, to keep up the momentum. Songs by Woodie Guthrie, Van Morrison, Hank Williams, Dylan, Jessie Winchester, Creedence Clearwater. It is music they like and the crowd likes it too. Goldstein has written a few of the songs that they sing, one of them called "Money, Money, Money," which, if not too subtlely, tells it like it is.

An old straw hat lays in Goldstein's open guitar case — and he lets you know what it's doing there. He kicks the case after every few songs, and accompanies this with a plea for "money, money, money."

"If you're about to split and your wondering whether to drop a quarter or a dollar, by all means come up and drop the dollar in the hat," Goldstein says while laughing.

A good day's take is about $50 plus maybe an apple, an orange and a joint, and sometimes an occasional handwritten invitation for dinner, a party or a few beers.

"I'm a cheap drunk, a real pushover for anyone who wants to take me out drinking," says Goldstein.

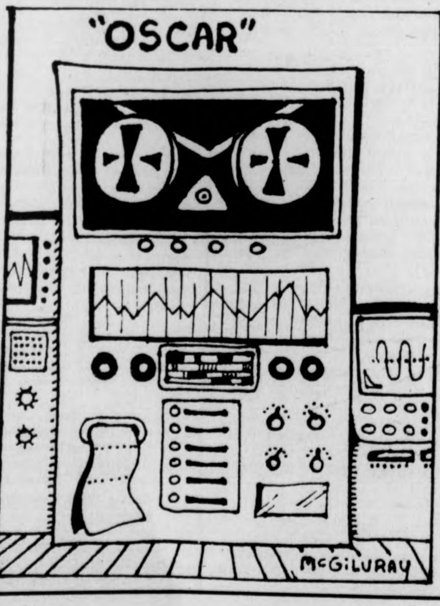
After the first few songs, the crowd is getting bigger and looser. Goldstein, the lead singer, begins teaching the crowd a chorus to one of his songs — and the Concourse level becomes the scene of a good old-fashioned hoot.

"That's what brings people together. Teaching them a new song and having them sing it," says Goldstein. "We've been in buildings that were actually shaking. It's a great feeling. We're very lucky. We don't play lame gigs. Every gig we've done since we left has been a good one. There've been no bummers."

On Friday, when Goldstein was playing so hard he broke two guitar strings, the crowd was so appreciative that it refused to let the musicians leave after their set was over.

"That's the ultimate — when people won't let you stop playing," said Goldstein. "Like today we did four encores before the crowd let us leave. That's great."

Psycho-Cybernetics



by Luis Manuel Medina

Modern psychology has a new and interesting field, that compares the human brain and nervous system with computers and missiles.

According to Dr. Maltz, author of Psycho-cybernetics, the human brain and the nervous system, in the search for goals that could be consistent with the self image of every individual, work as a computer: having the characteristics of both digital and analogue.

What Dr. Maltz says is that essentially all the information we receive through the senses, (possibilities of ESP ones too, are analyzed in our forehead and become data that feeds our computer and any time that our forebrain sees an analogue situation; the computer gets the pack of information, which will be determinative in our reactions and behavior. Also, he says that the nervous system doesn't see the difference between a real experience or an imagine; one called "synthetic experience." That means if you are in the dorm thinking of being at home, if you can imagine vividly being there without forgetting any detail, as far as your nervous system is concerned both experiences are equal. He implies that you can create your own 'synthetic experience to react in the way that you want in the future.

There are some experiences, such as reading or watching a movie, that are considered passive. As Mao Tse Tung had said we learn about the experiences of others or experiencing ourselves. But...

... If we take the university subculture, we find that one of its characteristics is to smoke grass before or while watching a movie. And while we are experiencing ourselves the experiences of others we are creating a synthetic experience. Those anagrams and neurals are being tape, but don't forget, that while watching a movie, most people identify with some characters in the film. Also when a high person is getting off a lot of inhibitions, so in some aspects is like another person...

Then the question is, what kind of synthetic experience are we recording and what kind of data are we giving to our respectives computers?

Most of the movies are based on what we consider not social adjusted behavior, such as; wars, crimes, destruction, etc. In many cases movies are very depressing because they don't suggest the possibility of having a better world.

If we look at James Bond movies, the happy ones have a lot of free love, intrigue, politic, exotic places, supermen, war, etc. Especially in those movies the marvelous agent 007 gets a woman to spend his short vacations with.

In another size, some of the movies that try to show a racial integration are based on the presentation of some problem that humanity can not resolve, finishing with a more depressing experience.

Some examples of that could be: The Night of The Living Dead, Sun Green Bean, Omega Man, etc., etc.

The thing that is happening is the fact that the movies are oriented to wake up depressive feelings and not ones of a feeling of interracial colaboration and success.

Probably that feeling show in the movies is what the author feels about his own society that had made patterns about what kind of people could be the hero.

We must become the literature more scientific and more technical in order to overcome the chaos of this big newspapers headlines about crimes and wars, T.V. news, and then the range of novels, poems, stories, lyrics, etc. that are not good data to our inner computers.

Why not try? Technology is the main support for the global survival if we know how to use it correctly. Why not do the same as most of the American Science-Fiction writers, (Another Jules Verne?), do, be innovative and prepare the people with enough literature data, so that we will not be surprised if tomorrow they say to us there are people of another planet in our yard?

The Eccentric Mr. Greaze Propounds

by Zack Smith

The spirit of greese is upon us. Bob Shoo Bop appeared at UMass and the crowd danced and cheered all night long. Dee Greaze dresses as the true fifties greaser and performs at record hops. He is busy, working high schools, colleges and parties.

Poor Richards interviewed Bob Bradbury of Bob Shoo Bop and Dee Greaze recently. They explained their feelings of fifties nostalgia.

P.R. You both entertain with the spirit of the fifties, is this craze spreading through the country?

BSB: We've been together for 16 months and we find audiences of all age groups and geographic areas enjoying our trip.

Dee Greaze: I find that a wide variety of people are digging the fifties trip, 'cause they can dance and groove, something not easily done with most music of today. Digg it man, ah — Richard, a lot of today's music is good, but who can dance to it? Most dancing happens at night clubs. The groups play current music, but they generally try to get some fine old rock and roll out as that's where the audience goes crazy.

BSB: I know what he means. When people talk to us after a gig, they usually comment on how good it is to dance again. Sly Stone sold millions of "DANCE TO THE MUSIC," a dynamite song, but it's easier to dance to Chuck Berry.

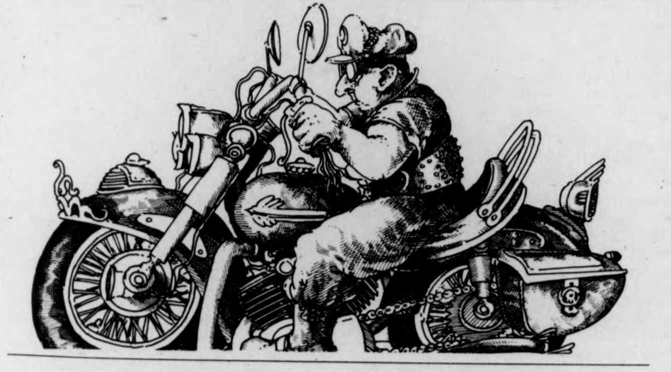
Dee G: I play requests. Over 90 percent of the requests are for fast dance tunes.

P.R.: Many people say they enjoy the fifties because it was a easier time, no Nam, no Watergate, no Nixon.

B.S.B.: They have poor memories. The atomic bomb scare had people building fall out shelters. Also, remember Ike?

Dee G: And crime, they say crime is high now. I can recall the frequent gang wars and general neighborhood terrorism by gangs.

B.S.B.: People had more pride in being American, but the times were hell. The worst thing to happen to parents was for their kid to be a greaser. Give me five men — there were more greasers than political radicals or activitists of today.



P.R.: Drugs are frequently blamed as the cause of problems with youths today. Your trip is beer and wine — what about drugs in the fifties?

Dee G.: Don't forget White port lemon juice — (singing) W-P-L-J, oh, what it does to me — drugs, ha, well, they were not as prevelent as today, but people were still turning on. Marah-waana was really common, at least in my circles. We called it yellowjacket. We would turn on, but nothing like the kids today. Smack and coke have always been available though it's not my trip.

BSB: In terms of experiencing the better highs — for dancing — the beer drinkers dance longer and better than those stoned, they have more endurance.

P.R.: I didn't know grass was available in the fifties.

DEE G.: Ask your older brother.! The difference between times is that we were cool about getting stoned. We kept quiet. In 1963 my friend got busted for growing grass. The local police said it was the first time of grass in town — hell man, we were getting stoned for years. No one carried if not necessary.

P.R.: Back to music; you both draw crowds, why?

B.S.B.: Many people see us as it gives them an excuse to go wild. They can dress again in grease and hear some good music with a show and dance. What is most important is that it gives people a chance to participate in our trip. It is their trip — all greasers get off when they see another.

Dee G.: Digg it man, I always meet new people and get off, our heads are in the same place when we are in grease.

P.R.: Aren't you always in grease?

B.S.B.: Ha-ha, in Philly grease is cool only after 5 o'clock. I doubt if I could keep a job as fifties greaser.

Dee G.: My mind is always in grease, but I guess my dress is early Dylan. Engineer boots and leather clothes are not comfortable. I only put vaseline in my hair when I perform — it is a real bitch getting it out.

P.R.: What were the best times for music, then or now?

B.S.B.: For me, the fifties.

Dee G.: Rock today is much more innovative and deversified. Some of it is great — Allman Brothers, Dr. John, and I really digg Weather Report., Pointer Sisters... but the fifties music was climatic for me. A constant beat, something you dance too. Although many people classify the fifties as one style of music. the variations were many. Howlin' Wolf was miles from Fats Domino, and Buddy Holly never was James Brown.

P.R.: Do you think this nostalgia craze will last?

B.S.B.: I think it will hold on for awhile, but never really die. The people are having a good time. Socially and historically, people continue doing what they enjoy.

Dee G.: Ditto!

The Who Boston Garden
December 3

Things weren't quite there most of the time, but most groups don't even get past lesson one in space-time synthesis. Roger Daltrey's voice was ragged on the edges much of the night; Keith Moon seemed still a bit jet-lagged; John A Entwistle's voice was roaming the edges of sewer pipe. And Pete Townshend felt "fucking incredible".

Buzzing through their multi-glorious past with a quick assemblage of their songs ("Can't Explain", "Summertime Blues", "My Generation", "My Wife") and thence into a puched-up 2/3rds of Quadrophenia, things were failing to fall into place and let The Who take off. With several exceptions, Quadrophenia went down roughly, like uncomfortable new shoes; there was none of the heartfelt changes and painful emotional development that their live Tommy shows evoked. It looked like the monster Garden was going to win a quick one.

Once they were through with 'Phenia, they looked like kids once again able to slip on their sneakers. "Won't Get Fooled Again" was sweet sweet sweet. The climax with Moon kicking in his wonder drum development passages, Daltrey screaming "YEEAAAAAAHHHHH" up through the ceiling and Townshend flying through the air riding that one monster chord, landing on his knees and sliding ten feet along the stage into the PA (all this done in the flash explosion of the newly lit stage) was Prime Who. And it doesn't get any better. From there on it was easy, with "Pinball Wizard" and "See Me Feel Me" (Tommy at Woodstock) tunes reducing the 15,000 to a sea of waving arm jelly.

The magnificence of these four men was unmistakable. Their sheer power which is so apparent on record is only fractional in comparison with that on stage. They were obviously tired and angry over a Canadian ordeal they'd undergone ten hours before, yet they still performed with the utmost energy.

New World Gospel Choir
Amherst
November 18

The New World Gospel Choir from Newton, Mass., presented an afternoon of sermon and song, Sunday, November 18th, at the Wesley United Methodist Church in Amherst.

The Group got off to a late start because of the 50 m.p.h. speed limit and a defective organ, but when the program did start it was well worth the delay.

It was truly a great spiritual uplifting to hear the soulful voices of these gospel singers and it was hard for me to remain seated. They sang, "He'll Understand," "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot," and several songs from an original oratorio. All songs were directed by Mr. Samuel Turner who gave us the historical background of each piece and lead the audience in singing.

The choir was founded about seven years ago in Newton, Mass., by Mr. Turner, who also happens to be the principal of Oak Hill Elementary School. The basis for forming this group was to raise money for student scholarships, over $4000 had been awarded to students in the past year. The group consists of 40 members. They have traveled extensively throughout the East Coast. The choir has appeared on various T.V. programs in the Boston area and have two record albums.

The Third World Organization sponsored this program. The choir performed here two years ago and will return sometime in December. So for those of you who missed this spiritual offering, be sure to see them next month; date to be announced later.

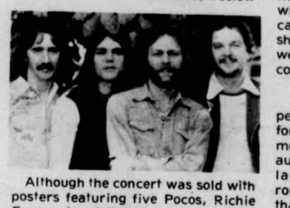
Poco/Chad Stewart
Springfield Municipal Auditorium
November 28

The mistake was booking Chad Stewart with a group such as Poco who has such a strong following around Springfield. But there he was singing his mellow, almost monotonous tunes for the dangerous audience as they screamed for Jeremy, Poco, and, at the height of their madness, for some poor slob named Fred.

Whether Poco was laughing at or with the audience is still a mystery, either way they looked very amused as they finally strutted on about an hour later. They played about an hour and a half of what looked like prefabricated music (remember folks, one definition of "fabricate" is "make false").

Everything seemed to be preplanned, from Rusty Young's little act to their ovation, which involved a horseshoe over head which strangely enough didn't light up until they went off before the ovation. Could it be that Poco's success is going to their collective head? Nothing spectacular, nothing too musically amazing-the Poco Concert at Springfield.

Lorianne Yeslow



Although the concert was sold with posters featuring five Pocos, Richie Furay is definitely gone. Which makes for a shift in many things about the band, foremost being harmony. If you were always put off by Furay's high high voice that did tend to cloy up the harmonies more than a bit, you can relax. On stage, Poco will not miss Furay; they can carry on just as well without him (perhaps better--things are straighter ahead)..

Their thunderous chords smiting the rabid audience and, as always, good times eminating, Poco held up very well. Rusty Young played a sedate first half, but then went slightly wacky, as he played his Sho-Bud steel guitar with his chair, then took it for a mad stroll around the stage (going W E E E E O O O H H H H - - WEEEEEOOOOHHH) all the time before settling it down on its side at the edge of the stage for a little crowd raising.

No, nothing spectacular, nothing musically amazing, but still a solid show with the good stuff Poco is made of. Isn't that right, Ms. Yeslow?

In Concert:
George Carlin
Municipal Auditorium, Springfield
November 15

Carlin's show is always better in person than on either T.V. or records! On stage he is liberated from the verbal restrictions of the former (all words are fair game in person), and the physical limitations of the latter (his facial expressions are as humorous as his dialogue in most cases) He has mastered the art of improvisation, and knows how best to apply it to the "irony" of everyday living.

Before the show, fans presented George Carlin with a dog-tag and chain. The dog-tag merely said Occupation: Foole. The gesture was much appreciated as was the bottle of wine left on the stage by a beautiful, caped, mysterious female. After a short lesson in bottle opening, Carlin went into the routines the audience had come to see.

With the wealth of material that a performer has who has been around for quite some time, Carlin ad libs most of the show. He seems to feel that audience out and then "roll with the laughs". Carlin drifts from T.V. routines to segments from his records that remain unexpurgated, with equal ease. He also enjoys throwing in numerous personal experiences and new ideas!

Unlike most performers (especially singers) who are limited by the need for support by secondary figures, George Carlin is totally liberated from outer forces. Carlin on stage is pure Carlin, and each show has enough in common for continuity, but is also individual enough to insure that each show is something special in itself. George Carlin in Springfield, was as such, and therefore a great show.

The Leningrad Philharmonic
Curry Hicks Cage
November 19

The much heralded coming of the Leningrad Philharmonic, became an enjoyable reality for an enthusiastic Curry Hicks Audience November 19, as the oldest symphony orchestra in the Soviet Union presented an all Russian program of music. The program was a blend of the traditional with the modern, which included the Tchaikovsky Symphony No. 4, Op. 36, the Shostakovich Symphony No. 9, Op. 70, and an exciting and new work by Boris Tishchenko, his Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, Op. 9/29.

The program opened with the Shostakovich Sym. No. 9, Shostakovich's shortest symphony, but one which is exceedingly laconic and melodious. It is written in the style of chamber music that reminds me of the early classical symphonies. It was the fourth movement Largo, with its depth of tragedy, which deserved the greatest credit.

The Concerto for Violin and Orchestra of Boris Tishchenko, was a highlight of the evening for two reasons. The first is because it is this type of contemporary music one rarely hears from the Soviet Union today, and second because it combines the great traditions of the Russian past, with the evolutionary, not revolutionary, trends of contemprary music. The first movement marked Moderato, is in a sonata development form, with rather strict flow. The second movement, Allegro moderato, has pleasing color flourishes, with jutting percussional sounds and striking cadenzas between orchestra and solo violin. The third movement is very Russian, and is characterized by a building tension, which starts in the violins and builds to full tutti orchestra, only to end in an introspective mood. Solo violinist Viktor Liberman showed great love for the work, as did the orchestra.

The audience enthusiastically received this last piece, and after four ovations, Wagner's Prelude to Act III of Lohengrin was played as an encore. It was a fine presentation by the Fine Arts Council.

Coryell And The Repressive Tolerance

In Concert
Larry Coryell and Eleventh House
Dec. 1, Amherst College

That does it! Will the real John McLaughlin please go away? I hereby switch my allegiance from the Mahavishnu Orchestra to Larry Coryell and the Eleventh House. "Those are the headlines, and now the rumors behind the news:" Take it away, Gary!

— Andrew MacKenzie

Well, now ... it seems Coryell has put together a group to beat the best. Coryell may well be about the most technically proficient of all the guitarists who've been labelled "rock-jazz," and perhaps the main difficulty with his last few groups was the inability of the Bronson Wilkinson rhythm section to give his playing a firm groundwork. He still has Mike Mandel (electric piano and synthesizer) with him, but he now has a more powerful front horn ensemble voice in trumpeter-fluegelhornist Randy Brecker, who gave lie to any derogatory connotations that might have come from his previous associations with Blood, Sweat and Tears and Dreams (which he co-founded with Mahavishnu drummer Billy Cobham). Danny Trifan handled the bass duties well, but he also showed his individuality in a solo on "Foreplay." And, he's got the extra bonus of Alphonse Mouzon on drums. I've seen Mouzon four times already (this was the fifth), and he, too, is one of those drummers that is so energetic that he projects himself into the audience through the drums.

Several things should be noted about the concert: Mandel is one of the few instrumentalists that I've heard that can really utilize the Moog, instead of just using it as a limping excuse for an organ tone; Brecker reaches a super intensity on the brass that I've heard in only the very best trumpet players, and he has a choppy, staccato style that meshes well with the rhythms laid out by Mouzon; at no time in the past that I've seen him has Coryell played better or with more intensity and confidence than on Sunday. This is the group that Coryell should have started out with, and goddammit, this is a group that should blow the tops off quite a few lesser groups that have already grabbed the market for this type (or variety) of music, comprende? Good!

Unfortunately, according to the bassist, Coryell's Eleventh House is one of the first groups to be hit by the vinyl shortage, and their first album won't be released until January. I'll wait ... and so should you, because these guys are working on some killer stuff. If you want music that's alive and changing, don't choose inferior stuff — choose the Eleventh House of Larry Coryell. Talent of this magnitude must not be ignored. And that solo that one time McCoy Tyner drummer Mouzon did ... PHEWWW!

— UMan Gomes

Larry Coryell and the Eleventh House made their Amherst College debut last Sunday night, and what a debut it was! Occasionally they sounded uncannily like The Mahavishnu Orchestra, yet I thought they were infinitely more appealing. Sheer creativity, energy, and lack of stage conceit are the words that best characterize the group.

On "Funky Waltz" the band got into some interesting things while the drummer "funkyized" the time with offbeat accents. On "Yen" and "Lolita" the Eleventh House demonstrated precisely how tight a band's sound can be; later songs reaffirmed that. "Theme for a Dream," which seemed to reflect Gary Burton's influence on Coryell, showed that the group also can sound pretty.

Larry Coryell's guitar work resembles that of John McLaughlin, but Coryell shows a tendency to be more lyrical, yet somewhat riffy. On "Gratitude," a solo, Coryell demonstrated his proficiency with harmonics and interesting chords, and his flair for imaginative runs. As far as his solos with the band went, I'd say that he could easily be the world's best guitarist in electronic jazz if he would only stop repeating those silly rock and roll riffs which slow his train of thought.

Keyboard man Mike Mandel was provided with several opportunities to weird out the audience with his synthesized, ring modulated wails. When I say it felt like he was carving out passageways from my ears through my brain, it's no exaggeration. The "tamest" composition by Mandel that the band performed was called "Atom Smasher."

Trumpet man Randy Becker screamed out some lightning phrases from his wah-wahed instrument, too, but it was nothing compared to the electronic shenanigans of Mike Mandel.

One hour and forty-five minutes later, a standing ovation called Larry Coryell and the Eleventh House back for an encore, consisting of an energetic drum solo and one more tune. And so ended Amherst's series of Sunday evening jazz concerts.

THE WILD, THE INNOCENT AND THE E STREET SHUFFLE
BRUCE SPRINGSTEEN (COLUMBIA)

If God proclaimed "Let There Be Music," it is hard to imagine that He would have foreseen that one as slovenly simple looking as Bruce Springsteen could have in turn created the music which he has written, performed, and recorded. Springsteen's second album, The Wild, The Innocent and the E Street Shuffle is a musical and lyrical masterpiece and his back up performance at UMass totally outclassed England's world renowned John Mayall. Asbury Park, N.J. vs. London, England. 'Jazz' folk-rock ... vs. 'jazz' blues fusion. In concert, Springsteen and his five musicians pull out all the stops and play as uninhibitedly as they do inspiringly. Saxophonist Clarence 'Nick' Clemmons dressed in his immaculate white suit does a beautiful job in supporting Springsteen's more earthy style.

Springsteen's style can be described as sophisticated street music. His lyrics paint tangible pictures of people, their relationships with one another, their attitudes toward life, and their emotions. Whether or not he writes of real situations or real people is really unimportant. Springsteen's psychological portraits and perceptions are reminiscent of Laura Nyro's Eli and the Thirteen Confessions. Musically, he seldom touches upon an idea more than once causing his piaces (songs such as "Rosilita," "Kitty's Back," and "New York City Serenade") to evolve. Their potency, the changes in volume, emotional levels, and vocal and rhythmic dynamics is stunning. Springsteen comes off better on record than live if only because it requires several listenings to even begin to understand and grasp the multi-faceted nature of the music which on the surface spans the gamut from acoustic and electric guitar dominated pieces to piano, saxophone, and vocal domination. But Springsteen does them all well and it is hard to imagine that anyone who listens carefully to the music will not appreciate it. It's neither "commercial" (Columbia is somewhat miffed because Springsteen refuses to write a commercial single) nor inaccessable.

In person Springsteen performed his highly innovative versions of "Walking the Dog" and "634-5789," though their resemblance to the same songs by the Rolling Stones or Wilson Pickett was only marginal. The remainder of the show was all Springsteen's own material which seemed to please even the primarily Mayall oriented throng. Perhaps Springsteen's gift is that he can be appreciated even if he isn't totally understood, and the depths and intricacies of his ideas and arrangements can't possibly be understood after one listening, especially in as acoustically limp a setting as the Cage. (Springsteen goes over well in clubs because there his music can be taken as background or foreground, depending upon the whim of the club goer.)

On record, Springsteen brings his street corner philosophies and inspired musical ideas into the living room where they can be heard repeatedly and deciphered, and in much the same way that a symphony or concerto gets understood and loved with listenings, so with the music of Bruce Springsteen. Music which is neither folk, rock, blues, 'jazz', or classical, but a unique combination. Music which can't be catagorized except for its originality and its dramatic authenticity.

FOR OL' TIMES SAKE
ELVIS PRESLEY
(RCA APL1-0388)

Remember Elvis? He's not dead yet, but this album is. He still has that deep, "exciting" voice, but in his search to rediscover fame he tries too many styles on one album. There are the slow songs for the over-thirty set mixed in with pseudo-soul, bad soft rock, and none of that hip swinging music that made him what he was. The vocal group behind him should be shot. I've seen almost every movie Elvis made, I liked him, but I was really glad when the stereo shut itself off after this album.

BEHIND CLOSED DOORS — CHARLIE RICH
(Epic KE 32247)

To all the people who are turned off to the Country style of music, BEHIND CLOSED DOORS will be Country Music Appreciation 101. There is nothing really outstanding on this album but rather a steady flow of gentle melodies that makes you want to make some chicken soup on a cold Sunday afternoon.

You just might forget the name of what's his name after you hear it, but slowly the tune comes back and then the words. It happens when you least expect it.

WELCOME - SANTANA
Columbia (PC 32445)

I must say I'm relieved: For a while there I thought I might have to go to Sri Chinmoy for guitar lessons. Fortunately, this album blows my theory that accepting Chinmoy as master automatically sends the energy of the cosmos tingling through one's fingers. In the case of Carlos Santana the effects seem to be just the opposite, resulting in an album that vacillates between the serene and the vacuous. The one exception to this is a cut called "Flame-Sky," co-authored and co-executed by Santana and Mahavishnu John McLaughlin. This cut is what their Love Devotion Surrender album should have been, even though marred somewhat by a 'psychedelic' mix a la Hendrix, with guitars jumping back and forth, etc., ad nauseum.

"Going Home," arranged by Alice Coltrane, is pleasant, 'Mother Africa' has a nice soprano sax solo, and the title cut doesn't take away from (or add to) the John Coltrane original, but as for the rest of the album, phew! If you could re-channel the guitar to sound like a trumpet it would be all you'd have to change to make a sizeable dent in Herb Alpert's market. D+

CLASSICAL CUT-OUTS

Cut-out bins at a record shop please no one quite the way they do an opera lover, since any small saving for most people means bigger savings for him, due to the number of records involved. Into the cut-out bin gathers old about-to-be-replaced albums, junk that just never sold well and a few labels that somehow don't belong anywheres else. Some are good buys, and the rest . . . Of the cut-outs reviewed below, the first three, if available nowhere else, can be purchased from Rose Discount Records (214 Wabash Ave., Chicago) for $6.88, an $11 saving on the original list price.

Illusions are precious, and the Yehudi Menuhin recording of Abduction from the Seraglio (SC3741) became mortally wounded when it exposed this charming little opera to the death blows of the English language. All the little repeats that sound so charming in German seem ludicrous in well-sung English. Alas, for the conducting is top-rate and the singing is on a high level. True, the role of Osmin, the baddie, is hiked up the scale a little, but in return for this small favor Noel Mangin sings it rather well. Others have done better, but if you can ignore some of the words you'll find this performance superior to the other low-price offering, on the Seraphim label.

Berg's Lulu is to my ear more pleasing than his Wozzeck. The Angel X Lulu (SCL3726) is taken from live performances in Hamburg. The only competitor, on DGG, features smoother and maybe more inventive singing in the lead roles and better conducting, but this cheapy stands very well on the basis of its better secondary singers, decent lead singers and the smoother orchestral sound. The conducting may be a little more conventional, but the price is right.

The grandaddy of all the Carmen's, the Reiner recording (LM6102-mono), is available at popular prices. This vintage album, which can be found in almost every self-respecting music library, has been hanging in there primarily on the strength of the conductor and its leading lady, the famous Rise Stevens. Aside from that, Robert Merrill sounds robust, Jan Peerce can't pronounce French and Licia Albanese, who we all know is really good, sounds anemic. Face it, you'll be better off coughing up your 12 or so bucks and buying a stereo version, imperfect as they all are.

The Urania Der Rosenkavalier (5201-4) and Forza del Destino (5226-3) are highly avoidable. Both are sabotaged by mediocre conducting. Rudolf Kempe, in the Rosenkavalier, never makes the music laugh, or creep up on you, or sweep over the scene. Blah! There are also ensemble problems. The singing is average, featuring a shaky Marschallin, a fairly smooth Octavian, a top-tight Sophie (who benefits by sounding very much like Erna Berger) and the excellent Ochs of Kurt Bohme.

The Forza moves along, never climaxing, never taking off, never inspiring the singers. Some of the soloists are old friends, namely Guisepee Campora, who offers a robust but sloppy Alvaro, Anselmo Colzani, who is tough but tight, and Fernando Corena, who is excellent. The leading lady is a bit shrill on top, and the lead bass never opens up. If you need a cheap Forza, you can get the brilliant Cetra album for as little as $2.98 (try Minuteman Records at Harvard Square).

I can end this list of cut-outs on two happy notes. First of all, the Artia Fidelio (Artia 504-3) is at large. If you want a good recording of Beethoven's exciting, and only, opera, grab this one. The sound is pretty bad, but the conducting and singers are very good. If you dig bad guys, this record is for you, because it features Paul Schoeffler as Pizarro, who is the baddest of the bad. He just oozes nastiness.

Secondly, RCA is junking some of their best vocal gems (only temporarily). For about $1.98 apiece you can pick up "recitals" by Pinza (classic bass performances), Gigli (this is the early, less slurpy tenor), Flagstad and Melchior in duets (supposedly the older versions are better than the new presses) and at least three Caruso records (one of song, one of opera and one potpourri — all superb). Start buying.

I Never Danced At the White House
by Art Buchwald
G.P. Putnam Publishers
P. 249 Price $6.95

reviewed by Frederic C. Weiss

In this topical but timely collection, consisting of 140 of his syndicated columns, Art Buchwald shows us once again why he is considered the foremost political satirist in America today.

In I Never Danced At the White House, Buchwald pokes fun at various American institutions and individuals. When he writes, nothing is sacred. The columns are pithy and humorous. At times Buchwald slips up, and his humor is drawn out; once in a while he drifts into the sea of bad taste.

Yet, Buchwald's columns are great reading. His favorite target in this book is Richard Nixon; and logically it seems that his favorite topic is Watergate. His pieces concerning Watergate are subtle enought to drive tingles of pain up the spine of all the members of the rapidly diminishing silent majority. Since he never comes on serious, and depends a great deal on irony, Buchwald can penetrate the ideology of his readers enough to make the valid points that various other more serious columnists are unable to do.

Buchwald hits Nixon on Watergate, but he doesn't stop there. Reading the book, one is reminded of our junket into Southeast Asia, and the ineptitude surrounding the peace talks that "got us out".

He also enjoys poking fun at Henry Kissinger, and other White House "Silver Knights." While Buchwald's politics seem to be more at home in the Democratic party, you can't assume that the Democrats are safe from his satrical wit. In various pieces he pokes fun at George McGovern, Teddy Kennedy, and politics in both parties in general.

Buchwald is diverse in his topics; hitting apathy, T.V., Women's Lib, the "alienated youth dropouts", and the American passion for dieting.

Yet as I write this perhaps I am getting a bit too serious in describing I Never Danced at the White House. So I'll say little more except that if you buy the book and read one column every night before you go to bed, at least you'll have something to laugh at . . . for at least three months.

The Other Side Of the Stick

Slapshot

Stan Fischler, for all his fame and fortune, is not a good writer. He lives and succeeds on controversy, rather than on his technical skill at the craft of putting words on paper.

So I really don't know why I liked this book.

Fischler was Fischler. Very plain, very verbally unexciting. He's the only man who can write hockey in cookbook prose. Fortunately for him, and the reader, he realizes his shortcomings. He deals, if not in dirt, then in dust. He delights in kicking the pompous asses of hockey's sacred cows. And he does a good job of it.

I feel ashamed that I enjoy reading as he kicks; his whole philosophy of writing is to show that athletes are human. This really should be a given, and exposing someone's humanity should not be such an enjoyable thing to do or read.

Yet it is fun hearing the other side of Bobby Orr. Beneath the golden locks, the quiet voice, and the flashing skates lies a moody, at times immature, and apparently very horny young man.

It's just as much fun hearing the other side of Derek Sanderson, (as if we didn't know), Stan Mikita, Gordie Howe and practically every hockey player down to Dino Mascotto.

But really, it is dirt. And what Fischler's book boils down to is a Hollywood gossip column emanating from New York; for all its entertainment value it is not good journalism, and shouldn't be treated as such.

He tells you nothing new about the game itself, and gives you no real insight into the hockey player as a person. The ones he talks about are players he has a personal gripe with and not much worth much is said about them.

Fischler also talks about how he got interested in hockey and how he came to become a hockey writer. Suffice to say that he was at first a minor league fan and to this day hates the Rangers. He can't be all bad.

But aside from the few insights he gives into the life of the publicity man (which he was for awhile), and the tough existence of the home-town critic, this part of the book is equally devoid of quality.

In fact, as I said earlier, there is very little redeeming in the whole work.

Funny thing is, once I started reading it I couldn't put it down.

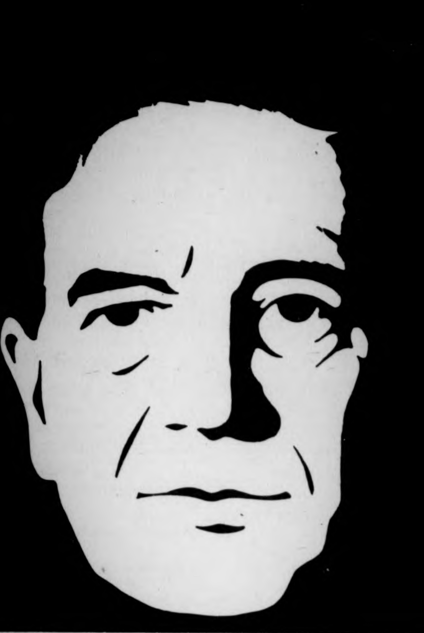
The Long Road To Moscow



Philby: The Long Road to Moscow
Patrick Seale and Maureen McConville
282 pages
Simon and Schuster
$8.95

by Jon Carr

Kim Philby is one of those men who seem to embody the ideological complexities of their times. A Soviet spy, Philby infiltrated the British intelligence service during World War II, eventually attaining the highest level of the service during the post-war years. The obvious enigma about the man is baffling: why would a native Briton, educated in the Public Schools and at Cambridge University and blessed with the privileges of his class, coolly betray his own country?

Mr. Seale and Ms. McConville tackle that enigma in this finely researched biography of the most effective double agent of the twentieth century. The authors, both experienced journalists, have produced not only an exhaustive study of Philby, but a fascinating account of the politics and personalities of the Europe in which Philby operated.

A great number of sources have been consulted in the making of this book. The authors have interviewed Philby's associates — Jim Lees, the coal miner who won a scholarship to Cambridge and influenced the young Philby toward socialism; Ilsa Kulcsar, the Austrian Communist whose organization of the resistance to Nazism in the 'thirties started Philby in his active support of Communism; Col. Vivian, Philby's superior in the British intelligence service; and a score of others.

Seale and McConville have meticulously examined periodicals and books in the pursuit of the truth about Philby. In the investigation of Philby's college experience, the student socialist newspapers of Cambridge and the writings of Philby's professors are referred to. The politically conservative articles which Philby wrote as a London Times correspondent in the Spanish Civil War are quoted as an illustration of the uncanny ability of the man to disguise his true political sympathies. And, in the chapter on Philby's fall from power, there are the Parliamentary debates which raged over the infiltration of England's secret service.

Philby's life spanned the ideological and political turmoils of his generation. He was at Cambridge during the depression-inspired student socialist movement. He participated in the Spanish Civil War as a journalist, meeting Franco many times. In Austria he witnessed the Nazi infiltration, and he was assigned to Washington during the late 'forties, hobnobbing with top CIA and FBI administrators and operatives. Thus, in following Philby, the authors show us the brutality of the Fascists in Austria and Spain, and the incompetence of the British service which made Philby one of their top men.

A damn fine piece of investigative journalism — a worthwhile book to read.

Home From The War

Home From the War
by Robert Jay Lifton
Simon and Schuster
477 pp.
Reviewed by Ed Smith

As the United States enters the post-Vietnam era it has begun going to extreme lengths to forget the decade of war in Indochina. There is an insistent tone of condescension in people's voices when they say, "the war is over. Let's move on to more important things." Robert Jay Lifton, in Home From the War, says that Vietnam veterans are not going to let a fog of forgetfulness envelope the people of America. Rather, he says, they will make an issue out of the war which, they hope, will bring America to a consciousness of the horror of their actions as a country.

The major drawback of Lifton's work seems to be the limited scope of his research. Throughout the work he concerns himself almost exclusively with a VVAW rap group which he participated with in New York City. In comparison to his former work on the survivors of Hiroshima, his limited research appears naive. However, since this book has been out many veterans have voiced their agreement with Lifton's conclusions. It may be that the VVAW is a representative group of Vietnam veterans, but this aspect of the book should be kept in mind.

The sub-title of the book is Vietnam Veterans: Neither Victims nor Executioners. It is an important addition to the title because the veterans throughout the book emphasize that they do not want to be regarded as hapless dupes or as mindless hatchetmen. This, Lefton says, is a leftover from the warrior ethos which has always been an inherent part of society. In Vietnam though the ethos was no longer applicable because soldiers were faced with a war with only fabricated honors.

The soldiers feel their experience can be seen as a "bearing of false witness." They were forced to acknowledge, in the service, their dedication to a cause they could not believe in. Psychiatrists and chaplins intensified this by their bumbling efforts to help the men reconcile the disparity of what they were told and what they saw everyday. In some soldiers this produced a rage, evident in this quote Lifton selects:

"There was a time when the red, white and blue meant something to me, but I can tell you now that a country that burns yellow babies and starves black babies is a blood-sucking whore whose death I hope to live to see."

While this vet's statement may be somewhat to the extreme, the sentiment is representative of the rage the vets in the rap groups felt. As well, Lifton says, there is a similar feeling of betrayal among the American people, though lesser in intensity. For this reason, Lifton feels some confidence in the ability of the veterans to bring Americans some type of enlightenment.

The enlightenment is seen by the veterans as a move towards what James Reston, Jr. calls the "second great reconstruction." Many veterans feel their insight, vis-a-vis their "false witness," will give them the ability of correcting the mistake which led to their experiences. One vet, on speaking on his support for amnesty, said:

"...the only way to do justice to the dead and maimed, to make certain that their sacrifices have not been in vain, is to tell their true story, reveal the false witness they were called upon to bear, and thereby help prevent similar pointless sacrifices of American (and other) youth in the future."

Lifton brings the theme of the body count and the dehumanization of the enemy (i.e. "gooks") but uses these facts not as ends in themselves, but rather as a means to explain the feelings of the veterans.

At the end of the book, Lifton makes clear that he feels the veterans are committed in mind to a struggle, a life long involvement in progress. One vet said, "I'm going to be a Vietnam veteran against the war for the rest of my life."

Confessing . . .

Confessions of the Ex-Prima Ballerina

My name is not really Daphne but if I'd a choice she is who I might choose.
I have no choices anymore.
No choice of cheese or pear or pie,
No, no choice to see the sun or just who I am.
They left me no choice in their world but I will tell you who I was Until they take my pen away.

I feel like looking through the dirty window past the fog which floats around obscuring the thorns and electric light bulbs
'til sometimes I can hardly see what remains of me.
Today the fog has lifted some.

I was born, I know, and I remember well how it felt to leave a floating security to face headlights and diamonds and heavy coldness.
I was tied by leaden feet and I don't remember believing in Santa Claus or noticing my brother or cutting my finger on a sewing box and holding the chunk of skin in my hand and I don't remember playing with Crissy who took offer her shirt in the yard.

Music charmed my chains untied my hair and let me fly.
Leaping, whirling, carried by the sound
I danced.
(extraordinary prima ballerina)
I left Crissy and her dolls.
They flew me to the finest schools.

Mother visits me now each day sometimes knitting here beside sometimes reading me a tale called Harriet the Spy.
Extension cords from her to me are cut as fog comes settling.

I used to know her careful hand escorting the prima ballerina to a world of harnessing exuberance and molding muscles, arching, aching, all-attaining.
Something used to touch me then,
velvet or fire the notes and I merged.
They carried me up and tossed me like dandelion fluff.
They bore me through fields of dew and daisies always leading me somewhere never reaching that just a bit further never reaching that just a bit further.

I remember sitting on the satin wooded floor waiting my turn to escape.
On the brink of a silver slide, twisting and oozing down and down, past teachers and classmates with exquisite grace.

I was sliding beyond them all
Slipping away like a golden fish.
I no longer danced for them.
I no longer bowed to them.
I couldn't look into their eyes
but I could see the eyes of sound,
I could be the music's motion.
They wanted Swan Lake.
Tinseled, taffeted, gossamer pictures,
Neon color-by-number stencils,
Geometrics to understand —
I could not betray myself.
I used to have a man
(he visits on Tuesdays with roses and photos of us pas de deux
when we were in worlds of love and dance when love meant walking on a beach or under covered bridges in the rain.)
How silly and childish it all was,
I am the only mature one now.
My man has left to share other umbrellas with lacy ladies, ladies like lillies floating on foam.

I have sunk to depths below the craters of the moon.
I've been playing in the mud and never will come clean again.

There are flowers on my bed.
There are people in my room.
The real-life-honest-injun-I has left the shell of aching skin to dance the real life dance the real dance life unbound by earthly gravity and tissue and boundaries and floors and ceilings and one-sided mirrors.
They still ask,
'and will she ever dance again?'
They still cry,
'How tragic such a senseless waste!'

Becoming with the music of life is not an easily understood thing and I must leave them in the dimension of tinsel and tintillation and sensation.

They come and take away my pen and say 'Nobody has to guess.'
But I will never be for them a baby blessed like all the rest.

Notes and tones are speaking to me;
Dahlias opening in spring and willows sweeping the earth and the glimmer of the sun on ice.
I am dancing with them all,
I am flying out of now.
Dancing, dancing on in search, beyond what is.

They can't see because my fog spun curtain settles in again.
I am blessed.

But Playing Fairly

Turnabout is Fair Play

by Nat Sherman

Conrad had to straighten out his head. Many things had been troubling him lately. He thought this walk on the beach might help. There was a serious problem developing in Southeast Asia, the ameoba menance of megalopolis loomed larger and larger, the nittering nabobs of necrophilism were everywhere, and he was doing poorly in his writing course at school.

He plodded along the shoreline very dejected, scuffing idly at shells and tossing pebbles at the ocean. His sneakers were weighted and squeaky. A wave had out-manuevered him and drenched his feet. Conrad was a loser.

The world was going to come to an end, but he wouldn't be around after that, so why worry. He'd tried everything, he really had. He was going to get back to nature now, while it still lasted. Conrad told himself from now on he would observe the sanctity of life, be at one with Mother Nature. And only eat vegetarian basic organic grown natural foods, be non-violent, and live in a shack somewhere and kind of get away from it all.

The sea-breeze tousled him playfully, and the foamy white on blue vista of ocean seemed to be curtsying for him. The gentle pure sweep of beach ahead was dotted by nature's winged wanderers. Conrad felt better already.

His approach startled the shorebirds and they took flight. The old Conrad would have tossed rocks at them as they passed over. Instead he stopped, awed by nature's wonders, and watched their flight overhead. To his horror, as he looked straight up, the flight in unison released their payload of droppings. Birdshit! ON TARGET. Conrad was still a loser.

Friends, the moral of this story is: As you wander through life, trying to find your way, never leave a tern unstoned.

Ex-UMie Turned Aspiring Actor

A Mind Rooted In Fantasy

Editor's Note:

Carlos Anderson left UMass' theatre dept. without a degree in hopes of becoming a star without it. Here is an account of what happened to him so far.

by Carlos Anderson

VOICE: Well Carlos... well, well, well. So I see you still have your mind rooted in fantasy.

CARLOS: Oh come on now. I wouldn't go so far as to say all that. (pause) I... I'm simply gripped by this unshakable desire (pause) (pause) I think it has me by the throat.

VOICE: Desire then. I submit. I'll play your little game. What call you this desire, Carlos?

CARLOS: To be a star.

VOICE: Really now, Carlos. (laughing now) A star!

CARLOS: Oh, not a star. I mean, I didn't mean it like that. My goodness, I even hate that term. I don't know why I use it.

VOICE: Yes, it was quite tacky... to say the least.

CARLOS: What I meant was, that it is my desire to be an actor. An outstanding talented one. And one who's...

VOICE: Who's what Carlos?

CARLOS: Well, to be honest...

VOICE: Please.

CARLOS: ... one who is known, and working, and signing autographs, and making all that money I hear they're paying people of my talents.

VOICE: Quiero mucho dinero, hungh?

CARLOS: Yeah! Of course I want a lot of money. Doesn't everybod'... Hey! I never knew you spoke Spanish.

VOICE: Oh come now, Carlos. Don't be ridiculous.

CARLOS: (thinking to myself) Well I didn't.

VOICE: I heard that!

CARLOS: Yeah, sure... I guess you would.

VOICE: Of course. (pause) (pause) Carlos?

CARLOS: Yes.

VOICE: Leave Amherst. Don't register for the next semester at U.Mass.

CARLOS: But I've got a year and a semester to go yet before I gradu...

VOICE: Hush up man, and listen. You making headlines at U.Mass? Is your name in lights in Amherst? (pause) You got a reserved seat at the Top of the Campus? (pause) (pause) Well?

CARLOS: Well, no. But this is school. The degree trip. I'm making the best of it. Esther Terry is good and I'm being advised by Jim Young, and...

VOICE: And,,,it's not such a big thrill, is it? I mean, you still have this thing that's hungry?

CARLOS: Yes... yes I do (pause) So I should leave then?

VOICE: Yes. As I was saying.

CARLOS: And go?

VOICE: To Paradise, Carlos. To your heaven. (pause to build the suspense) To New York City, man!

CARLOS: Wow! New York City. I've dreamed that...

VOICE: It's time to quit dreaming man. Take up thy bed and walk! Go! Satisfy your itch.

CARLOS: Gee! I'd love to... if only (pause) (pause) I'll... I'll be alright in the city? I mean, I'm from Minnesota you know, and I hear New York is so sin'...

VOICE: I'm more than sure you'll manage Carlos. (pause) Besides, I'll keep my eye on you. (pause) Go.

CARLOS: Then, thank you very much. Don't mind if I do. (pause) Thanks a lot, Lord.

VOICE: It's cool, my child. It alway is. Amen.

CARLOS: Amen.

After my preceeding conversation (with You-Know-Who) I said good-bye to my friends, my professors, my classes; my books. I took a last, long (theatrical) look at my past areas of glory — Bowker Auditorium, Bartlett Stage, and the tiny Studio Theatre. I had known happiness here.. Now, though, a new and more demanding frontier awaited. The mist in my eyes cleared as a knowing twinkle took its place. Broadway, T.V., Movies... Here I come. Prepare thyself!

I've been here, playing the part of the starving, struggling actor now, for eleven months. I've had my ups and downs of course (mostly downs, but not totally). I've been cast and signed to the part of Dr. Max Lewis, in an upcoming radio soap-opera, 'Sounds of the City', to be aired in 78 cities after the first of the year, (I knew somebody, who knew somebody, who knew a producer, who I finally hassled into giving me an audition) and yesterday I made $70.00, for a five minute reading on another radio special for Avon Cosmetics. I was the only 'no name' actor in the casting. I almost passed away when the 'names' started walking in. Ruby Dee, Ossie Davis, Roxy Walker, Robert Guillium, and others were my co-actors. Everybody knew everybody. Nobody knew me. I worked my tail off to be sure that this initial introduction was favorable. Ruby said I was unbelievably real as the African voice I portrayed, when we were finished. That's good enough for me.

In the back of my mind, though, is the haunting, seduction of a calling to me: the stage, the stage Radio is fine baby, but reading into a microphone is something short of acting really. Broadway, is still just a place I go to see a play; television and movies are pieces of film that use people I now know (but I don't see me). I've been meeting the stars, the paid talent, and that's always nice. Sort of.

VOICE: Well, Carlos. What do you expect? You've not been out here hustling quite a year yet.

CARLOS: Come on now. Let's not go through all that again.

(scene 1. catch 22)

"You have your equity card with your buddy?"

"I don't have one yet, sir."

"Then you can't audition, kid. This play's no different from most. It's equity. No card; no trying out. Get your card."

"How do I go about doing that?"

"Get into something that's equity, pal."

"But, you just said that to do anything that's equity I had to have an equity card."

"Right kid."

"So, in other words, to do equity work — I have to have an equity card, while in order to get an equity card — I have to have done equity work?!"

"Right kid. Them's the crumblin' cookies." (then grinning with eyebrow lifted Vic Mature fashion) "Kid." (pause) "You could go out and screw a producer." (big laugh).

(After the laughter has subsided). "Sir?"

(Still somewhat tickled with himself). "Yeah, kid?"

"Are you a producer by any chance?"

"Hell no, kid. Why?"

(Pause). "Just wondering, sir."

I had known from the beginning, it would be a rough-tough row to hoe here. I don't think, though, that I realized how rough and tough. It was, in fact, kind of scary. Scarier still, was the fact that I was finding myself missing my books, my lectures, my exams, the good old Student Union movies and... and this is what really shook me... my mental picture of the interior of Quick Silver even looked good.

At this depressing point in time, I decided that I must not give up the ship. I must perform. I must! I decided to attent a 'cattle call' to lift my spirits. I had no idea as to the reality of my brilliant idea. 'Cattle calls' are what you know at U.Mass as auditions. They are appropriately named here, I must say. They are about as alike as University auditions, as say, Godferry Cambridge and Julie Andrews. At least 300 trying actors attend. At least 50 are after the part you want. Of the 50, 30 look just like you, same height, weight, coloring, and features. All of you talk alike and probably have the same acting potential range. Talk about an identity crisis — New York City actors must have coined the phrase. Oh. Wait a second. It's finally my turn.

(audition take No. 213, for the role of...)

"Yes Mr. Anderson. What will be your audition material?"

"The defense attorney's summary speech from, 'The Trial of the Catonsville Nine'. I performed it at the University of Massachu..."

"Of course. Get on with it please."

"Yes, right." (pause, clear throat) (calm yourself, now. O.K.? Give it to 'em baby!) "Ladies and gentlemen of the jury. Undoubtedly, a great measure of personal reflexion is required, even to begin to appreciate..."

"Thank you, Mr. Anderson. That'll do. Next!"

ADAM'S RIB

Of all the Katherine Hepburn-Spencer Tracy films, this is the best. Hepburn plays a female lawyer who chooses to defend a woman accused of attempting to murder her husband, Tracy plays the lawyer for the prosecution. The wife, played by Judy Holliday, caught her husband, Tom Ewell, in a hotel room with another woman, Jean Hagen. There are few other Hollywood comedies that are better cast. Hepburn and Tracy fight magnificently both in and out of court; she attempts to wear down his stolid personality through sheer nervous persistance. The script by Garson Kanin and Ruth Gordon is abundantly clever and the direction of George Cukor sparks with cinematic ingenuity usually not associated with his work. The courtroom antics of the principals brings to mind the similar political maneuvers of the Chicago Seven some twenty years later. Student Union Ballroom, Tuesday, 12-11, 9.

A DELICATE BALANCE

The American Film Theater's production of the Edward Albee play, with Katherine Hepburn and Lee Remick. Directed by Tony Richardson. Academy of Music, Northampton, Monday and Tuesday 12-10 and 12-11.

BRINGING UP BABY (1938)

Katherine Hepburn's performance in Howard Hawk's comedy and in "Holiday" marks her peak as a comedianne, and one probably will have to search very far to find a funnier film. This screwball comedy concerns the exploits of Hepburn as a hieress intent upon snareing an absent-minded paleontologist, Cary Grant. He has acquired the bone needed to complete his dinosaur skeleton, her dog steals it on him. Hawk's direction plays all the absurd pratfalls with a style that suggests the best of the silent comedies. The rapport of the leads has an irresistable spontaneity and charm. Peter Boganovich recently attempted a flattened-out remake called "What's Up Doc?" which looks sickly when compared to the original. The supporting cast includes May Robson and Charlie Ruggles. Student Union Ballroom, Tuesday, 12-11, check ad for times.

CASABLANCA (1943)

One of Hollywood's best loved films is a fine example of the craftmanship of Warner Brothers in the early Forties, although it went into production with only a small portion of a completed script and was written as filming went along. By any measure the witty dialogue of Howard Koch and Julius J. Epstein is without par and Michael Curtiz's sleek direction never overplays the melodrama of the somewhat soppy central story. Rick, a cynical American loner, runs a nightclub in neutral Casablanca during the War. He is asked to help a leading French Resistance leader escape to America, the wife of whom he had an affair with in Paris before the war. The calculated cynicism of Humphrey Bogart as Rick makes for his best-known role and Ingrid Bergman has never been more mysterious or lovelier. The supporting cast includes Sidney Greenstreet, Paul Henreid, Peter Lorre, and Dooley Wilson who sings the memorable "As Time Goes By". This film stirs audiences like few others; it won Oscars for best picture, director, and screenplay. Student Union Ballroom, Sunday, 12-9, 8:30.

CHLOE IN THE AFTERNOON

Eric Rohmer's final moral tale has a pleasant dream sequence when its slightly mischievous hero daydreams of his possible sexual conquests, but the central thesis of his affair with an unpredictable young Frenchwoman is too slight and cute for all its wordy philosophising. Rohmer's visual style is simple and unobtrusive, it is easy to understand why it can be confused for accurately portraying real situations. His dialogue is preachy and turgid: people speak simply do not have every day conversations that sound like updated Balzac. Rohmer's gift is naturalism, but he's plagued with a moralistic Catholic background that makes his clarity sink like an anchor. Academy of Music, Northampton.

KING OF HEARTS
& JASON ROBARDS
A THOUSAND CLOWNS

GOODBYE COLUMBUS (1968)

An updating of Philip Roth's adolescent romance of the Fifties applies values of one decade to another, and it all doesn't work. Larry Peerce directs in a very slick manner; his actors are tolerable, Richard Benjamin and Ali McGraw have the leads. There is, though, a obnoxious wedding sequence. Student Union Ballroom, Friday, 12-7, 7, 8:45, and 10:30.

HEAT (1972)

Paul Morrisey and Andy Warhol's treatment of contemporary Hollywood themes. Paul Morrisey recently commented that the leading character of Joe is based loosely upon that of Johnny Crawford, the child star of "The Rifleman". In this film Joe is handsome young actor who is out of work and attaches himself to an aging Hollywood actress; their affair is turbulent. The central story line is more pronounced than in any of Morrisey-Warhol's films and it tends to inhibit the genuine spontaneity of the situations which so distinguishes the work of this team. The film is especially fine in its early sections, but lags when the story becomes repetitive. The film, shot is 16 mm. was blown up to 35 mm. for commercial viewing and all the characters, save Joe D'Allesandro, look as if they are suffering from beri-beri. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

HEAVY TRAFFIC

Ralph Bakshi, the writer and director of "Fritz The Cat" put together this brave, unique, and dark cartoon feature about life in New York City. It is, at times, desperately funny, at other moments, offensive and brittle; but portrays the horrors of urban life with a piercing sensitivity. Calvin Theater, Northampton.

HORSEFEATHERS (1933)

The Marx Brothers go to college. Thompson 104, Friday, 12-7, 7, 8:15, 9:30, 10:45.

KING OF HEARTS (1965)

Philipe De Broca's lovely fantasy about the fallability of war set in a town inhabited, for a day, by mad people. De Broca has a gentle, mimelike way with comic situations and his performers are delightful. With Alan Bates. Amherst Cinema, Amherst.

L'AMOUR

Paul Morrisey's delightful little film concerns two American hippies who go to Paris and become hip. They are befriended by two homosexuals who are at the tail end of their affair. The film chronicles the four's interrelationships and is at times absurd farce, at other times, touching and deeply moving. Morrisey's ear for dialogue has few equals in film today and his actors work extremely well within the limited construct of the story. Ignored by most critics and theaters, the film also captures the slightly uncomfortable feeling that being abroad brings upon an individual. A great theme song, "Hopelessly Stuck On You," is sung by Cass Eliot. The Globe, Northampton.

LOVE HAPPY (1949)

The Marx Brothers in their least happy film. Mahar, Saturday, 12-8, 7, 9, 11.

ONLY ANGELS HAVE WINGS (1939)

The lives and lives of the pilots of a small commercial airline in Latin America. Of all the Howard Hawk's films concerned with aviation, this is the loveliest and it wavers nicely between romance and adventure. With Cary Grant, Rita Hayworth, and Jean Arthur. Hampden Dining Commons, Sunday, 12-9, 8.

THE PHILADELPHIA STORY (1940)

Although Katherine Hepburn has never been lovelier and James Stewart more likeable than in this transcription of Philip Barry's elegant comedy, this is hardly the great comedy it is often cited as being. Hepburn's beauty is gemlike, but the hardness and bite have been watered down. Again she plays a madcap hieress who on the eve of her second marriage finds herself indecisive and attracted to two other men. One, her former husband, is played with ease by Cary Grant. The comedy is the last of its kind; the social attitudes and manners of the rich were assimilated into the mainstream of American culture during the Second World War and the preoccupation with their manners and wealth was lost in the process. It was beginning to wane here. Barry, who drew the lines between classes with clarity and honesty in "Holiday" some two years earlier, offers only a synthetic echo here. George Cukor's direction is handsome and the opening sequence is classic, recalling the best of the screwball comedies of the Thirties. James Stewart is perfect as the bumbling photographer sent to Newport to photograph the wedding. It won him an Oscar and a New York Film Critics Award. Student Union Ballroom, Tuesday, 12-11, check ad for time.

PSYCHO (1960)

Alfred Hitchcock, at the peak of his maturity, filmed this black horror story that puts its audience through one of the most terrifying experiences they may ever experience in a theater. A young woman, named Marion Crane, runs off with $40,000 of her boss's money and stops for a night in a motel run by an agreeable, meekish young man named Norman Bates. The great twist in the story is played with merciless detail. Hitchcock takes what could be a crass and unagreeable little story and makes it a tremendous vision of a world without moral order or reason. Anthony Perkins and Janet Leigh are featured. Lecture Room One, Amherst College, Friday, 12-7, 7:30 and 10.

REBECCA (1940)

Hitchcock's first Hollywood film is this splendid adaptation of Daphne DuMaurier's popular gothic romance. A young woman falls in love with a mysterious man she meets at an expensive resort in the South of France. She becomes his second wife and moves to his huge mansion on the British coast. There she is haunted by the memory of his first wife. Joan Fontaine protrays the confusion and frailty of the young girl quite nicely and Laurence Olivier is adept at portraying the mysterious man she marries. Hitchcock has some splendid sequences, such as when Judith Anderson prompts Fontaine to suicide, and elicits a bravura performance from George Sanders as the repellent young blackmailer. Lecture Room One, Merrill Science Center, Amherst College, Staurday, 12-8, 7:30 and 10.

Hoopsters, Skaters Win Big On Road

Skinner, Duarte Shine At Rhody

By STEVE DeCOSTA

The Minutemen began their defense of the Yankee Conference basketball crown in convincing fashion Saturday night with a 73-59 whipping of the URI Rams.

UMass ran off nine straight points at the start, and never allowed the Rams to get within less than five for the rest of the night.

A relentless man-to-man defense held URI scoreless for the first four and a half minutes, and allowed the Rams to shoot only 17% from the field for 18 points in the first twenty minutes.

But the Minutemen also stalled in the first half, scoring only 23. UMass was plagued by turnovers and fouls, giving the ball to the Rams on ten occasions and being outshot from the foul line, 15-2.

The UMass centers alone amassed eight personals in the first half. Starter John Murphy picked up his third foul midway through the period and was replaced by freshman Steve Mayfield who collected four in less than ten minutes. John Olson then took up the slack in the middle and picked up a personal of his own in the process.

But the second half was all Minutemen as the pace picked up and the Rams were burned. Murphy came back to the floor, played the entire half without another foul, and collected 14 of his 16 points.

Al Skinner was once again the individual scoring and rebound leader for the Minutemen with 21 points and 12 caroms. Skinner shot an incredible 80% (8 for 10) from the field and drew ooh's and ah's from the partisan Rhody crowd with his patented drives to the hoop and several sensational one-handed rebounds.

Bill Endicott also finished in double figures, garnering 16 points.

But the most impressive performance of the night was turned in by Greg Duarte. Though plagued by foul trouble which kept him on the sidelines for much of the action and saw his early disqualification, the lanky forward had his best varsity game to datedwith 12 points and 8 rebounds.

Randy Hughes was the night's high scorer as his 19 second-half points led to a total of 23. Joe Charles added 14 for the Rams and he too was more accurate in the second stanza when he dropped in 12.

Bill Bird, a 6'10 substitute center, netted seven straight Ram points in the first half and held the Rams close until intermission.

Outstanding defense held down the scores for both teams in the first half. UMass stayed in a man-to-man while the Rams were effective in a 1-2-2 zone.

A key to the Rams subpar showing was the performance of Carlton Smith. Smith was URI's leading scorer in their first two games with an average of 16.5 but was hounded throughout the contest by Bill Endicott, Jim Burke, and others and could manage only one field goal in seven attempts.

Though the final margin was 14, the Minutemen led by as many as 22 near the end. Only streak shooting by Joe Charles and Randy Hughes, who between them accounted for the Ram's final 13 points, against the UMass subs kept the score somewhat respectable.

KEY MAN--With John Murphy in the lineup, the Minutemen are all set. At one point in the second half, Murph threw in five bombs in a row and had the Ram fans staring in disbelief. When he was sitting on the bench in the first half with 3 fouls, UMass had to settle for a mere 23-18 lead.

Rheault Slams Door On Vermont Teams

By BILL BALLOU

Sur-prise, sur-prise, sur-prise.

Those poor unfortunates who looked so bad in losing their first two hockey games this season have suddenly become a good hockey team. And they did it in a most unexpected way--by winning both games on a two-day trip to Vermont.

The victories, over Norwich on Friday night and Middlebury Saturday evening, were the Minutemen's second and third in a row and gave them a 3-2 record so far (all Division II games).

Goaltender Chick Rheault was the hero for UMass, giving up just three goals in the two games. He stopped 28 shots in a 6-3 win over Norwich and then recorded his first varsity shutout ever against Middlebury, stopping 36 shots in a 3-0 victory.

Offensively, linemates Billy Harris and Jim Lyons had two goals each, and Steve Nims one, giving that line five goals on the trip. Harris got two against Norwich, Lyons one in each game and Nims the back-breaker against Middlebury.

That line wasn't the only one clicking though, as UMass combined for a total of 84 shots on goal in the two games.

For a happy Jack Canniff, things couldn't have been any better. "I didn't expect us to win two, really, but it's great. I thought we might come home one-and-one, or even wind up with our tails between our legs. Hey, I'm really happy with the way it went."

Canniff attributed much of the sudden turnaround in his team's play to "confidence. The younger players are starting to believe in themselves. And I'll tell you, that guy in goal does a lot for them too."

Rheault was superb, especially against Middlebury.

The Panthers' Larry Perlman, probably the best goalie in Division II outside of Rheault, matched him save for save (practically) in that one.

Perlman stopped 35 UMass shots, and shut the Minutemen out until almost halfway through the third period. He stopped Harris twice on breakaways, Kevin Conners once, and made probably his best save on John Muse whose rebound of Mike Ellis' shot seemed a sure goal.

He was finally beaten at 8:32 of the final period by Jim Lynch. Lynch was set up in the slot by Carl Burns and Perlman had no chance "I was standing there alone for a long time," Lynch said, "and I figured for sure someone would cover me. But when the puck finally came, I just let it go as soon as I could. I didn't even aim it."

Mike Ellis found Steve Nims behind the Middlebury defense shortly thereafter, and Nims slid one under Perlman as he was being pulled down by defenseman Doug Taylor. Jim Lyons' tip-in a few minutes later finished the scoring.

Rheault was particulary good against the Panthers in the second period, when they outshot UMass 19-6. He had a couple of breaks, too, as Garth Parker missed wide-open cages twice in the period.

Rheault didn't think it was the best he'd ever played. "I've had tougher games," he said, "not all of those shots were that difficult." He credited it to "a great team effort, especially near the end when everyone wanted the shutout."

Compared to the Middlebury thriller, Norwich was like a prayer meeting. The Minutemen broke a close game open with two goals within 30 seconds at the beginning of the second period, and played sloppily the rest of the way. Norwich, though, was even sloppier.

UMass opened the scoring early in the game. John Muse and Kevin Conners broke in two-on-one on Norwich goalie Bill Cantwell, with Conners faking a slap shot and slipping the puck to Muse, who put it past Cantwell on the ice to his right.

Mike Stevenson tied it for the Cadets at 6:34 on a breakaway, but three minutes later Billy Harris slid a rebound of Robbie Quinlan's slap shot home to put UMass back in the lead. Jim Lyons scored in a scramble a little later, giving the Minutemen a 3-1 lead, but Cam McGregor made it 3-2 late in the period with a power play goal.

Conners got the game-winner at 1:54 of the second period when his centering pass from the right-wing corner deflected up into the rafters and came down on Cantwell's back, deflecting into the net. At 2:24 Carl Burns was fed nicely from the corner by Mike Merchant and UMass led 5-2.

Stevenson made it 5-3 with the final Cadet goal at 13:39, and Harris' breakaway goal at 18:06 of the third period wound things up.

Trackmen Outclassed

By SCOTT HAYES

Saturday was a day of frustration for the UMass Indoor Track team. The team traveled to Storrs with hopes of upsetting two outstanding track teams, but UMass was outclassed, scoring only 19 points in the tri-meet.

Manhattan and UConn dominted the meet, and it was evident after the first five events that UMass was in trouble. Manhattan, trailing UConn 45-40 after nine events, took the lead by outscoring the Huskies 8-3 in the 1,000-yard run, good for a 48-47 edge. The Jaspers came on strong towards the end of the meet, picking up 28 points in four events, while UConn could manage only seven.

A large crowd attended the meet in an attempt to help the Huskies extend their streak with a win over last year's national champions. Manhattan's outstanding individuals proved to be too much for UConn, and the result was a 76-53 victory, stopping UConn's win streak at 42.

There were few bright spots in the meet for UMass. In fact, the Minutemen were shutout in seven of the fourteen events. Bill Gillin and Jim Hennessy finished second in the mile and 60-yard high hurdles, respectively, to pick up three points each. Gillin was timed in 4:13.2, only nine tenths of a second behind winner Peter Squires. In that mile, Chris Farmer had the lead for a portion of the race, but the smart Squires finished strong and won the race. Farmer finished third, with a time of 4:13.4, giving UMass five points, the most scored in one event by the Minutemen.

Randy Thomas ran a fine race in the two-mile. Leading for most of the race, Thomas was passed by Manhattan's Matty Centrowitz and Marty Walsh in the late stages of the race. Thomas was able to garner third place with a time of 8:57.9. Centrowitz won the two-mile with a time of 8:51.3.

Others scoring points for UMass were Tony Pendleton, Devin Croft, Ken Adamson, Bob Adamson and Curt Stegerwald. Pendleton took third in the 60-yard dash with a time of 6.4 seconds. Croft's 2:14.8 was good for third in the 1,000. Ken Adamson captured third in the long jump with a jump of 22'5 1/2". Bob Adamson picked up his two points by placing fourth in the long and triple jumps. Adamson jumped 22'4" in the long jump, and leaped 46'4 1/2" in the triple jump. Stegerwald rounded out the scoring for UMass with a fourth place finish in the high hurdles. Stegerwald ran the event in 8.1, while teammate Hennessy was timed in 7.8 seconds.

Kraft's Time Will Come

Jack Kraft--as in Jack Kraft of 1971 and almost defeating UCLA in the NCAA finals fame and Jack Kraft of 243 wins worth of basketball at Villanova fame and Jack Kraft of 12 years in the trench warfare of Big Five hoop fame--now finds himself confronted with the biggest challenge of his career at the University of Rhode Island.

"There's no question that we have our work cut out for us," said the personable Kraft following his Rams' 73-59 loss to UMass which epitomized his thoughts. But like Tom Sanders after the Harvard loss, Kraft was noticably calm in the wake of what took place on the court. He realizes his time will come.

For Kraft the emphasis is not on the present. Records will not be of the utmost importance, although you'd like to win once and awhile. Instead he looks to the future and envisions the kind of program that URI is anticipating from his expertise.

"We're going to try to build a solid thing here at Rhody," he said. "Right now we're in the process of extra duty recruiting in an effort to get the type of player that would best fit within my system."

Presently, that player is not on his squad. Kraft came to URI in the middle of March, the end of the high school recruiting season and actually the only scouring that URI entertained was by the assistant athletic director Ernie Calverley.

"At Villanova I had a particular kind of athlete I recruited," explained Kraft. "It makes it a whole lot easier to coach. But here I came into a system without my type of players and have found that I've had to mold myself to them."

As a result he finds himself locked in a year of transition. "I'm trying to teach them some of the things I like to see in basketball and make it second nature to them. However, as you saw tonight by their shooting, (17 per cent in the first half) they're concerned more with executing the plays and less with their shooting."

Kraft left Villanova "because I felt there wasn't much more that I could do there," which seems reasonable when you figure that in 11 of his 12 coaching years his teams went to post-season tournaments. And he came to URI "because of the opportunity that presented itself."

"I was impressed with the athletic director, Maurice Zarchen," said Kraft. "I was likewise impressed with the program and the ideology the school had towards basketball." The realization of that ideology has always haunted Rams' basketball. There's never been any doubt that URI opted for bigger and better things.

One look at the schedule and some of the heavies that accent it is proot enough. Still Rhody has attempted to ascertain this level of proficiency with less than a full deck.

The talent in recent years that was widely over P.R.'d, flopped when they learned that the NCAA legislates against the use of more than one basketball on the court at a time. And the question of the coaching ability was never in doubt--it stunk.

Apparently URI has done something awfully good with Kraft. If he gets the material the results will speak for themselves.

When you speak of Kraft and hard-court talent you recall his trusts of years past--of Wali (nee Wally) Jones, Jim Washington and Bill Melchionni. But the team of teams that gained him the most recognition was that of 1971 when they barnstormed their way to the NCAA finals and UCLA of Sidney Wicks, Curtis Rowe and Steve Patterson vintage.

"We weren't a deep team then which shows the type of talent we had," remembers Kraft of that night in the Houston Astrodome when he and millions of others nairy witnessed the defeat of the Bruins.

There was Howard Porter, Tom Inglesby, Chris Ford, Clarence Smith and the infamous Hank Siemiontkowski. And there was the score, 66-62, UCLA. "It was a tremendous thrill for us to play for the national championship," recalls Kraft. "Playing opposition it only added to the greatness of the occasion."

From that gutty team four went on to the pros: Porter (Chicago), Inglesby (Atlanta), Ford (Detroit--no pun intended) and Smith (Harlem Globetrotters). Siemiontkowski and his hook shot went to Italy.

And a sixth, Kraft went to URI. He sees, as does everyone else, a difficult road to his former perch. "My main objective in that vain," he said, "is to first win the Conference Crown and that means dethroning Massachusetts."

Which, if my mathematics serves me correctly, leaves him 14 points in the hole already.

Whelan Paces Gymnasts Again

By WALT POWERS

If gymnastics consisted entirely of high-bar competition, the UMass men's team would probably run away with the Easterns title.

They proved that on Saturday afternoon at the Boyden auxiliary gym, where an injured and undermanned crew of gymnasts toyed with Pitt before devastating them on the final event. It was a well timed coup de gras that woke up a previously somnolent crowd of 200, and gave the young UPitt team a lesson in execution more effective than a year of coaching.

Until this time, the meet had been, with the exception of Gene Whalen's routines, about as scintillating as a battle between the two worst teams in the league.

Not that this wasn't expected. Pitt, the pariennial also — rans of the Easterns, paraded what looked like the starting lineup of their freshman football team to the sidelines at the start of the meet, and this hardly filled the stout hearts of the Minutemen with fear. "We usually don' get excited when we face a team as weak as Pitt", said acting coach Bob Koenig. Result: Pitt performed like freshmen and UMass slopped their way a 151.1-129.55 rout.

Pitt showed surprising form at the start, and it took a 9.05 from Gene Whalen to give UMass the victory in the floor excercises.

Any semblance of competition dissolved at the pommel horse event, where Bill Brouillet (8.1), Steve Scuderi (8.4), and Gene Whelan (8.55) pushed UMass to a nine point lead. At this point, UMass had the meet wrapped up, and their bench relaxed. Now the competition became internal, every gymnast against himself.

Gene Whelan wowed the crowd with the first of his four compulsories in the still rings. His score, 8.8, was lower than he would have received on an optional, But Whelan had this rationale. "I like to throw compulsories in dual meets," he said, "Because it prepares me for the championship meets." He went on to wing the long horse vault and the horizontal bar, but Bill Brouilet optional routine on parallel bars gave Whelan his first loss of the season. Whelan won the all-around title easily with a 52.35.

Pitt's moment of glory came in the long horse vault event with Bill Brouillet's scratch and compulsories by Steve Scuderi and Gene Whelan, they only edged UMass by 1/20th of a point. Rod Pasterick's 8.45 in the event was Pitt's highest score of the afternoon.

Going into the final event, UMass led by fifteen, but the real fun was still in the offing. Freshman Jim Laiosa hinted at the coming explosion when he finished an average routine with a twiting toe-on-front dismount. Steve Scuderi countered a weak mount with a superb dismount and his highest score (8.7) of the day. Gene Whalen's 8.75 compulsory and Bill Brouillett's 8.4 then sent the crowd home with a perfect advertisement for UMass' February 2nd encounter with Penn State at the Cage.

Minuteman Inside Sports

Flat Grapplers Slip & Split

By JOHN BOCK

The opening days of the season have not been kind to Coach Homer Barr and his Minuteman wrestling team as they now sport a 3-2 record, having split Saturday evenings tri-meet with MIT and Wesleyan. The matmen walked on Wesleyan 41-11, but lost a tight match to MIT, 21-18.

"Flat" is the best word to describe the performance of the team against both schools. The matches were held round robin style which meant that there were three rounds and in every round one of the wrestlers would have a bye. The first round saw UMass take it on the chin as they came out with a tie and no wins. It seemed like the Minuteman wrestler would no sooner get out on the mat then he would be fighting off a takedown or find himself wrapped up in legs by MIT.

The second round went a lot better as UMass made it on the scoreboard with some wins and most importantly — pins. Recording falls for the Minutemen were Bob Schab, Steve Benson, Larry Reynolds, Peter Sachon, Dick Muri, and John Connolly, and Dennis Fenton. By the end of the second round it was apparent that Wesleyan was out of the running for any team victories and it became a matter of whether UMass could stop MIT from winning any more matches.

The third round proved they couldn't. UMass was behind by fifteen points and needed two falls and a win just to get back in the game. The Minutemen got the pins from Schab and Connolly but dropped the other match, 4-1. The crucial match saw Eric Ruth, making his varsity debut, wrestling MIT's NEIWA third place finisher, Loren Dessonville, at 158. Ruth wrestled one of his best matches, holding Dessonville scoreless until the third period.

Coach Barr is shouldering a hefty part of the blame as he said "I have to go on record saying that I worked the team too hard on Friday. They were still down after losing to Rhode Island and I should have given that fact more consideration."

Regardless of what the coach said, injuries are still playing a big part in the problems that the matmen are having. The wrestlers are setting a record for shuffling themselves in and out of the infirmary. Heavyweight George Ireland, after beating the infection in his elbow, received five stitches in the lip to close a nasty gash left by Greg Scanlon's elbow, 150 pounder Steve Jabaut pulled back muscles in his match against Yale and Coach Barr decided to let him sit this one out. Russel Chateauneuf just came back from the Rhode Island hospital where he has been since Wednesday and if he can get back in shape should be ready for next Saturday's triangular with Harvard and Hofstra. The prognosis on Cliff Blom's shoulder separation is that it is slight but enough to keep him out of the lineup until next semester.

With no mid-week dual the Minutemen can take the time and get some much needed drill work and a chance to regroup for next Saturday.

There were some outstanding individual performances that the crowd responded to. Of course, the crowd enthusiasm was greatest for the mile. Squires, who was in the last place at one point in the meet finished strong to nip Bill Gillin. The two-mile run was the most exciting event of the day, with Randy Thomas showing the way for most of the race. Matt Centrowitz won the race, however with the fine time of 8:51.3.

In the shot put, Bob Brady outdid Rich Lowe of UConn to take first. Lowe was leading the event with a throw of 54'1 3/4" until Brady came up with a throw of 54'10 3/4". The Manhattan weightman's throw held up for the rest of the competition.

All four jumpers who placed in the triple jump eclipsed the UConn Field House record. Ken McBryde of Manhattan took first with a jump of 51'3", Jim Nathaniel took second by jumping 49'11" and Dennis Phelan captured third with a leap of 48'6" to give Manhattan a 1-2-3 finish in the event. Bob Adamson's 46'4 1/2" jump also topped the old record held by UConn's Charles Linder. Linder jumped 45'8 1/2" in 1972.

Phil Broughton won the JV mile in 4:22.3 for UMass. Chet Mysliwicz finished second in the same event. Mysliwicz ran the mile in 4:26.9.

Connecticut enjoyed the only sweep of the day, taking all four places in the pole vault.

The game will be carried live and in color over Channel 57, the Springfield public television station, in conjunction with the Connecticut Public Television Network.

Lee Williams, the Executive Director of the Basketball Hall of Fame of Springfield, will assist Coleman with the announcing.

Bruins Come Back To Tie In Final Minutes

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The Boston Bruins scored two goals in the final 1:22 of the game, the final by Phil Esposito with only 31 seconds to play, as the Boston Bruins salvaged a 3-3 tie with the Philadelphia Flyers in the National Hockey League Sunday night.

The Bruins, appeared beaten by a 3-1 count but got a tally from the right point by Bobby Orr at 18:38 and knotted the game with 31 seconds to play when Esposito tapped in an Orr shot from the right point.

The tie enabled the Bruins to stretch their unbeaten string over the Flyers to 25 meetings, since March 1969 when Boston beat Philadelphia 2-1 at home. Boston has won 25 of those games.

The victory ran Boston's unbeaten string to 12. The Bruins last tasted defeat on Nov. 7, when they lost 7-3 to the New York Islanders.

The Flyers took a 1-0 lead at 9:22 of the first period when center Orest Kindrachuk batted in a rebound after Bruins goalie Gilles Gilbert had robbed him of a seemingly certain goal just 15 seconds earler.

It became 2 — at 5:04 of the second period when winger Simon Nolet took a pass off the boards, outraced Boston's defense and beat Gilbert from in front of the net.

Boston closed to within a goal at 15:22 of the second period when Carol Vadnais' shot from the left point got past goalie Bernie Parent 15 seconds after the Flyers had killed a penalty.

Rick MacLeish hiked the score to 3-1 when he steamed up the left side, faked Gilbert to the ice and fired over the sprawling goalie at 6:57.

Celts Win

TORONTO (AP) — JoJo White scored 27 points in the second half to offset Bob McAdoo's 49 points and the Boston Celtics turned back a late Buffalo rally, beating the Braves 118-114 in the National Basketball Association Sunday night.

McAdoo set a personal and club mark with his 49 points. The previous game-high for a Brave was Jim McMillian's 48.

The Braves erased an 11-point deficit in the fourth quarter, but Paul Silas broke the stalemate with two free throws just 48 seconds from the final buzzer. John Havlicek put the game away with a free throw with 15 seconds left.

The Braves led 38-30 at the end of the first quarter but trailed 62-57 at the half.

White had 37 points for the game, and Havlicek picked up 27. Ernie DeGregorio had 13 points for the Braves while McMillian had 12.

"Nasty" Nastase: World's Best Tennis Player

By WILL GRIMSLEY

BOSTON (AP) . Romania's Ilie Nastase can be puckish and exasperating at times, but tennis is stuck with him.

At the moment, he is probably the best player in the world - the scourge of his fellow pros, the target of outraged galeries and the bane of the stiff-necked establishment - and he simply refuses to fade away.

The fiesty 27-year-old Bucharest bad boy added another jewel to his court collection by winning his third straight Masters Grand Prix title Saturday, beating Tom Okker of the Netherlands 6-3, 7-5, 4-6, 6-3.

Nastase's Masters triumph was his 16th of the year in 31 tournaments, and the $15,000 first prize boosted his earnings to $228,750, the highest in the game.

The head-strong Natase, already steeped in fines this year for banging balls at umpires and ignoring the players' boycott of Wimbledon, reportedly was assessed another $100 by the ATF for slamming balls in the direction of a linesman Saturday after a questionable call.

Colts Land Dolphins In NFL Upset, 16-3

BALTIMORE (AP) - A two-yard touchdown pass from Marty Domres to Tom Mitchell on Baltimore's fourth consecutive fourth down attempt in the third period sparked the Colts to a stunning 16-3 victory over the Miami Dolphins Sunday in a National Football League game.

The victory halted the Dolphins' 10-game winning streak and ended Baltimore's six-game losing skein. Miami has already clinched the title in the American Conference East.

The winning drive included a fake field goal which provided a first down at the Miami 22.

Lydell Mitchell, given workhorse duty because of injuries to three Baltimore running backs, carried 35 times for 104 yards and picked up first downs on the crucial drive. Although George Hunt was unable to convert and Baltimore led 16-0, the TD pass forced the Dolphins to change their strategy in attempting a comeback.

Garo Yepremian booted a 10-yard field goal on the first play of the fourth quarter for Miami, but the Dolphins later failed on two fourth-down passing attempts from the Baltimore 11 and 14.

With the Dolphins preparing for the playoffs, veteran Earl Morall replaced starting quarterback Bob Griese for some much needed work. He completed 11 or 22 passes for 153 yards.

Hunt kicked a 19 yard field goal for Baltimore in the first quarter and a fumble recovery on the ensuing kickoff opened the way for a two-yard scoring run by rookie Bill Olds, who gained 50 yards before being injured early in the second half.

O.J. & Bills Snow Pats Under, 37-13

BUFFALO (AP) - O.J. Simpson raced across a slippery, snow-covered field for 219 yards and scored one touchdown Sunday as the Buffalo Bills routed the New England Patriots 37-13 for their eighth National Football League victory.

Simpson, who carried 22 times, moved to within 60 yards to tying Jim Brown's single season rushing record of 1,863 yards and was only 19 yards shy of a career total of 5,000.

Simpson has one game left to surpass Brown and the 5,000-yard plateau. The Bills close out their season next Sunday against the Jets in New York.

The Bills, 8-5 and still fighting for a wild card spot in the NFL playoffs, gave up three points early on Jeff White's 14-yard field goal, then struck back for a quick touchdown on the ensuing kickoff.

Wallace Francis, who returned a kickoff 101 yards for a TD against the Philadelphia Eagles earlier this season, raced 90 yards for a score with Bruce Barnes' kickoff.

From then on, it was all Buffalo offensively as Simpson scored from the six, rookie quarterback Joe Ferguson completed touchdown passes of 37 and six yards to wide receiver Bob Chandler, and John Leypoldt kicked two field goals from 34 yards and one from 19.

Red Sox Acquire Marichal

BOSTON (AP) —Juan Marichal says his sale came as no surprise, but the destination did.

"After all, I make quite a bit of money, and we didn't draw too well in San Francisco. But I was a little surprised that Boston got me," Marichal said from his home in the Dominican Republic over the weekend.

That "quite a bit of money" has been estimated at $140,000 a year. Neither the Giants nor the Red Sox disclosed the sale price.

The 35-year-old righthander, whose 238-140 lifetime record makes him the winningest active pitcher, has heard about the infamous "Green Monster" in Boston's Fenway Park.

"I know that in Fenway Park the wall is very short, but I know that right and center are very far. Maybe I will have to make a little bit of an adjustment. But, I also know that when you have a park like that, the hitters get a little anxious too," Marichal said.

Marichal spent 14 seasons with the Giants, his only major league club up to now. He is fifth in all-time strikeouts with 2,281 and his career earned run average, 2.83, is also among the top ifve. He won 20 games or better six times. Last year he was 11-15 with a 3.83 ERA following an off-season back operation.

Rothschild Baroness Speaks In Rare Interview

By EDITH M. LEDERER
Associated Press Writer

TEL AVIV (AP) — Her great-uncle Edmond was the financial father of Palestine. Her brother Guy and cousins are among Israel's greatest benefactors. But Baroness Batsheva de Rothschild is the first member of the Jewish banking dynasty to make her home in the promised land.

For nearly a dozen years the 59-year-old baroness has lived in a beautifully landscaped modern home just outside Tel Aviv, quietly dispensing her own fortune to support arts and crafts, science, music and the dance in Israel.

She grew up in luxury few Jews have ever known. Her father, the late Baron Edouard de Rothschild who headed the French branch of the family, shuttled between his opulent play palaces at Ferrieres and Chantilly.

But she is no stranger to trouble.

She fled to the United States with her family at the outset of World War II but returned to England to join Charles de Gualle's Free Franch Army. Friends said she carried out several confidential missions before returning home after France was liberated.

The October Mideast war found her living in Israel — but Batsheva de Rothschild said in a rare interview she had no intention of leaving her adopted homeland.

"I want to be here, war or no war," she said. "I wouldn't stay if I didn't want to. Besides. I understand it's more dangerous to walk the streets of New York than to be in Israel."

Her family pioneered here.

Her great-uncle, Baron Edmond, began financing the Jewish colonization of Palestine in the 1880s and spent the next 50 years building an agricultural and industrial base for Israel-to-be although he was staunchly anti-Zionist.

Her cousin, the present Baron Edmond de Rothschild, runs the empire his grandfather built and currently is constructing a luxury golf resort at Caesarea near where Romans threw Jews to the lions centuries ago.

Her brother, Baron Guy de Rothschild, who now heads the French banking house, is president of the United Jewish Appeal in France and her English cousins are leading fund raisers for Israel in Britain.

In Israel, the name Rothschild is synonymous with benefactor. When the song "If I Were A Rich Man" from "Fiddler On The Roof" was translated into Hebrew it began "If I Were A Rothschild."

But petite, blue-eyed Batsheva de Rothschild has always worked quietly behind the scenes, shunning publicity and avoiding the lavish jet-set whirl of her European relatives.

She is considered one of Israel's "beautiful people" but her life here is certainly not as "beautiful" as the life she gave up in Europe.

She has exquisite jewelry, but she often forgets to wear it. She loves animals and has six stray dogs. She's also a crossword puzzle nut and often does puzzles over the phone with a friend — even in Hebrew.

Born in England, raised in France, she studied biology in Paris and at Columbia University and was briefly married to Donald Bloomingdale, the New York department store magnate, in the late 1940s.

When she arrived in New York in 1940, the baroness walked into the studio of modern dance innovator Martha Graham and began a lifelong romance with the dance.

She supported Martha Graham's fledgling company, housed them in a building she owned and traveled throughout the world with them — including a stop in Israel in 1956.

Although she first visited Israel in 1952, a year after her divorce it was really the 1956 trip with Martha Graham that first involved her with Israel.

"We were visiting housing projects," she recalled, "when someone suggested that research should be done on better types of housing so I sponsored a study project where sample housing projects were built."

Later that year, she was back in Israel. Then the Sinai campaign, and a friend recalls, "she became involved."

In 1957, Ruth Dayan, ex-wife of Defense Minister Moshe Dayan, asked her if she would look into opening an outlet for Israeli handicrafts in New York.

That's how Batsheva Crafts was born.

It is now a profit-making venture with exports all over the world, mainly of glass, ceramics, copper and jewelry.

Once Batsheva Crafts opened in 1958, the Baroness found herself spending more and more time in Israel. First, she bought an apartment, then she built a suburban house with a swimming pool. Finally, in 1962, she became a permanent resident.

In New York, she had established the B. de Rothschild Foundation for the Advancement of Science in Israel. In Tel Aviv, she created the Batsheva de Rothschild Foundation for the Advancement of Science and Technology. Both are headed by Mrs. Keynan.

In her own quiet way, she helped many other Israelis. She learned, for instance, that the son of an Egyptian-born switch board operator at Bat-Dor was a talented artist and arranged to send him to art school in Paris.

She refused to discuss her contribution to the Yom Kippur war. During fighting, she took over the day-to-day management of her company because the general manager was drafted.

Veteran Broadway Director-Writer Plans Comeback

By WILLIAM GLOVER
AP Drama Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — It was one of the indelible years: 1927. Lindy flew to Paris, the Supreme Court finished mopping up Teapot Dome, Ruth belted 60, Judge Ben Lindsay proclaimed "companionate marriage," Coolidge "did not choose to run" again, the cloche was fashion's hot new hat, Hollywood invented Oscar, television emitted its first blurry picture, Tunney survived the long count.

Everyone read "The Bridge of San Luis Rey." The marines landed in Nicaragua and China; floods ravaged the Mississippi Valley and Vermont. And the public concentrated on humming a nonstop, cheery array like "My Blue Heaven," "I'm Looking Over a Four Leaf Colver" and "Chloe."

Broadway tuned to the dominant upbeat mood with an all-time record of 48 musicals, one aptly called "Good news!"

Meanwhile, over at City College of New York, Abe Burrows was studying to be a Latin teacher.

"I never saw that one, but I heard the songs — it was very famous," says Burrows, who subsequently forsook gerunds "to make a living" on Wall Street and ultimately found fulfillment on Broadway.

Spectacled, furrow-browed and sometimes talking like a runaway from some Damon Runyon fable, the veteran director-writer is now presiding over an expanded "Good News!" for a less dewy-eyed generation of spectators. And don't call it a revival.

"Revival means bring back to life which implies somethin' is dead," Burrows declares. "Now I'm not comparin' this to 'La Boheme' or 'Aida' but when the met does on one of them they don't say revival. Y' don't revive classics, y' do 'em." Well, the cloche is very chic again.

In his pantheon of Broadway immortals, Burrows feels "Good News!" rates alongside "Guys and Dolls" and "How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying," two of his most impressive prior involvements.

The new "Good News," minus exclamation point but much exhanced in other aspects, opens in Boston on Dec. 17. After that it will travel afar on one of those nine-month pre-Broadway jaunts that have been gaining favor as a hedge against the hazards of Main Stem critical pans.

There are several other items high in the boxoffice calculations of Producer Harry Rigby, the lissome gent who instigated hit redos of "No, No, Nanette" and "Irene."

Filmland's Alice Faye and John Payne have been recruited for the focal roles. And although the original musical score was solid with hits, items are being added from elsewhere in the creative canon of the famous Tim Pan Alley trio of Buddy DeSylva, Lew Brown and Ray Henderson.

Psych. Study Shows Day Care Children Unaffected

By MARIA BRADEN
Associated Press Writer

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — A pilot study by a team of University of Kentucky psychologists shows that children who attend day care centers do not differ mentally or socially from children who stay at home with their mothers.

The study shows family relationships are apt to change as a result of participation in day care centers.

Dr. Richard Winett, who headed the research team, said the study sheds some light on one controversial issue of the feminist movement: whether working mothers who leave their children in day care centers are depriving them.

The project is unique in that psychologists studied parents and children in different types of existing day care situations. Winett said previous studies have dealt only with demonstratior-type centers.

"The difference is that those are not typical of what goes on in the community," he said. "They use highly trained people and there's a small child-teacher ratio. There was a need to evaluate fairly typical situations."

Winett said the most important findings of the study "are that apparently children are not harmed by day care and babysitting arrangements and that the family structure seems flexible enough to both accomodate and allow for these arrangements."

He said the results give "some support to proponents of day care and those groups advocating women's involvement in work outside the home and men's closer involvement in child care and household tasks."

Fathers whose children spend time in a day care center are more likely to devote time to their children in the evening and tend to help more with household tasks and child care, Winett said. He added, however, that increased participation of the father did not appear to either enhance or hinder the child's development.

He noted significant differences exist between families whose children were in different child rearing situations.

The at-home families tended to be "somewhat more conservative, have more children and be overwhelmingly middle class," he said, whereas the families in the day care group were more likely to have "more liberal backgrounds, have fewer children, have income levels that varied and have a mother working."

More than 100 families were studied and evaluated. They were primarily white, middle-income families with black families and those at the extremes of the economic spectrum under-represented, Winet said.

He stressed that his findings should be considered applicable only to children and families with characteristics of these participating in the study.

People In The News

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI (AP) — "Why does God hate me?" asked Alan McDonald after gunpowder exploded in his face and hands, burning him severely for the second time in his life.

"I didn't realize what had happened at first," McDonald, 23, said from the burn ward at a local hospital. "I was burning. I rolled to put the fire out and I thought: 'Oh God, not again.'"

In February 1960, McDonald was massively burned and disfigured when a playmate doused him with flaming gasoline. It took skin grafts from an older brother and years of plastic surgery to restore his charred body.

McDonald, on a hunting trip last week with friends, was making bullets near a smoldering campfire when a spark set off a bowl of gunpowder.

"If my friend hadn't been there, I would have jumped into a canal with a rock around my neck," said McDonald, who was reported in fair condition at the hospital after suffering first and second degree burns on his face and hands.

Bonnie McDonald, who had met her husband-to-be in high school and feel in love with him before surgeons restored his destroyed jaw, said:

"Alan was really looking good after all those years and now this. Man, it just isn't fair."

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — The former chief editor of Yugoslavia's major morning newspaper has been expelled from the Communist party for liberalism, the paper said yesterday.

Aleksander Nenadovic was chief editor of Politika until the middle of last year. He lost the job in a purge of supporters of the liberal leaders of the Serbian Communist party. But he remained a member of the party and continued to write.

But articles signed by him disappeared recently from the paper. Yesterday's announcement said the Communist party organization of Politika expelled him from the party and issued warnings and criticism to seven other newsmen.

They were accused of allowing the paper to become a mouthpiece of liberals of the Serbian party who were purged last year.

BOGOTA, Columbia (AP) — A letter and a hand-made, fully engraved wooden medal has been given to England's Princess Anne as a token of her visit to Columbia. Both are by an inmate serving a five-year term.

"Cruel fate has brought me into this penitentiary, but I have always longed to work and achieve some success," says the letter by Jorge Echeverry Palacies. "That is why I have taken the liberty to send you this token of your stay here. This humble but heartfelt present has been worked fully by hand...with all love and respect to you and your husband."

The medal shows two shaking hands symbolizing cooperation between England and Colombia. The back side bears the names of Anne and her husband, Mark Phillips, the date and flowers. The British embassy said Princess Anne would reply to Palacies' letter.

Mt. Holyoke Talk

"Forces Shaping the Presidency: Foreign Policy," a panel discussion, will be held tonight at 8:00 in Mount Holyoke College's Cleveland Auditorium.

Robert Healy, executive editor of the Boston Globe, and Darius Jhabvala, diplomatic correspondent of the Globe, will participate. Healy brings with him an impressive record as a long-time Washington correspondent. Jhabvala is just back from accompanying Kissinger to the Middle East.

Yoga At Hampshire

Sara Nielsen, Director and Founder of bhedanta, is expected at Hampshire College tonight at 8 in the Center Room of Donut V, House III. bhedanta is a small yoga retreat college recently established as part of Nordenfjord World University in Denmark. Students seeking to integrate meditative experience into an academic problem are particularly welcome. Opportunities for spending part of January in a monastery or ashram will be presented.

Commitment to the Consumer

Your Stop & Shopsworth is a good deal for you!

I've made my promise to talk straight with you, so let's begin with our Stop & Shopsworth slogan — what does it mean? As your store manager I'm concerned about the worth of your shopping dollars, not only low prices but quality and service as well. No magic formula, just a week-in, week-out way of doing business.

We back this claim with what we like to think of as the Stop & Shopsworth Consumer Charter, the foundation on which we build such programs as:

Our Quality Protected Beef Program: At our Marlboro Meat Processing Plant, special equipment makes it possible to maintain uniform cleanliness and tight quality control. This allows us to regulate the aging carefully (and naturally, with no additives of any kind). We can guarantee that you serve meat at its peak of taste and tenderness.

Our private label foods: The Stop & Shop brand has to be as good as the leading national brand or you won't find it on our shelves, but ours costs less. We'll put our cake mix against Betty Crocker, our detergent against Tide, but gelatin desserts? We haven't made one to match Jello — yet!

Our leadership in Consumer Affairs: As far back as 1959, our Manager of Consumer Relations was concerned about improving communications between Stop & Shop management and the consumer. Just recently, we received an award from Family Circle Magazine for our efforts in nutrition education.

Most important, we listen: In addition to a network of Consumer Boards that provide a constant communication link to our shoppers, we are here to respond to your questions and suggestions. Stop & Shopsworth? The point is we're listening and working to be responsive to your needs.

The Anatomy Of A Course

(Editor's Note: What with course selection time upon the campus, MDC has decided there is no better way to know about the academic menu than to taste it from an enrollee's mouth.

John Mulholland kept close track of his participation in English 339, "Article Writing," during the Fall semester. His journal spells out the toil and tremors he experienced on the way to publication. Excerpts are reproduced here without the permission of his instructor, who admits he has also known rejection slips.)

Part I

This paper is a log of my activities in writing two nonfiction articles for English 339 — Article Writing. It includes brief descriptions of all the steps I took in creating and finishing these two pieces.

The paper is, in essence, a copy of the handwritten notes I kept during the course. At the beginning of the course, it was spelled out that the term project would be a daily journal of entries describing what was done for each day of the course. I have tried to do this to the best of my ability, but I must confess that entries were not always made daily.

FIRST WEEK: September 10-16

I was unable to attend the first class meeting on September 9, as well as those on 9-10 and 9-14 because of work commitments.

At the class meeting I did attend on Wednesday (9-12), I picked up the syllabus and schedule of the course. I signed up for my tutorial session time, which will be on Wednesdays at 1:15.

SECOND WEEK : September 17-23

On Wednesday (9-19) I went to my first tutorial. I told my professor I was thinking of doing my first article on my experiences while living with a deaf person at UMass. He seemed to like the idea, but told me I should decide on a particular angle — day-to-day life of a deaf person, the Media Specialist Program for the Deaf — some specific aspect.

I talked to Jay Innes, the deaf person I lived with, to see if he'd mind me writing an article about him. It was okay with him. I'm thinking about submitting the article to Readers Digest for its First Person section, $3000 if it gets published! I read a copy of Reader's Digest to see what they were looking for. They want first person accounts of less than 3,000 words about interesting experiences. I think my experience was interesting.

On Saturday (9-23) I wrote a rough outline for the first article.

THIRD WEEK: September 24-30

On Wednesday (9-26) I showed my professor my outline. He thought it was too broad — covered too much of everything. I have to decide exactly what areas I'll limit myself to. Talking it over with him, I sort of decided that I would like the piece to be a straightforward account of experiences — humorous, sad, inspirational, etc.

I told Politella about submitting the article to Reader's Digest. He said the competition would be much tougher than for less known magazines but to go ahead.

Over the weekend I read sections of the two books I had from the library on how to write the outline of an article.

On Saturday, (10-6) I sat down and typed out everything I could think of relating to my living with Jay. I knew him. Jay showed me a paper he had written about his life for a psychology class. It contained an account of his experiences when he went deaf. Jay elaborated on certain points in the paper as I read it.

On Sunday, (10-7) I arranged the list into groupings of similarity. It was only a rough grouping. I later plan to arrange the groupings into the sequential order in which the story will be written. The grouping list came in handy in making sure that I covered all important points. By looking at the numbers I hope not to repeat myself in the story.

FIFTH WEEK: October 8-14

On Wednesday I met with my professor. We briefly discussed my outline. Again I was reminded to limit myself to a specific area. The greater part of the session was spent discussing various aspects of the writing profession. Free lancing as a career is not easy.

I started thinking about a good lead for my story. I remembered that in a book I had on deafness, there was a paragraph on Aristotle's views on deafness, which were very unenlightened. I think maybe this could be a good beginning if I then show how wrong Jay made Aristotle. I looked up the paragraph in Hearing and Deafness, by Hallowell Davis and S. Richard Silverman. I think a paraphrase might make a good lead.

On Saturday (10-12) I started my first draft. I began my story with the Aristotle lead, but had a heck of a time finding the right wording. After struggling with it for too long I settled for an approximation and continued to write the rest of the story. This proved difficult because I kept getting hung up on certain passages as to the correct wording. I finally managed to disregard such fine points, and managed to write an almost complete first rough draft.

On Sunday (10-14), I rewrote the first draft. I decided that after the lead I should give a brief biographical account of Jay in order that the rest of the story would fall into place. In this account, I could cover the handicap of deafness without having to continuously repeat myself. Besides this change, I polished up the wording and sentence structure. It's still a very rough draft. In the second draft I also included a rough conclusion to the story.

SIXTH WEEK: October 15-21

On Tuesday (10-16) I wrote the third and hopefully the last draft. This draft is mainly a further refinement of the other drafts. I changed some words and sentences. I also checked for punctuation.

I didn't have time to type up this draft, so I brought the handwritten one to my professor on Wednesday. He said it was okay to bring the typewritten one next Wednesday.

SW Center Is Resource For Racial Understanding

A realistic awareness of racist attitudes, and concrete action to alleviate these attitudes: these are the objectives of the Center for Racial Understanding. Located in the Moore House P-10 apartment, the center is working in many ways to attain these objectives.

Established in 1972, it was relocated to larger quarters in Moore House from JQA. The center now has a growing resource library of films, recordings, pamphlets and books, all relating to Third World and racism.

Courses offered: Dynamics of White Racism, Black Ethnocentrism, and Lumpen economics, to name three, all seek to make students aware of the subtle racist conditions in every day living. But they do not stop there. Action against institutional racism is also stressed.

The philosophy is that talk is not enough, and awareness is just the beginning.

One of the problems concerning the center is that students do not have a concise idea of what it should do. Director Ken Hale said he would like to see it become a gathering place, where students could get together and talk, or make use of the study room as well as the library.

In the future, Hale said he hopes to widen the scope of the center to such causes as prison reform and the exploitation of Third World countries by the U.S. and such European nations as France, Portugal, and Great Britain. But for now, the Center for Racial Understanding is concentrating on Southwest. Open from 10-5 Monday through Friday, the center welcomes visitors from all over campus to make use of its facilities, and share their ideas.

Market Place Of Ideas

I Want You For The MDC

Just realized that this is my last column for the semester. Had planned to write more about the frustrations of the energy crisis; the ineptness of the President; or perhaps my sadness over the death of activism on most campuses throughout this country.

However, today I will write on none of these topics. Today I'm writing on a topic that is very special to me: my feelings about working on a College paper in general, and the Massachusetts Daily Collegian in particular.

I have spent this semester as the National Student Exchange representative from Rutgers. Most every aspect of my stay here has been enjoyable. The friends that I have met, the experiences that I've encountered and the things that I have observed have all mixed together to teach me a bit about life; and even more so concerning my relationship with it. Many of those friends, and most of the experiences have taken place through association with the Collegian this past semester.

What function should a newspaper serve in a University community? Ideally, it should inform the community of what is going on around the world, throughout the country, and in the state in general. In particular, it should become an active factor within the university community itself. A paper cannot always be right, and it won't always be there. However, a paper can try to cover as much as staff and financial limitations permit it to, and can and should always give its readers its best shot.

Look, I'm not about to say that the Collegian covers news as well as the Times or Globe. And no, Bill Ballou is not the second coming of Jimmy Cannon; Reid Fishman is not another James Reston. Because of the setup of a college paper, it is doubtful that any student journalist will ever be. A student journalist is just that-a student first, and a journalist second (although I can think of several friends who will dispute that). Those individuals who are part of the Collegian have more to worry about than just "finding news to put in the paper". They've got to find time to research answers for tests and papers. They've got to find time to study and go to class; in some cases work just to go to school.

Considering this, it is fair to say that there are about twenty people or so, who bust their bottoms to get the Collegian out everyday. To that, you can add another twenty or thirty names of those who help the Collegian come out whenever they find the time. Although, they put out over 150 pages of newspaper every week. That's larger than some novels!! When you take that into consideration, those who are working on the paper are doing the best job possible.

But when you think about it, twenty, thirty, or even fifty people is not a large percentage of the 22,000 people that make up this university community! You want to know what is going on. You read the papers! Surely, out of 22,000 people at UMass, more than fifty of us enjoy writing.

There is room for you on the Collegian. It isn't a closed club, with strict rules or monetary dues. You don't have to be elected to belong. A college newspaper is one of the last such organizations in a university or anywhere where all you've got to do to be in it is join, and do the best you can; where all you've got to do to succeed is take an interest and work hard. There are people here who will help you with your writing (if you need help); who will teach you how to take pictures; or how to do issue lay-out. It is a wonderful thing to work hard on something; really get into what you are trying to do, and then see it in print the next day.

The Collegian needs people. The ads in the paper are not rot-they're for real, there is room on the Collegian for anyone who wants to join. For a paper to perform its function better it must have more people from various groups that make up this community on its staff. It needs them to cover stories, sure, but it also needs them to provide input into what stories should be covered; what is going on throughout the campus; and how the students, faculty and the administration feel about things.

While you are home during Christmas, think about it. When school resumes come to the office. It is just up the stairs from the Campus Center Candy Counter, and across the hall from RSO.

Working on a college paper is a great experience. You can spend as little time as you can afford to give to it; or as much energy as you feel moved to. You can learn from what you see, and those you see around you. No matter what happens in the future I will remember the Collegian, those who work to put it out, and those who make it worth being on. I hope that by this time next year, a few more of you will be able to say the same.

Death Penalty Again? Perish The Thought

"There is but one deterent to a murderer and that is the death penalty."

By ERNIE KING

Recently, the Massachusetts Correctional System has been moving forward in the area of Penal Reform. The most progressive of these reforms was the abolition of the death penalty. Now, from the limbo of lost reactionaries, comes the golden voices of Representative Sacco and Chester Broderick of the Mass. Patrolman's Association who are called for the restoration of the death penalty.

The arguments put forth by Sacco and Broderick date back to the stone age. They argue that Capital Punishment is:

1. a deterrent to crime,
2. it is economical,
3. it satisfies societies lust for revenge, and
4. it is the form of protection against repeated crimes of violence by the same offender.

While these may seem like solid arguments, they deserve a much closer look.

The argument that capital punishment will deter crime because of the nature of the punishment, is similar to arguing in favor of a war to end a war. Killing to stop killing is an absurdity. Statistics on the percentage of capital crimes show no difference in states that had the death penalty and those that had done away with it. Murder is a highly emotional crime and most offenders are not thinking of their future when the crime is committed.

The economic aspects of the death penalty, besides being unfounded, are somewhat confusing. Those in favor of restoration of the dealth penalty feel that it is cheaper for the state to execute a criminal rather than to pay for his care and custody within our prison system. The other side of the coin reveals that once a man is executed, the financial burden of supporting his family falls to the state. Another cost overlooked by many is the cost of the lenghty trials brought about by the appeals of a defendant who is fighting for his life.

Retribution is an argument that sneaks in from the dark corner stone of man's barbaric past. The idea of Sacco and Broderick telling the governor of the Commonwealth, that I as a citizen of the Commonwealth have a desire for revenge on a person who has grievously wronged society is nothing more than selfrighteousness.

The idea of our correctional system is to correct anti-social tendencies of those incarcerated within ite. To say that the restoration of Capital Punishment will protect society from further wrongs is in reality a confession of failure on the part of the system to correct. What is needed then is a new system not one that has been tried and failed such as the death penalty.

When men such as Broderick and Sacco get up and talk about convicted murderers, they talk like all convicted murderers are professional killers and listed on the payrolls of organized crime. A closer look at homicide will reveal that most homicides happen in the bedroom or the kitchen and that both the offender and the victim usually know each other. A 1966 study revealed that 29 per cent of all the homicides that year, both the victim and the offender were members of the same family. Another point is that in most cases both the offender and the victim were members of the same race and social class.

Most professional killers are never caught. They are professionals. Those who are caught are usually the man or woman who after a Saturday night at the pub have become entangled in an escalating argument with a friend or spouse. In a study conducted by Marvin E. Wolfgang, it was found that out of 600 homicides, 26 per cent were precipitated by the victim.

With this in mind I suggest that if we are to reinstate the death penalty as Mr. Sacco and Mr. Broderick would have us do, we should bring back the old methods. We could use such old time greats as: stoning, throwing people to beast, or maybe even revive the milk and honey death of the Persian general Mithridates, who after being locked in a box with hands, feet, and head exposed was force fed honey and milk and then left for the ants and vermin of the desert.

My only requirement here is that all pending executions be conducted by Mr. Broderick and Mr. Sacco.

Letters To The Editor

Catch You In Hell

To The Editor:

I'm writing this letter for two reasons. The first is to express my thanks to the UMass Police for the friendly service rendered me. The second, is to warn the bastards who broke into my Rambler (now, who in their right mind would break into a Rambler?) and stole my tape player. If I don't catch you here I'll catch you in hell. Anyone low down to steal a tape player in such poor condition deserves it. And if (and when) it breaks down again don't call on me, I've run out of masking tape to hold it together.

Maharaji Ji Defended

To The Editor:

It seems rather fashionable today to be able to categorize, encapsulate and neatly attend to matters that concern us. When this is done, we feel that we have neatly surmised everything there is to know about whatever it is we are attempting to understand. After this, there is apparently no further need to question or explore deeper into something we apparently quite fully understand. This is what Mr. R.J. Baxter has done with Divine Light Mission, Guru Maharaj ji and myself as one of Maharaj ji's devotees.

In this material age, we are so enthralled and overcome by large numbers and the external beauty of objects whether they be cars, homes, or other things. There seems to be an unwritten law that possession connotates selfish attachment. The problem with this is that we usually transfer our own feelings about material beauty upon whomever is possessing. This therefore immediately displaces the possibility of any further explanation than our own subjective evaluation of it. That further explanation with Shri Guru Maharaj ji is love. Yes, Love, its a funny thing that word. It motivates people to do amazing things when it is operating without inhibition or qualification. People do crazy, compulsive, "neurotic" as Mr. Baxter calls it, things when love enters their lives. Some of these things are like people giving up their attachments and possessions, like signing over paychecks to a group of people living together attempting to accomplish one thing in their lives, unity. Money, roles and advancement are all such strong motivating factors in our lives. There are many aspects of Divine Light Mission that are growing rapidly because people have decided to end the achievement game and start reaching beyond those external realms we are all defined by. These are some of the things that Mr. Baxter overlooked in his analysis of Divine Light Mission. Doctors, Psychiatrist, Lawyers, administrators, engineers, journalists and many other skilled as well as non-skilled individuals began highly motivated Legal Aid, Health Services, Educational facilities as well as a World Relief Program to feed and clothe the poor on a world wide level. These things are available to anyone, not just Devotees. WE really need services and Education where the individuals involved are closer to their own needs, as well as the recipients needs as human beings, not objects or goals in some abstract scheme of progress. These services are still relatively small but functioning at an amazing pace by those who have chosen to serve humanity rather than their own selfish aims.

It could perhaps be hard to understand this kind of devotion, or love. It can easily be dismissed as compulsive or neurotic, but one thing always remains true, and that is our own experiences and our sincerity in our purpose which we must always attempt to know. I had dismissed Divine Light Mission and its followers as individuals with an abundance of rhetoric and no tangible results. I came to realize however after speaking with devotees and seeing their sense of purpose, and sincerity in changing themselves and the world around them, that they were experiencing a powerful force that was changing their lives and bringing them happiness. I have joined with them, and I feel that I have come a little closer to realizing my potential for contributing, apart from the sham and hypocrisy we see around us. It comes down to objectivity and openess to others, and asking seriously the question of why all these people are giving so much, and receiving even more. It appears so easy to discount Maharaj ji, but do you know his purpose? Do you know what he is deriving from what we would deem materialistic? Have you ever thought about looking beyond that which is so obvious? Obvious yes, but transparent as the wealth is not in what the eyes can see, but rather in what the heart feels.

Please talk to us, try to share the love that is changing so may people. Guru Maharaj ji's meditation quiets the mind, it does not shut it off. It helps us to see such an abundance of beauty within, and that is where peace must begin. I do not want to even attempt to change or alter anyone's perceptions. I want only to clarify my own, and that involves reaching out and sharing. Meaningful dialogue is constructive for all of us, regardless of what we are searching for. When our goal is peace, it is so important.

Incredibly Yikki

To The Editor:

My thoughts have been running into that phenomenon, dog and cat shit.

Off the run way, walking away from Whitmore toward the library, I came across Dog Shit. I think "dog". I can't be sure. It was incredibly yikky.

Aghast, I decided to sit and study the situation. Withing five minutes ten people stepped in it, two people talked by it and twelve people thanked God they missed it. The ten were deeply affected by this. Their day marred. One girl even started to cry.

There's no excuse. This was a mean thing for any animal to do. But most people would pat the dog, and say, "good boy", condoning his filthiness.

I hope in the future you owners have the consideration (when you see your animal shitting in a public area) to either cup your hands or kick the miserable creature.

"Now if you fail to purchase this authentic hard plastic deluxe toy rifle for your child, we'll have no choice but to question your Christianity."

Chester J. Broderick, Chairman, Boston Police Patrolman's Association, in a speech last Thursday during which he asked Gov. Sargent to restore the death penalty.

Laugh At Estelle

To The Editor:

I am writing in regard to the November 30 column of Bob Estelle. From his description you would think the Communists are the only ones who persecute minority groups. I cannot get particularly excited about the rights of Soviet Jews when there are millions of people starving in the underdeveloped nations around the world.

Russian Jews resist the socialization process of the country they inhabit with their own culture, so naturally they are persecuted as aliens. I am sure most blacks can argue a very strong case for discrimination in the United States, despite being better off than the average persons in most other countries.

I can see nothing wrong with the Genocide Treaty or the Seabed Treaty. I feel all nations of the world have equal rights to the waterways; or would Bob Estelle like to see the capitalistic control of the sea's resources for only one nation's benefit.

I feel the U.S. system has made remarkable progress, but Bob Estelle is simply being ignorant if he denies the economic progress of a lot of Communist nations. In some instances (such as China) Communism broke the vicious cycles of poverty, and has caused progress never before realized under a capitalistic system. A lot of people couldn't care if the N.Y. Mets win the World Series, as long as they have something to eat.

I am in favor of attempts for a world union. The U.S. at present controls an extremely large percentage of the world's resources. This is not good since the U.S. has only a small percentage of the world's population. In a sense we are maintaining the poverty of the underdeveloped nations by not allowing them to ever be able to compete for resources. Only by renouncing national superiority and through mutual cooperation can the world ever get straightened out.

On the issue of Taiwan; I only recall Taiwan being removed from the Security Council, and not the General Assembly. This only makes sense when you consider the population difference between Red China and Taiwan. If Bob Estelle would like to learn the process of how Taiwan came into being, he should read the book A Nation of Sheep by Lederer. He would then realize that the Nationalist China government is an illegitimate one.

I am very critical of people that always exhibit liberal or conservative views simply for the sake of being a liberal or a conservative. I do not advocate being a moderate either. Moderates take the middle of the road on everything and never get anything done. In order to handle the social problems of today one must pick the route according to the situation.

I had to laugh at Bob Estelle's last line that "no one who is a true American should support the U.N." Ironically, people such as Bob Estelle who say "Love it, or leave it" are the ones that would enjoy Russian life best, where there is no freedom of speech or liberal opinions. People such as Bob Estelle (as exhibited by the Greek junta) are the ones who would set up a dictatorship in order to prevent the spread of Communism. The paranoid-persecution complex exhibited by Estelle makes such people more dangerous than the sinister forces from the East, which they fear.

Who The Hell?

To The Editor:

I would like to know who the hell the student senate thinks they are! When I have ever voted for any members in my dorm, I was always under the erroneous assumption that any senator running for office was, of course, trying to represent me. Ironically enough, anyone running for said office has always given that as his or hers most important promise. Once elected this changes. A senator on my floor told me that he was not representing me but himself. He told another person (at another time) that he didn't care if forty people on the floor told him something, he would vote his way unless someone changed his mind. Representation? Today I read a quote in the Collegian: (Thursday, December 6("The Unity State of the Senate, in introducing the bill for the special committee issued the following statement: "The basic issue is this government and how power is being used. We want to know what changes are going to take place to enable ALL SENATORS to have an active part in this government."

WHERE DOES THAT LEAVE ME? I would also like to know how the Student Senate explains this view on lettuce - from a female senator, "...The senators felt that if the students were allowed to vote on the issue of boycotting lettuce, they would vote against the boycott."

1. Thank you student senators for giving us such honorable distinction as scabs.
2. If the students did vote against the lettuce boycott, then whose right would it be to override it? Certainly not the Student (pompous) Senate!

I will never again vote for a UMass student senator. I don't repeat mistakes. Thank-you Student Senate for bringing us our own campus Watergate.

More Letters

Mt. Toby Rude

To The Editor:

This letter is another chapter in the never ending saga of the landlord-student relationship which exists for some people here in the Valley. This particular chapter deals with Mt. Toby Apartments on Route 47 in Sunderland, which is owned and managed by Woodbridge Associates of Springfield.

There are several anecdotes about our rather unpleasant stay here which involve a certain callousness, total ineptness, and gross lack of communication which is so incredible it's disgusting. The latest in a long line of events has pushed us past the brink.

Last week we received our new leases. They came in the mail with the president's signature on them and an accompanying letter asked us to please return the lease by December 10. Last month we received a notice that our rent would be changed from $210 a month to $200 a month plus utilities. At a tenants meeting held soon after that, the president of the firm was called on the phone. He stated that we should be able to heat our all-electric apartments for about $10 a month! We have since discovered that average yearly electricity costs for our complex are about $35 monthly! In the wintertime our bill can easily reach $50 a month. It must also be remembered that this amount is based on a commercial rate which is cheaper than what we will actually be paying. When they mailed the letters to us it was a take it or leave it position. No one came forth to discuss what action would be taken or what alternatives we had. The fact that they had a 30-day clause in our lease further clouds the issue. Legal Aid in Greenfield is trying to establish whether or not the scanty 4 paragraph letter we signed constitutes a legal lease. By the way, Chapter 186 section 15 (d) of the Massachusetts General Laws states that a landlord must explain the lease thoroughly.

They are in violation of Chapter 143 section 3 (r) of the same laws. This one deals with public safety and concerns itself with a common entranceway which is shared with other tenants.

Last month they sent us letters asking us to please be "courteous" and allow a surveying team into our apt. (They didn't have building plans!) The management, though, had gone to some tenants the week before and told them they had to let them in. Chapter 186 section 14 of the Mass. laws states that landlords should not make unannounced visits or inspections. There are possible criminal penalties for violations. At our first meeting it was revealed that at least one apt. was "entered" without permission (that's another chapter we won't get into) and some people feel that it might have happened to them while they were at school. By coincidence we left our dog inside the day the management and the surveying team came around to survey our place. (They didn't tell us!!) They went upstairs and asked one of our fellow tenants, "Is the dog downstairs friendly?" And there's more...

One day last month, coming into the driveway, we encountered a brand new sign on the front lawn--"Pond Ridge Condominiums'. Our apts were for sale (a 2 bedroom for only 20,000) and they hadn't even bothered to let us know. That's not illegal. It's about as rude as you can get.

Last year a tenant entered the laundry room and found a washer full of sewerage. (Tie-dye, anyone?) Apparently, the septic tank and leach field, (which are situated on bedrock, we've been told) were a bit inadequate They fixed it just last month. In the meantime we lived with the stench and the accompanying horde of flies. They didn't even answer our complaint about it.

The people living down the road at Pond Ridge and the farmhouse, both owned by Woodbridge, could even tell you more stories! Please! Do not patronize Woodbridge Associates of Springfield. These are the same people who are trying to sell you the Hampshire Village Condominium Complex. (Haven't you seen their huge, brightly lit billboard on Rt. 9?) Don't risk your sanity. We know what will happen!!!!

Refugees Wrong

To The Editor:

The Palestinians living in refugee camps are victims partly of misconceptions which we in the West have held for centuries. One misconception revolves around the notion that Islam inclines its adherents to wage war to a greater extent than religions such as Christianity or Judaism.

The original Islamic invasions were an indirect by-product of the new religion. Islam was a religion designed to meet the needs of urban peoples in the process of making the transition from tribal to urban life. Muhammad as leader of the Muslims first in Mecca and then in Medina became the most powerful leader of the Arabian peninsula. Bedouin tribal leaders entered into alliance with him in accordance with tribal custom and the terms of the contracts included adherence to Islam. Muslims were forbidden to war with Muslims so the energies of the tribesmen were directed towards the Eastern Roman Empire.

The unbearably heavy tax policies of the Eastern Roman Empire made the subjects of this empire reluctant fighters who were easily persuaded to give up arms in favor of more lenient rules. Apparently they also had faith that their lives and property would not be endangered by surrender.

The Bedouin tribesmen responsible for these conquests were quartered in garrisons apart from indigenous centers of population and were given intensive instruction in the Koran, as their understanding of Islam was rudimentary. The Islamic expansion was therefore initially due to an internal problem regarding groups of people whose way of life precluded a basic understanding of Islam and whose continued presence in the Arabian peninsula would have perpetuated warfare between the different tribes. I refer to Muhammad at Mecca and Muhammad at Medina by W. Montgomery Watt.

News Analysis

The Tapes: More Questions Than Answers

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nearly two weeks' testimony in federal court has raised more questions than were answered about the 18-minute gap in a subpoenaed Watergate tape.

Most attention was focused on how it could have happened.

But the attempt to answer that one big question raised a host of others, among them:

—Why was a taping system the White House says was "lousy" operated for two and one-half years with no attempt to improve it?

—What did the White House know about two conversations never recorded, and a third that included a gap, when it was arranging the so-called Stennis compromise for settling the battle over access to the nine subpoenaed recordings?

—Did the President ask his personal secretary, Rose Mary Woods, if she could explain the difference between the five minutes she thought she talked on the telephone and the 18 minutes obliterated on the tape she had on her recording machine?

—Did the President listen to that tape of his conversation June 20, 1972, with H.R. Haldeman?

Alexander P. Butterfield, the former White House aide who first disclosed the taping system, testified at the tapes hearing and later told newsmen he found it "unrealistic" to believe an inadequate system would have been installed in the executive offices.

"It is unreal to think that when the President of the United States gives an order to request equipment be installed in his office, in the Cabinet room, the Executive Office Building office and on his telephone, that the person charged with the responsibility would obtain equipment that would even risk inadequacy," said Butterfield, administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration.

When it was disclosed early in November that two presidential conversations had not been recorded and that others contained inaudible sections, Presidential Press Secretary Ronald L. Ziegler described the system as "lousy."

The President himself described it on Nov. 17 as not a sophisticated system.

The question of the tapes compromise put forward by the President on Oct. 19 arose at the hearings but was cut off before the witness, Alexander M. Haig Jr., White House chief of staff, could say anything about it.

On the night of Oct. 19, President Nixon said he would prepare summaries of the Watergate portions of the tapes, submit them to Sen. John C. Stennis, D-Miss., for verification, and then turn them over to the court and the Senate Watergate committee.

When special Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox rejected the proposal the next day, Nixon had him fired, which led to the resignations of Atty. Gen. Elliot L. Richardson and his deputy, William P. Ruckelshaus.

Assistant special prosecutor Richard Ben-Viniste asked Haig whether he had been involved in the compromise decision. The question prompted objections from White House attorneys, who said the compromise wasn't under consideration in the hearing.

After a bench conference, the hearing recessed for the day. When it reopened the next morning with Haig still on the stand, Ben-Veniste asked if the unrecorded conversations of the gap had entered into discussions leading up to the compromise.

"No, not in any way," said Haig.

He offered to "shed some light" on the compromise discussions, but U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica cut him off, saying he hadn't decided whether it was relevant to the proceedings.

Did the President get an explanation from Miss Woods of the time difference between the five-minute gap she thought she might have caused and the 18-minute gap finally discovered?

Miss Woods couldn't recall that he did. And, according to testimony, no one else pressed Miss Woods for what might have caused the time difference or the two distinct tones heard in the obliterated segment.

Neither could any witness say whether the President had listened to the June 20 tape other than on Sept. 29 at Miss Woods' Camp David, Md., cabin. She was trying to transcribe it and Nixon listened to brief segments after she complained how difficult is was to understand the conversation.

"I don't see how you're getting any of this, it's so bad," she quoted him as saying.

Kissinger On The Move

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press Writer

BRUSSELS (AP) — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger thanked Holland and Portugal yesterday for their support during the Middle East war and arranged to dispatch an energy expert to help the Dutch through the Arab oil boycott.

Kissinger's meetings with Max van der Stell, the Dutch foreign minister, and Rui Patricio of Portugal spotlighted the deep divisions between the United States and its other European allies.

U.S. officials hinted that Kissinger may try to prod the Europeans to share their dwindling oil supplies and that the United States will arrange emergency shipments for Holland if necessary.

He is sending William H. Donaldson, undersecretary of state for energy problems, to the Hague Dec. 17 for what are called "contingency talks."

Holland was targeted by Saudi Arabia and other Arab oil producers for an oil embargo because of its pro-Israel stance during the Middle East war.

Sunday Has No Gas

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

No gasoline for sale.

That was the news that greeted many motorists as America faced its second Gasless Sunday.

Most of the drivers seemed to adapt pretty well, however. An Associated Press survey showed only a few reports of motorists stranded on highways and unable to get fuel.

Bad weather across much of the country helped cut traffic and the need for gasoline. There was wintry weather in the eastern and north central states with snow and high winds in the northern plains and upper Mississippi Valley. Rain, freezing rain and some snow also kept people home on the East Coast.

The closing of the pumps was in response to President Nixon's plea two weeks ago for a voluntary ban on gasoline sales from 9 p.m. Saturday to midnight Sunday in an effort to ease the energy crunch.

Legislation expected to reach the House floor this week would give Nixon the power to make such closings mandatory.

An AP survey showed about 80 per cent of the nation's 220,000 service stations stopped selling gas last Sunday and spot checks indicated about the same number were closed this week.

Some individual stations switched signals. A Miami service station that remained open last week had a "closed" sign this Sunday and a Kingman, Ariz., station owner who shut his pumps last week said he had changed his mind.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Capricorn appreciates leather goods and Sagittarius always welcomes travel luggage. Virgo and Gemini readily accept reading material and Leo enjoys the flamboyance of the "big package." Libra will enthusuastically accept scents, perfumes, art materials. The gift lists for various zodiacial signs are varied and I am not an expert in this area. But Aries seldom rejects headgear and Tuarus will be delighted with an expensive, tasteful scarf.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Accent is on pull in two directions — one toward familiarity and security, the other toward mystery and intrigue. The choice is your own. If you reject one you are committed to, you can expect to pay a price in emotional turmoil.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Emphasis is on neighbors, relatives and the amount of responsibility you are willing to assume. Capricorn, Cancer persons could be involved. Nothing is taken lightly or happens halfway. Know it and don't think you are merely playing games. You soon find out otherwise!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Accent payments, collections, taking stock. Know where you stand. Don't hang on to losing issue. Get rid of burgen you should not be carrying. Aries can help show you the way. Be considerate without being foolish.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Be new, direct, independent, creative. Make new starts. Highlight independence. Your timing, feelings, intuition all are likely to be on target. Wear bright colors. Let others know you do have personality — and desires.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Look behind the scenes. Answers are available if you give full play to intuitive feelings. Aquarian is likely to be involved. You may feel pulled in two directions. You get constructive guidance through special organization.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Emphasis is on how you react to requests from friends, members of opposite sex and young persons. Key is to have humor. Also, you should be willing to make concessions, to experiment, to expand and to laugh at your own foibles. Shoot down icons!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Hard news is featured. Means you get the facts devoid of frills. You know what must be done and you have proper guidance, too. You can achieve. Professional superior is in your corner. What appears a roadblock could actually be a blessing in disguise.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Perception, creative thinking are featured. One at a distance wants to tell you something. Read between the lines. Listen well — you are in position to advance if you detect valid hints. Gemini, Virgo persons could be involved.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Money, investments, the way to save and conserve — these areas are spotlighted. Mate, partner could surprise with gift, purchase of luxury item. The way you live, your lifestyle — you will become more sensitive to that part of your existence, more so than usual.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Lie low. Check legal areas. Improve relationship with partner, mate. Defer final judgment. Wait, listen and observe. Avoid seeing through rose-colored glasses. You do best now by working behind the scenes. Act accordingly.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Older individuals figure prominently. Listen and learn from experience of others. Do this without abdicating your own individuality. Check work routine. Improve health regimen. One who serves you deserves commedation.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Accent is on ability to imprint style, personality. Popularity quotient is spotlighted. Your get around more — and more persons concede that you are on target. Aries, Libra persons could figure prominently.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are dynamic, independent, somewhat arrogant and very much a creative person. Many drawn to you are born under Leo and Aquarius. You made adjustment in domestic affairs in September. January will be one of your most important months of 1974.

Nixon Discloses Private Finances

By GAYLORD SHAW
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon is gambling more than a quarter-million dollars of his own money that a joint congressional committee will agree he paid the proper amount of federal income taxes since taking office.

As he made a massive, unprecedented disclosure of his private finances during the weekend, the President asked the House-Senate Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation to decide two questions:

—Did he act legally in claiming $500,000 in deductions for donation of his vice presidential papers to the government — deductions which helped reduce his federal income taxes to less than $6,000 in the past three years?

—Did he make a $117,000 gain in the 1970 San Clemente estate, as one set of personal auditors recently concluded, or did he show no gain, as his tax advisers decided at the time?

If the congressional committee decides against Nixon on both counts, presidential aides said Nixon would file amended returns and pay additional tax. That tax could amount to more then $250,000. With interest, the total could top $300,000.

Key elements disclosed in documents released by Nixon and by the examination of the President's 1969-1972 tax returns made available to newsmen show:

—He has become virtually a millionaire since taking office. An audit showed his net worth increased from $307,000 on Jan. 1, 1969, to $988,000 on May 31, 1973. His assets include about $430,000 in bank deposits and real estate valued at more than $964,000. Most of his liabilities are real estate mortgages.

—Because of major deductions for the vice presidential papers, for interest and property taxes, he was able to reduce his federal income tax liability to $72,682 for 1969, $793 for 1970, $878 for 1971 and $4,298 for 1972.

—He also claimed tax deductions for all operating expenses of one of his Key Biscayne, Fla., homes and for 25 per cent of his San Clemente operating expenses. And he pocketed as taxable income $89,000 of the nearly $200,000 he received as an expense allowance for official purposes.

—Since becoming President, he has paid no state or local income taxes. District of Columbia law exempts elected U.S. official from D.C. income taxes. He votes in California, and a Democrat state official in Sacramento said he will challenge Nixon's contention he was not required to pay California income taxes.

—During his vice presidency, a trust fund was set up for his daughter Tricia by Elmer Bobst, then chairman of the Warner-Lambert Pharmaceutical Co., while government regulation of the drug industry was being proposed.

—Tricia Nixon cashed in the trust fund's Warner-Lambert stock in 1967 and loaned her father $20,000 to invest in two Florida vacant lots costing $38,000. The lots were sold for $150,000 in 1972, and father and daughter are paying capital gains taxes on their shares of the profits.

—He and his wife have decided to turn their San Clemente estate over to the government upon their deaths. Since the estate is valued at more than $500,000, lawyers said Nixon could qualify for an immediate tax deduction of $120,000 if the deed is signed over seen. But presidential aides said it is unlikely Nixon would claim any such deduction.

Vice President Gerald R. Ford, appearing on ABC's "Issues and Answers" on Sunday, said giving the San Clemente home to the government should "wipe out any alleged...impropriety" in Nixon's tax payments.

Ford said examination of Nixon's financial disclosures "will satisfy any reasonable member" of Congress or the public that the President acted properly.

The White House said Nixon sent a private letter to the congressional committee during the weekend asking it to undertake the independent review. The panel's chairman, Rep. Wilbur D. Mills, D-Ark., had agreed to do so when Nixon telephoned him last Thursday.

Mills said he did not know how the committee would proceed, but indications were that the issues raised by Nixon would be turned over to its staff of tax experts for study.

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — A Democratic member of the state Franchise Tax Board says he'll challenge President Nixon's tax status under which the chief executive paid no California income tax for the period of his presidency.

"I was amazed at the report," said William M. Bennett, referring to the White House statement that said Nixon was a resident of the District of Columbia-not California-for income tax purposes.

"I thought he had filed a tax return," said Bennett, who said he would make the challenge tomorrow.

The White House issued a written opinion from Los Angeles tax attorney Dean S. Butler which said Nixon "is not a resident of the state of California for purposes of paying California income taxes...and is not obligated to file a residency income tax return from 1969 to the present time."

White House sources said Nixon would have had a state tax obligation of about $64,000 if required to file a California return. The tax rate on his salary in California would be 11 per cent.

State law forbids officials from discussing any aspect of an individual's income tax status-even whether he or she files a return.

Bennett raised the question of Nixon's state income tax liability a month ago, saying he wanted to know if the President was fully meeting his obligation.

Bennett said at that time he assumed that Nixon was filing California returns. He specifically wanted to know if he had reported such items as capital improvements from his San Clemente property.

After the White House report was released Saturday, Bennett said: "We know that he lives in San Clemente. We know that is his home. Unless there is an exemption there presumably is a tax liability."

Bennett also was challenged the rate of local property taxes Nixon has been assessed at San Clemente.

State Controller Houston I. Flourney, a Republican and chairman of the Franchise Tax Board, said earlier that Bennett's request probably would be taken up in executive session because of the confidentiality factor.

Bennett said, "What I will be discussing is the law. There's nothing confidential about any of that."

The law on state residency for income tax purposes is complex.

Martin Huff, executive officer of the Franchise Tax Board, said last week that voting residence is not a factor.

But the "Guidebook to California Taxes" lists voting residence as one of the tests given to determine if a person is a resident of California for tax purposes.

Huff listed the following qualifications for liability: "every individual who is in this state for other than a temporary or transitory purpose. Every individual domiciled in this state who is outside the state for a temporary or transitory purpose. Any individual who is a resident of this state continues to be a resident even though temporarily absent from the state."

Arabs Pledge To Lift Embargo When Israel Leaves Land

By FRANK N. HAWKINS JR.
Associated Press Writer

KUWAIT (AP)-Arab oil ministers said yesterday they will cut back oil production by another 5 per cent in January, but pledged to lift their total embargo against the United States as soon as Israel starts pulling out of occupied Arab lands.

The pledge issued in this wealthy Persian Gulf oil sheikdom stipulated that Arab oil would resume flowing to the United States only at the beginning of implementation of a pullout agreement signed by Israel and guaranteed by Washington.

The accord must detail conditions for "withdrawal of Israel from all territories occupied since the June war of 1967, with foremost priority to Jerusalem and in accordance with a fixed timetable," the ministers said.

The Saudi Arabian oil minister, Sheik Ahmed Zaki Yamani, said in Washington on NBC's "Meet the Press" that Arabs would remove the U.S. embargo "when Israel agrees to withdraw and the United States guarantees the withdrawal" from lands occupied since the outbreak of the 1967 war.

Yamani's version of the Arab stand appeared softer, tying the flow of oil only to a guaranteed agreement and omitting the Kuwait demand for prior beginning of the pullout.

Yamani's partner in a world tour explaining Arab oil policy, Algerian Industry Minister Belaid Abdesalam, told reporters in Washington earlier that U.S.-bound oil shipments can resume as soon as Israel sets the timetable for total withdrawal to its 1967 borders.

The announcement of another 5 per cent reduction in the month-by-month worldwide oil squeeze came just nine days before the Arab-Israeli peace conference opening in Geneva Dec. 18.

It and the offer of renewed oil shipments to the United States were clearly intended to strengthen the Arab negotiating hand in the talks. The Arab idea was that the United States and its European allies will be more apt to pressure Israel for withdrawal concessions as they feel their oil supplies diminishing further in winter temperatures.

The Arab stand was defined at a Saturday meeting here of oil ministers and other representatives of the 10 members of the Organization of Arab Petroleum Exporting Countries. The delegates said the new cut will begin on schedule Jan. 1 and will amount to 5 per cent of December's already slashed production levels.

The Arab oil nations decided Oct. 17 to cut back production 5 per cent a month until Israel pulls out of the Egyptian, Jordanian and Syrian land captured in 1967 and the Syrian and Egyptian land captured in the October Middle East War.

On Nov. 4 they increased the initial cutback to 25 per cent, with the 5 per cent monthly reduction still applying. In addition, the Arab nations totally halted oil shipments to the United States and the Netherlands in retaliation for Middle East policies viewed as particularly pro-Israeli.

Their squeeze-denounced as blackmail by their opponents and praised as good strategy by their backers-has made the world energy shortage even more acute and contributed to severe disruptions in Europe and the United States.

Big Defense Contractors Donated $5.4 Million To Campaign

By DON McLEOD
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Officials of the country's 100 biggest defense contractors gave more than $5.4 million to President Nixon's re-election campaign last year, Rep. Les Aspin said yesterday.

Aspin said the figure represents only the known contributions, but he suggested there may be more unreported. He said he is asking the Senate Watergate committee to look into the possibility of still secret gifts.

The Wisconsin Democrat also said a pattern to some gifts suggested that some money may have been from corporate funds, illegal under federal law.

Aspin said his study is "solid evidence of the endless trade-off between big business and the Pentagon. It shows unmistakably the stake big business has in maintaining a bloated military budget."

"When you get right down to it, many defense contracts are nothing more than political patronage, and here's the proof," he said.

Aspin said he found the gifts "particularyly alarming" because of the government contracts held by the donors involving public money.

"There is every reason to believe that, in more than a few cases, tax money has been used to make these contributions," he said.

Aspin said the largest contributions were made by oil, electronics and aircraft companies. The largest item on his list is $1,039,000, which he said cmae from officials of the Gulf Oil Corp., and members of the Scaife family.

IBM was second with $326,545. Tenneco, the sixth ranking defense contractor and builder of nuclear craft for the Navy, gave $307,286, according to Aspin.

Other familiar names on the list include: Litton Industries, $226,187; RCA, $172,636; American Motors, $159,577; Standard Oil of California, $157,500; Ford, $133,441; Du Pont, $129,675; Standard Oil of New Jersey Exxon, $119,373, and General Motors, $93,247.

Additional government contractors, whose officials or employes gave smaller amounts, include: General Dynamics, McDonnell Douglas, Flying Tiger airlines, Goodyear, General Telephone, Texaco, Hughes, Lockheed, Gulf & Western, Westinghouse, Motorola, ITT, General Electric, Shell Oil, Sperry Rand, Xerox, Bendix and Chrysler.

Aspin said nearly two-thirds of the money, $3.2 million, was given before the April 7, 1972, starting date of the new law requiring reporting of contributions and was revealed under court order. He said the $5.4-million total was "probably just the tip of the iceberg."

Social Security Question Unanswered

By JOE HALL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — With the congressional session nearing an end, the question of whether, and when, 30 million Social Security recipients will gain an 11 per cent increase in benefits next year remains unanswered.

The House and Senate have approved a two-step boost, but they acted on separate bills. A procedural tangle makes the future of the two bills in the next two weeks highly uncertain. Congressional leaders hope to end the 1973 session Dec. 21.

At the least, a delay in Social Security payments is in prospect.

The measures were originally interim cost-of-living increases of 5.9 per cent, effective next June. But rapidly rising prices convinced Congress the 5.9 per cent was too little and next June was too late.

So the House passed legislation calling for a 7 per cent increase in March and 4 per cent more in June. The Senate voted for 7 per cent immediately and 4 per cent next June.

The Senate attached the two-step increase, as well as many controversial welfare provisions, to a minor bill it received last April from House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Wilbur D. Mills, D-Ark.

Rep. Al Ullman, D-Ore., who served as acting chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee much of this year because Mills was ill, said the Senate had added so many complex provisions that he did not think a conference was possible with so little time left.

Increased Service Considered For Campus Busses

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS SOUTHWEST

Present bus service will continue next semester while the possibilites for increased service and new routes are being considered, according to H. Jack Littlefield, Director of Planning at UMass.

"We want to expand the service," said Littlefield, "But we have to be careful that we don't stretch our existing services or resources too thin."

Littlefield said that the sixteen transit service buses are "stretched tightly" to serve the peripheral lots and the approximately 5,000 people along the present routes.

The possibility of new routes is being studied and will probably necessitate the purchasing of more busses, Littlefield said. Currently, the transit service has attempted to meet the desire of Belchertown residents for service but under the existing system, busses are available for the Belchertown run only at times when the service isn't particularly needed by the Belchertown residents.

Three more busses were purchased last August and have been operating with $191,950 provided by a Dept. of Transportation grant announced by Rep. Silvio O. Conte this week.

The purpose of the bus system, according to Littlefield, is to decrease the number of cars on campus while increasing pedestrian safety. Approximately 12,000 cars are presently registered on campus. During the 72-73 school year, 16,000 were registered. Littlefield attributes the decline registered on campus this year to the new parking system and the bus service.

The bus system was established by a Dept. of Transportation grant of $475,000 in 1972. UMass matched the grant with $188,000. UMass under the terms of the grant has to fund the operation of the busses starting January 1974. The $411,000 needed to operate the parking and transportation system for the 73-74 fiscal year has been raised through revenues from the registration of cars on campus, the UMass administration, the undergraduate Student Senate, parking meters, and the balance of last year's car registration fees.

SW Assembly Has New Vice-President

Elections last Thursday night for Vice President of Southwest Assembly, surprised many. Larry Sinewitz was an expected candidate, and it was rumored that a woman would also be nominated. The woman nominated was Barbara Ramsey. The surprise came when president, Larry St. Cyr, nominated last semester's vice president, and current Chairperson of the Social Action Committee, Craig Sanderson. He won.

Sanderson said he didn't know he would be elected, but is pleased and will work to his greatest potential.

Despite his amazement and bewilderment towards the nomination and election, Sinewitz said, "I feel that Craig will do an outstanding job. And, I will work with him and the assembly in any way I can."

Prior to the SW Assembly meeting, a Constitutional Convention was held with representatives of the dorms in SW, but no major changes occurred.

The only motions passed at the Assembly meeting involved the salaries of the SW officers, for the academic year 1973-1974, and the recommendation to dorms in SW to voluntarily turn off unnecessary lights. This includes turning off every other light in the corridors. The lights in front of the elevators and in the stairwells must stay on, the Business Office said.

A motion to allocate $600 to the Little Review, an experimental literary magazine, was defeated because of the limited SW budget.

A motion to ask Collegian editors to give space to the Assembly for the publication of proposals for meetings and the results was also defeated.

Face cringing intensely, fingers breezing over the strings of his double-necked guitar, John McGluaghlin's serene music filled the Student Union Ballroom on this past October 26. I used a telephoto lens on a 35 millimeter camera, sat directly in front of the stage, nudging spectators (making a few enemies), aimed a McGlaughlin and waited... for the perfect moment when the lighting, the background, and McGlaughlin's expression were just right.

United Farm Workers picketing the Food Mart in Northampton.

UFW Picket Ends In Anger

What began as a peaceful picket of the Food Mart chain store in Northampton, Saturday, by the United Farm Workers, ended in near violence and anger when a collision of a picket and a car brought six police cruisers and a paddy wagon to the parking lot. When the dust had cleared, no charges had been filed against anyone connected with the incident, the Farmworkers left, vowing to return this weekend, and the Northampton Police say if there is trouble again there will be arrests made.

Trouble began late in a day that had been tense from the word go. Pickets arrived at the store around 11:15, and by noon 12 of them walked in front of the store passing out leaflets and talking to customers. But, already, there was a uniformed security guard watching all that was taking place.

Most of the picketers said the Food Mart was the only store where they had seen security people, but the guard, Officer Roberge of the Sykes Security Agency, said it was a normal practice of stores to provide protection from potential trouble.

When he was asked what sort of trouble he expected, and what he could do about it, Roberge said, "If they get out of line, bothering customers, or if they stop moving, we call the cruisers and pick them up. There should be four more officers here later to make sure there isn't any trouble."

When Ken Allen, one of the demonstration coordinators, was told of the threat of arrests, he and others standing near said they were ready to be arrested if that was needed.

In fact, many of the demonstrators felt that the store's tactics helped the cause of the Farmworkers, by scaring away potential customers, who would see the uniformed security people, and might also witness the police arrests if they occurred.

The store manager refused to comment or even to reveal his name, but after a short time he did make a side remark. He said, "I wished they (the pickets) would move farther back and quit bothering the customers. I've had a lot of complaints from the customers that some of those pickets refused to let them by."

Around two o'clock, the Northampton police came in response to a store complaint that the pickets were harrassing customers. The police cruiser idled for fifteen minutes before leaving to cries of "turn off your engine your wasting fuel." They were to return later.

The customers that were interviewed, did not, for the most part, seem that concerned by the picketing, although many said that they were not buying nonunion grapes.

Some did so in support of the Farmworkers, but others said, "They're too expensive to buy anyway." One woman who was waiting for her ride outside the store, seemed particularly upset.

When asked if the demonstrators bothered her, she said, "Yes, they do. I shop where I can save the most money. These people without the war to demonstrate against, have to find something else, and I just don't like the feeling I get when I see them standing there. In America we have so much, that it doess't seem right that someone always has to be demonstrating against something."

Relations between this group of pickets and the store employees were bad to begin with. For example, employees stood in front of the store and ate grapes while hurling taunts.

Early in the day I witnessed a car with four employees leave the parking lot with the tires squealing, narrowly missing a woman picket. A similar situation later brought about the confrontation between the police and the demonstrators.

Everyone concerned has a different account of what happened, but it is agreed that at approximately 3:30, a car in the parking lot came close to hitting, or did actually make slight contact with one of the pickets, who now numbered around 35.

The police were called and responded with six cruisers and the paddy wagon, the officers in riot gear, did not make any arrests, but threatened to arrest demonstrators on grounds of disorderly conduct. Rather than have anyone arrested, the Farmworkers left, but will return to picket the store.

Asked about the incident Sunday night, the desk officer at the Northampton Police station said, "There were no charges pressed against the driver of the car, because there was no contact made, and the pickets provoked the incident by continually jumping in front of cars. The driver of the car was not an employee of the Food Mart. We have received complaints of customer harrassment and legally we can arrest those pickets if they refuse to leave the store parking lot when asked."

The U.F.W. has not decided yet what further action they will take regarding the original incident, but they will be back in force this Saturday at the same store, and this week they hope to have an all woman picket line to test the store management. Whatever the outcome, things appear to have reached a more heated point in the boycott movement locally.

Hope For Victims Of Violent Crimes

(The following is a true account of an episode that took place in the Five College area. Only the names have been left out. All the facts remain.)

One February night this year, at 11:00 p.m., a 23 year old man and his dog were walking home from a visit with a friend. This man, who we will know as John, lived at the college where he was employed.

As John turned the corner to the road that led home, he saw a man running up the street. His dog saw the man, too, and started to bark.

"Hey dude," the man said as he came up to John. "Call your dog off."

John assured the man that his dog would not harm him. The dog was a six-months old puppy and had not come near the man. John felt that the man was somewhat hostile, but was not worried because he turned and walked away without saying anything else.

The man walked about 50 feet and then stopped. John kept on walking as he approached him the man turned suddenly at him.

"What's the name of the street there?" he asked. John noted that the man was nervous and agitated. He tried to assure him that he was only walking home from a friend's house and didn't know the name of the street. Then he turned around so he could see the street sign, and as he did he saw another man turn the corner and come up towards him from behind. At the same time, the first man walked ahead of John about 100 feet. John was now in front of a cemetary.

The first man started walking quickly towards John. This made him feel relieved because he figured the man would pass right by and he could get on his way home. But the man did not pass right by. Instead, he threw John against the chain link fence of the cemetery, whirled him around to face the street, and punched him in the mouth.

John was knocked to the ground, blood pouring from his mouth. He saw the man who had been behind him come up and yell at the first man not to hit him again. The second man embraced the first man, and the two of them ran down the street.

John struggled to his feet and back to his friend's house to call the police. The police took him to the hospital, where he stayed for four days to recover his injuries. After that he was treated by his personal physician.

John's jaw had been broken in several places. His hospital, doctor, and dentist bills together came to almost $800. But he couldn't recover his loss by suit because his assailant had not been found.

So John filed a claim to the Commonwealth through the office of the Attorney General. Under Chapter 258a of the Massachusetts General Law there is a statute that provides for victims of violent crimes to petition to recover their losses up to $10,000 subject to $100 deductable. This statute also includes a provision for wages lost during recovery period.

There was a court hearing and John's medical bills have been paid. He did not lose any wages from missing work, or that would have been taken care of by the state, too.

Few people are aware of the alternative of John's course of action. If a victim is unable to locate the offender to sue, or if the offender cannot satisfy a suit, a claim can be filed with the state. John's case has been made public to this extent so that others who find themselves in similar circumstances will know how to recover as a victim of a violent crime.

Benefit Discrepancy

If the University can give greater benefits to the professional staff members, then why should the non-professional staff members not have reason to expect the same?

One University employee, Mr. Stephen Kozloski, a technical specialist for the physical plant would like to test these issues in the courts, and is presently looking into the possibilites of such a court battle.

Until this occurs, the questions of benefit discrimination will remain just that: questions.

Pre '65 Grad Computers: Inefficient, Uncooperative

The University's own "Hal the Computer" resides in the Kubrick-like computer room in the Grad Research Center. However, Hal seems to be having his problems. Just like Hal, our computer isn't always on the human's side.

Hal is one of the two GRES (Graduate Research) computers. The GRES computers are available to students and faculty for use in research projects and class problems.

The computer center houses two large machines, one to handle batch processing (the service window) and the other to handle time-sharing terminals scattered throughout the campus. If one fails ("goes down" in computer lingo) the remaining machine can do its work, although it must divide its time.

A major problem has resulted in decreased efficiency of the computers. The computer center was originally to have had a different air conditioner from the rest of the building to provide adequate cooling (the computer shuts off automatically at 75 degrees). However, it was decided (no one knows by whom or how) that one system would be adequate for both the computer center and the rest of the center.

In the summer the air conditioning provides insufficient cooling, while in the fall, the system is shut off for the winter. Either a warm day in between that time or a day when the air conditioner is turned on in the spring will cause the computer to "go down".

To solve this about a year ago two free-standing air conditioning units that operate independently of the building system were brought in. If the outside temperature is less than 70 degrees, these air conditioners can maintain the computer temperature. A third unit will be put into operation in a month.

The percentage of time the computer is "up" (operating) is figured weekly. While the desired figure is over 99%, the actual average is only 85 - 95 percent.

This summer the system failed from a Friday to a Tuesday. The computer scored only a 60% average that week. The failure was due to rust in the pipes that carry cooling water to the air conditioner. When the computer fails, it takes three full weeks to bring the systems up to 95%. The rate of failure begins high and tapers off during this period. The weeks following the worst week were 86 %, 67%, 71%, 86% and finally 97%. If the computer fails even once a week it is impossible to keep a good percentage.

Even more important than the average, according to Dave Stempel, Associate Director Systems Research and Development, is the number of times the computer goes down. This he calls the "Frustration Figure" — and this is where the complaints stem from. A student is just completing a problem, the computer fails and the calculations are lost. Conrad Wogrin, Director of University Computer Services, says that he totally sympathizes with these students and that their frustration is fully justified.

Other problems exist besides those caused by the air conditioner. This summer brought a humidity problem. Also, so much time was taken in repairs that the preventative maintenance schedule could not be met. David Musante, Associate Director of Computer Operations Administration, says that these problems have been taken care of. Now preventative maintenance is done every Monday morning from 4 - 8 a.m. Breakdowns also had a negative effect on staff training and morale.

Wogrin says that the machines are normally serviced by university people and that "the people from the plant work hard." He does admit that the University sometimes waits too long before bringing in outside help if the problems require it. He calls this a case of "putting dollars before efficiency."

Stempel said that more emphasis will be placed on students, largely undergraduates, using remote computer terminals. This includes informing them of computer failures over UMass news media. He further says that "the overwhelming focus of the center will move to these remote terminals."

These machines are pre-1965, a factor which adds to their inefficiency. A recommendation has been passed on to Chancellor Bromery for leasing a new computer to serve the Boston and Amherst campuses. The date for replacement should be July, 1974. The other machine may be replaced about seven months later.

Benefit Discrepancy Seen For State Employees

There exists a discrepancy between what the UMass administration considers an employee benefit and what the state law says about them.

From Chapter 75 of the Massachusetts General Laws, Annotated (commonly called the autonomy bill); "All officers and employees, professional and non-professional, of the university shall be considered employees of the Commonwealth, irrespective of the source of funds from which their salaries or wages are paid. They shall have the same priviliges and benefits as other employees of the Commonwealth such as retirement benefits, group insurance, industrial accident coverage, and other coverage enjoyed by all employees of the Commonwealth."

Benefits and privileges for employees of the Commonwealth are described in a 33 page pamphlet called the "Red Book". This pamphlet covers rules and regulations pertaining to vacation, sick leave, travel, overtime and accident prevention. It is authorized by Chapter Seven, Section 28 of the General Laws.

The discrepancy arises on the question of vacations. According to the Red Book, all persons are entitled to not more than ten days vacation after the first year of service, eventually leading up to four weeks vacation after the tenth year of service.

The university, however, has two different vacation schedules. One is for professional employees and the other is for non-professional staff. The University even prints two separate pamphlets describing employee benefits, one for the professional staff and one for the non-professional (classified) staff. The professional staff receives four weeks of vacation time after the first year of service, while the non-professional staff receives two weeks of vacation, the same as any other state employee.

The personnel supervisor for the University, Mr. DeNyse, feels that this benefit discrimination is legal. He justifies it by citing another paragraph in Chapter 75 of the General Laws which says: "The trustees shall have complete authority with respect to the election or appointment of professional staff including terms, conditions and periods of employment, compensations, promotion, classification and reclassification, transfer, demotion and dismissal within funds available by appropriations of the general court or other sources."

Mr. DeNyse feels that, "Terms and conditions cover fringe benefits." He also pointed out that professional and non-professional employees have "always been treated differently.

Mr. Kenneth Johnson, who has been the Treasurer of the University since 1951, agrees substantially with Mr. DeNyse's views on this matter. He views vacation time as a term and a condition of employment and also as a form of compensation. He feels that the professional employees of the University do not get overtime pay and therefore deserve more vacation time. "In a way, you might say that for giving up overtime, they got more vacation. But I don't look at it as a trade-off," said Treasurer Johnson.

Another discrepancy arises over the interpretation of the word, benefit. The University administration does concede that a vacation is a benefit. As a matter of fact, the category marked "vacations" is the first in the University Pamphlets called "Benefit Program for Professional Staff" and "Benefit Program for Classified Staff". It would seem that the University considers vacations a rather important benefit, since it sees fit to mention it before any others in its own brochures.

But the administration also feels that a vacation is more than a benefit; it also consitututes a term and condition of employment and a compensation, and as such, the trustees have jurisdiction over vacation time.

Since vacation time is a benefit (and it may also be other things,) all employees of the University are entitled to as much vacation time as any other state employee. If the professional employees get two weeks more vacation time at the beginning of their service, than half of their vacation is a benefit and the other half would have to be a term or condition of employment, or compensation. The situation seems a choreography of semantics and legal terminology at once both confusing and provocative. It raises several significant questions.

First of all, what is the legal status of vacation time? This will be up to the legislature or the courts to decide, not the University.

Who's Who?

If you want to be nominated for Who's Who among students, all you have to do is nominate yourself, with a list of your outstanding qualities, get a friend to sign the paper and get it to the Student Senate Office by next Monday, Dec. 10.

But it's a little harder to get selected; you must be a junior or a senior and really have been involved in something with a few good grades.

Once you've been nominated, the Student Senate makes up a committee of six to ten people to review all the nominees and to select 32 from the initial bunch of about 150. Then from these 32, one will be selected this semester to be the Who's Who of UMass.

If you know anyone who should be a Who's Who due to their involvement in campus or community activities, just drop off a brief statement of what they have done and who he or she is at 420 Student Union by 4 p.m., Dec. 10, or contact Steve Barbano at the Student Senate office.

Voices Of New Africa

Playing before a packed house, last Thursday night, the Voices of New Africa House sang songs ranging from the Johnson Brothers (Lift ev'ry Voice and Sing) to the Edwin Hawkins (Come And Go With Me To My Father's House). This last song, by Beareather Reddy, brought the audience to its feet.

The Voices of New Africa House is loaded with talent; with the likes of Freda K. Pullen, Walter Howard, Beareather Reddy, L. Nathaniel Anderson, L. Van Jackson and, of course, the rest of the Voices. I put them in the same class with the Edwin Hawkins Singers and the James Cleveland Singers. I'm not trying to compare the Voices of New Arica House with professional groups, but next time the Voices play, hurry home or back to the dorm and put on the Hawkins Singers or the Cleveland Singers and listen very carefully. I bet you can't tell the difference between the three. Then, again, I keep on forgetting that the Voices of New Africa House are 'avant-garde'.

Bromery Residence: House On The Hill

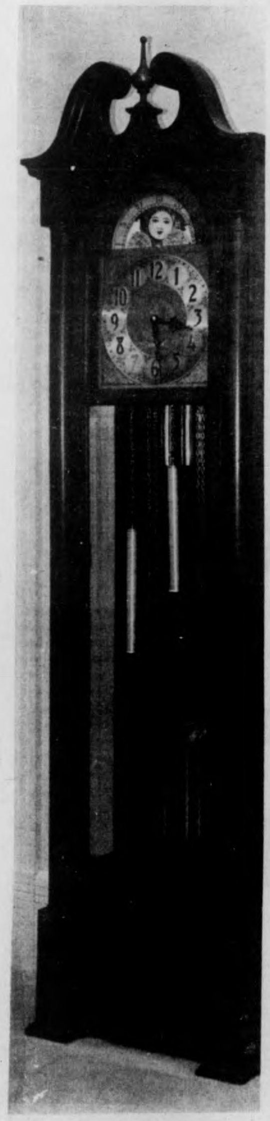
It's not quite 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue. In fact from the outside it looks more like a gingerbread house. It's most distinguishing features are Ngombes and a Grandfather's clock.

But let us go back to the beginning.....

Once upon a time, the president of Massachusetts State Agricultural College (alias UMass) decided that a house ought to be built especially for presidents of Mass Aggie.

So in 1883 the house was started, a white story-book kind of a house, right in the middle of the orchard hill.

Since that time ten presidents and two chancellors have lived there, including the present residents Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery and his family, who have lived there since September 1972.



(Staff-Photo-John Stewart)

"It's not a very unusual Grandfather's clock, except perhaps for the little sun painted above it's face."

Actually, the Bromerys would rather be elsewhere.

The Chancellor, expressing the feelings of himself and his family, listed some of the drawbacks of living in a "presidential palace".

1) Isolation. People looking for the house have often misplaced it and have wanderedaround the hill for hours.

2) Distinct lack of a neighborhood. This is hardest on the two littlest Bromerys who, according to their father, ask when they are going home. (The family used to live in Amherst).

But the house is convenient for social functions because a baby-sitter does not have to be found for the youngsters.

Also, by living on campus Bromery says his wife and children feel more like participants in the Chancellor's work and University llfe.

3) Formality. Indeed, almost the entire first floor is done in hush-hush tones of blue, green and white, and in don't-touch-me materials.

Except the den.

Now, here is a room with a definite personality. It is bursting with articles from Ziare, Kenya, and the Ivory Coast which are just a few of the eighteen African countries Chancellor Bromery has visited on geological expeditions.

There are ivory figurines and carved wooden masks, one of which was given to Bromery by the president of Malawi, a red and black leather hassock from Alexandria and wooden plates with ivory inlays also from Egypt.

There are carved dolls that pregnant women of a particular tribe bind across their abdomens to assure a well-formed baby; black and white Mali blankets hang on one wall, and the subjects are exclusively dancers or animals.

There is even what appears to be a brilliant green Easter egg, but it is really a sample of copper ore, or malachite.

But most striking are a pair of Ngombes, paintings by the untrained African artist done only of women who are wrapped up in great capes because he can not paint arms or hands.

Elsewhere there is an embroidered red silk panel, given to world-reknowned Black Leader W.E.B. du Bois when he was in China in 1959, and, in turn, given by his widow to Bromery.

And of course there is the Grandfather's clock.

Now it is not a very unusual Grandfather's clock, except perhaps for the little sun painted above its face.

But hopefully it is the beginning of a tradition. Bromery would like to see a custom established whereby every chancellor who inhabits the house would leave a valuable article behind when he leaves.

Chancellor Bromery will leave his Grandfather's clock. He will make his mark on the gingerbread house.

Bus Drivers Urge For Increase

By MIKE KNEELAND

The Daily Collegian learned Saturday that some bus drivers are urging a strike unless they receive a $.25 per hour wage increase. Most student drivers are paid $2.25 per hour.

These drivers, who asked not to be identified, said their pay is nonetheless inadequate.

Salaries are funded partially be a federal grant and partially by the Student Senate. A pay increase must therefore be approved by the Student Senate and the Vice Chancellor for Administrative Services, Thomas B. Campion.

Nick Apostola, president of the student government association, said he wanted to better familiarize himself with the situation before forming an opinion.

Bob Godding, Operations Manager for the Student Senate Transit Service, said a merit increase to the drivers is under consideration. He said that drivers who perform their job well would get a raise by semesters under the proposed system. Godding said he did not know how much of a raise this would be.

"I doubt if it (a strike) would happen," Godding said. "I don't think most of the drivers would support it."

If the drivers were to strike, Godding said he would find people to replace them.

Busdrivers randomly phoned by the Collegian said they had not heard of strike plans.

"I'd strongly disagree with a strike," said driver Paul Jablonski. "Pay increases should be on a merit basis."

Another driver, who asked that his name be withheld, said he thinks it's a crime that the drivers haven't received a pay raise "in quite some time." He added, however, that he can also sympathize with the management.

Driver Dave Holton said he hadn't heard of any planned strike. He said he could not foresee a strike but would "lean toward striking" if the merit increase was not approved.

It is quite obvious that strike organizers have much more organizing to do and that 100 per cent cooperation seems unlikely.

Nevertheless, if such a strike were to take place many UMass commuters would face hardships. Most would be forced to thumb to school...and these is ever present danger to hitchhikers, especially women.

Weather:
Happy Hannukah to all, and to all a good night.

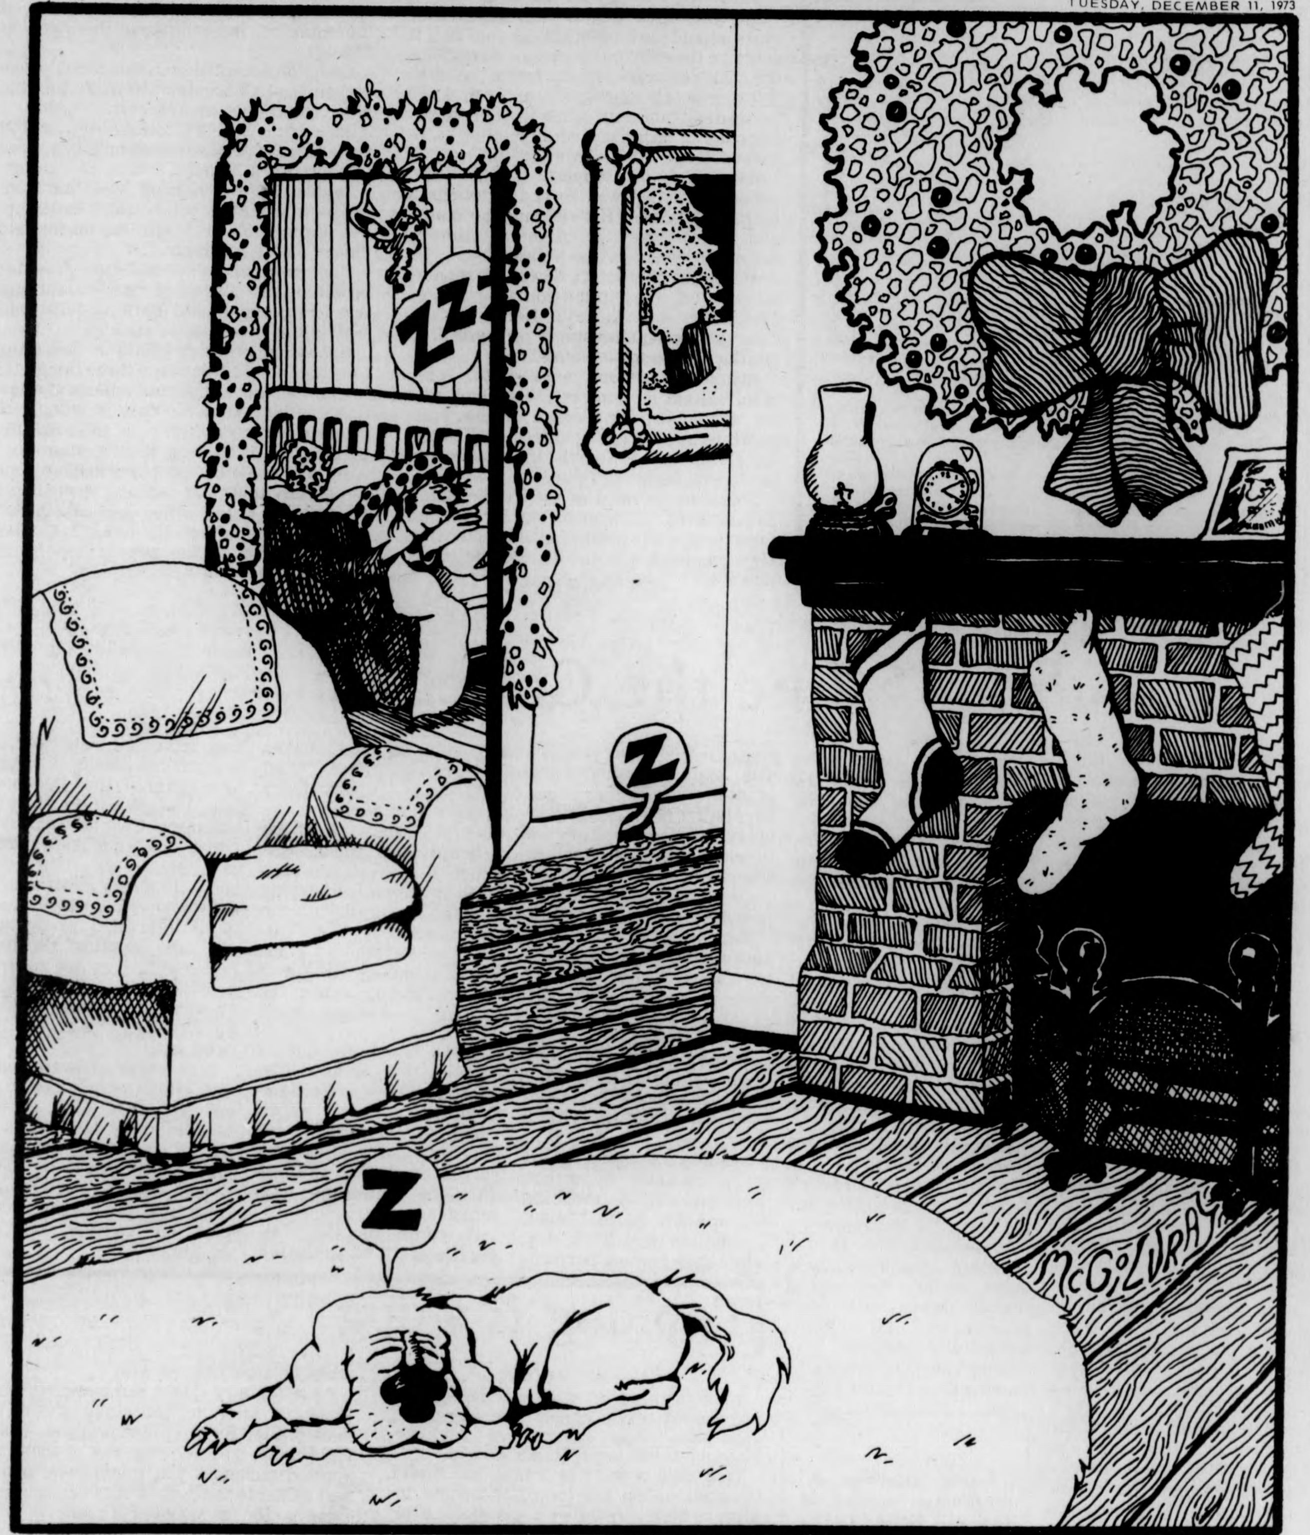

graphics by McGilvray

Twas the night before Christmas when all through the house
Not a creature was stirring not even a mouse.
The stockings were hung by the chimney with care In hopes that Saint Nicholas soon would be there.
The children were nestled all snug in their beds While visions of sugarplums danced in their heads.
And Mamma in her kerchief and I in my cap Had just settled down for a long winter's nap.

Take her away, Mac?

By FRITS GEURTSEN

Did you know that if you had five or more unpaid parking tickets on your car, it could be towed from anywhere on campus whether you were legally parked or not?

It's true. Or rather it was until 11:30 yesterday morning when a temporary restraining order and an injunction were served to David L. Johnston, director of Public Safety on campus.

The injunction was served by Richard Fish, deputy sheriff of Hampden County, and Harry Miles, an Amherst attorney acting on behalf of the petitioners.

Although there are two petitioners named on the injunction — Jeffrey Nathanson and Kathryn Berson, it's a class action suit involving all those in a similar situation.

Injunctions were served to Johnston, William A. Lambert, vice chancellor for Administrative service of the Transportation and Parking office, and Thomas B. Campion. A fourth injunction was served to Amherst Towing.

Johnston, as head of the Public Safety Department, is responsible for the enforcement of the policy concerning towing. He accepted the injunction behind closed doors.

Lambert, representing the Transportation and Parking Office, was served the injunction in his office at the Physical Plant.

Campion accepted two injunctions — one on behalf of Chancellor Bromery and the other for UMass at Amherst.

So what's an injunction? It's a bill requiring the people named on it to appear in court for a hearing.

In this case the hearing is set for Wednesday morning at nine o'clock in Hampden County Court House in Springfield before Judge Moriarty.

The temporary restraining order prohibits any towing of cars on campus due to excess unpaid parking fees until Wednesday morning at nine.

According to Harry Miles, at that time, the judge can decide one of three things: 1) to approve the restraining order and allow it to continue until the case is brought to court in early February; 2) to revise the petition; or 3) to deny it altogether.

If there are other people who have been wrongfully towed on campus, they should go down to Miles' office and sign an affadavit to that effect. His office is located in the Carriage Shoppes at 233 North Pleasant Street in Amherst.

It doesn't look like the Collegian...

By ALVIN OICKLE
(Collegian Advisor)

Your are in the middle of a laboratory.

Yes, right here as you read today's Daily Collegian. The newspaper is the lab and you are a visitor as a reader.

Those who read the daily newspaper regularly have recognized some strange changes the past few days. It's all part of Experiment Week on the top floor of the Student Union, where the Collegian staff tries to get it all together five times a week.

The newspaper for the first 61 issues of this semester published rather faithfully the familiar five-column format; straight news in the front, editorials in the middle and sports in back; the usual capitalization in headlines; eight-point body type in the stories for you to squint at; and (sigh) often badly written and edited news stories.

But this last week of the semester has brought the 218-member staff something new for goals. Urged to try innovative display, unusual writing styles and creative photography, the student staffers have done their best.

Here is what they have been working towards:

Thursday, Dec. 6 — Classified news, as in the newsmagazines. The news appeared under such titles as Energy Crisis, Media, The Arts and Politics. The Editorial Page that day ran "sideways", which gave it an eight-column size.

Friday, Dec. 7 — Innovations in typography, headlining and general display techniques.

Monday, Dec. 10 — Sports up front, Pages 1-3, and the more familiar Collegian Page 1 on the back. This simply reversed the order the news came to you.

Tuesday, Dec 11 — Many more innovations in typography, themed graphics, large photos and the semester in review.

Wednesday, Dec. 12 — A standard size newspaper, eight columns wide and 21 inches deep, with huge photos and advertising loaded with pictures.

Why is the Collegian looking so different? Lots of reasons. One is very basic. The staff members are students most of them carrying full academic loads. They are tired after a three-month semester. They wanted a change of pace. Experiment Week has provided that.

Another is as basic. The staff members, for the most part, have been working at developing journalistic skills. As rookies, they have been basically conservative. Now that they have acquired some skill and confidence, they want to try their hands with a flair.

Morale is a reason some of us consider important. Putting out a morning newspaper with 18,000 circulation day after day, while also working parttime and going to class, makes for a grim existence. "Y'all need some fun," their adviser exhorted the student staffers. For the dedicated journalists, this Experiment Week has been fun — anything from trying to sell an eight-column advertisement to attempting to create a piece of journalistic writing a of couple notches above the ordinary Collegian level.

There has been another reason: trying to lure other students to participate. Perhaps, the staff reasoned, some of the undergraduates who have stayed away this fall will dare to volunteer next semster.

If some of the "experiments" have failed, they have been successful nevertheless because they have offered the students the opportunity for educational exploration.

The Collegian tries hard to meet its service obligations as a newspaper. It is also a laboratory for those interested in laying out ads, making photos, laying out pages and trying their hands at all the other chores necessary for publishing a daily newspaper.

It is worth knowing that this laboratory is checked out by more than 25,000 readers every day. That's a lot of monitors for any student. It may be one reason also that some of use think this "lab" is one of the best on campus for education.

Top dog is a dog

By BRIAN COOK

Spice is nice, but who ever heard of a four-legged travel agent? The merchants and other fine citizens of Andover, Massachusetts have, that's who.

This rare breed has a nose for travel. Propped up on his forepaws behind his private desk strewn with the tools of his trade, this stately golden retriever is a traveler's best friend. Travel Anywhere was graced with this new addition to its employee staff when Spice unexpectedly walked into the office one day and started barking orders. The initial adjustment to his presence by fellow workers was somewhat harrowing, but seniority gave way to minority and Spice is now top dog in the business.

Many fellow canines in the town have not taken the situation so lightly however. In fact, certain distinguished breeds have raised quite a stink about Spice's new found race superiority. Piles of shit in front of the agency's door are discouraging business, and last bark has it that Spice will take drastic steps to eliminate the mess he's confronted with.

As of January 1, 1974, our canine prodigy plans to institute 1st class travel accomodations for all canine cruisers. That's right folks, now you buy any of those unwanted mongrels you might own, a one-way ticket to the land of curs or, send it to France for a poodle-cut and a little sophistication.

John Mitchell tried to book Martha on the special training school voyage, but Spice refused to accomodate her on the grounds that you can't teach an old dog new tricks.

Our very own Central Travel Bureau to be opened soon in the Campus Center has no plans for a similar service yet, but it is expected that the dog eat dog competition so common to American society will soon pick up on the novelty started in Andover. The local affiliated union of boxer hounds has plans to confront that sly dog catcher recently spotted in the Student Union and present him with an ultimatum: he'll go to the dogs if he does not leave campus.

IT'S A DOG'S LIFE!

Semester in review

The atmosphere

By B. J. ROCHE

Expressing one's impressions of the semester is a difficult assignment to undertake in that it is hard to distinguish between personal interpretation and actual happenings.

One thing is for certain, though. This semester was a definite heavy. On a world level we saw one war end and another begin. On a national level, we had our youthful suspicions fulfilled as to the nature of the men in power, and then...-suddenly we face the prospect of living a completely different life style as the result of an "energy shortage".

But on a campus level, the catalysts for craziness were not so easily attributable. There were two deaths, many assaults, as well as rip-offs. There was a discernable cutback in hard drugs and also a discernable increase in alcohol consumption. Alcoholism became a problem with many students.

There was also that strange parental pressure, which was sometimes abstract, but became real in the form of a visit or occasional phone call. We went home to places that weren't really our homes, and half jokingly, half seriously, hoped our rooms hadn't been rented out yet.

To resolve these feelings, people turned to different things. Stereos were the most reliable. We reached for record albums for memories of good times: assurances that things would get better. But the incomparable feeling of the Beatles has been half-replaced by the likes of Alice Cooper and David Bowie. Many had problems adjusting.

Some turned to Jesus, the Guru, Josh, whoever, and suddenly found themselves content with the new strength they had found. But for others, it was not so easy, and the consensus was "Let's get high". In the search for the constant high, we lost a sense of self, resulting in a generally messed-up scene.

Will things always be this way? I sincerely doubt it for two reasons. First, we cannot continue at this rate for long. In the words of some far-away song, somethin's gotta give....And second, I am a naive optimist, and believe that things will work out. So if you have not been so bummed out that you have read this far, congratulations. Look, there is this comet coming later on in the month, and with a little bit of luck...

The bullfight in Bartlett

By BONNIE ASSELIN

It's early morning and once again we all meet here because of some common interest in the modern novel.

"Ecclesiastes was a philosopher, yah, he wrote, 'One generation passeth away, and another generation cometh; but the earth abideth forever'...-sometimes old generation says young generation is apathetic," begins the professor.

He leans forward, his eyes demanding attention, his eyebrows knit, and I demand that I grasp his meaning. As he carefully puffs a cigarette, he walks among the desks, surveying our faces. Alert minds, camouflaged by sleepy expressions, are soon to be prodded into exposure.

Yes, he's so much more alive, so full of ideas and energy. I wonder in what reservoir he found his strength during such an energy crisis.

The class is still. No one comments. There are a few smiles and a few puzzled faces. Others may yet be too proud to allow expression, insisting on passivity. I fear we intend on defying his plea for answers. We are possessive, keeping hold of that much-loved treasure, our precious ideas. Content with being selfish, we sit back and absorb his ideas.

"Hemingway was awarded, what?...the Nobel Peace Prize...Do you know how much?...You are not interested in money...yah...that's a good sign."

He seems to be falling into a reverie, perhaps pondering something from his past. His glasses slip to the end of his nose as he stares downward into his reflections. Ashes are not to be scattered, carefully flicking them into the basket. He walks back and forth. Movement will exorcise the thought from the depths of his memory.

"His style is simple, but very deep."

We were simply placed together in this room by a UMass computer. From something so mechanical, genuine feeling and spirit arose.

"What does the bullfight symbolize?"

Someone answers that it is the conflict among the characters. Another attributes it to the destructive forces of man.

"Now, you are speaking up, you were afraid of me, and I was afraid of you. We need a second term, more time."

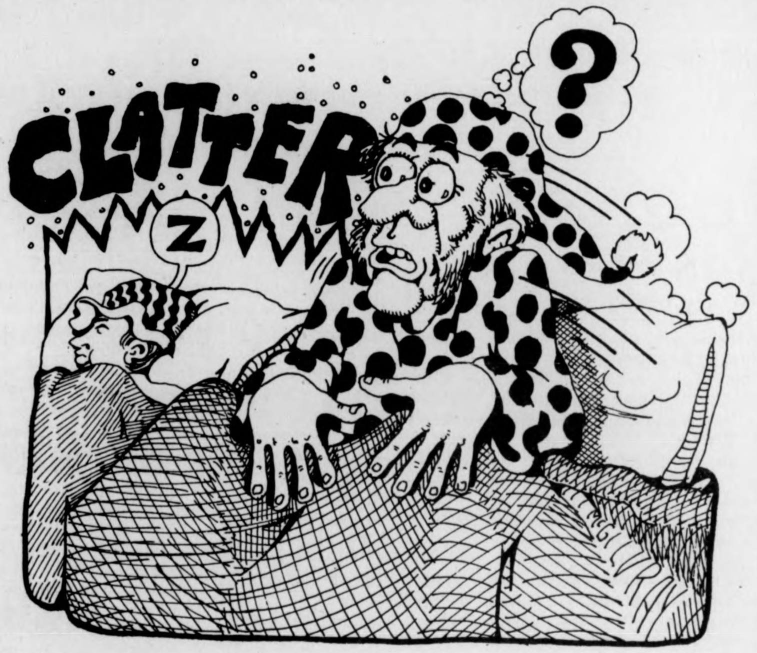
He narrates a personal experience. The more we react, the more he tells us his secrets.

In Myorka, he saw a bullfight.

"The whole arena was electrified. Like a medieval knight, Don Quixote, the matador started to tease the bull." Almost acting out the ritual, he takes the matador's stance.

"It's playing around with death...People are electrified, like Old Rome...The bull, finally, is on its knees and with one stroke-dead-the strangest experience I've ever had..."

And so, during that hour, a professor touches his students with his tales, his unique spirit, his sense of humor, and his wisdom. His understanding of the human condition brings them a sense of peace for a time. "Never give up, you are a good sputnik," he jokingly commended the class while tapping his own head.



When out on the lawn there arose such a clatter,
I sprang from my bed
to see what was the matter.
Away to the window I flew like a flash,
Tore open the shutters and threw up the sash.

Obnoxious 9 o'clock

By TONY GRANITE

There oughta be a law about nine o'clock classes.

Only "A" students and insomniac professors should be allowed.

Everyone who signs up for one should be required to demonstrate the honor of his intentions.

And there should be energy depletion credits allowed by the Administration.

– – – – –

Nine o'clocks probably originated at Aggie Colleges, when both students and faculty had to be up anyway to check the stock. There was only one feeding time in the dining halls, and for post-prandial exercise, the Chief Cowherd probably decided everyone should go to class.

But with the advent of Daylight Saving Time, in recent years, the eight o'clock has become the nine o'clock. And now that every holiday worth celebrating falls on a Monday the next schedule modification may be that the nine o'clock by law, will become a ten o'clock.

Before that happens, this being a nation of law and order, it would seem that not just anybody should be allowed in on a good thing like a nine o'clock class. It's like where the action really is on campus.

At that hour, the traffic is so light there's always a comfortable seat to be found in airy classrooms that have yet to be polluted with the fresh fumes of the new day.

Students are polite to each other, at that hour, because the hassles of the day haven't got to them, yet.

The coeds will never look better, either, than when they're only partially dressed.

And the studs are rested and ready for anything.

As for the prof...he'll never be brighter or more lucid. He'll wear down, as the day wears on. But at nine o'clock he's at the peak of his powers. For he hasn't yet read his campus mail. No administrator worth his salt has been up long enough to growl at him. Few of his colleagues are roaming the corridors to ruin his day with tales of the terrors of teaching.

And the campus newpaper hasn't been delivered, yet.

Nine o'clock classes aren't just for any ole body.

It takes an "A" mentality to cope. "A" is the first letter of the alphabet. An "a" not only starts off many sentences, it punctuates them, too. And a nine o'clock is the first of most classes of the day.

Ergo, the "A" student.

But not everyone agrees.

A chance perusal of the Spring course listings substantiates that early classes aren't all that popular. The Accounting people, for example, express their opinion of the dying practice by scheduling only two groovey courses at eight o'clock: Acctg 120, "introduction to Financial Accounting" and Acctg 371, "Advance Federal Tax Procedures." Why spoil an otherwise pleasant day, they say.

The Afro Ams believe that 9:05 a.m. is early enough for anyone to be forced to meet a new day. So they don't list any courses before the.

And Air Science has given up on Reveille as an old Army Air Corps harrassment that's for the roosters. One of the two 9:05 courses they list is ground school for cadets in the Flight Instruction Program. The other is for future generals who need a head start to make the grade: "United States Military Forces."

But the gluttons for early morning academics must surely be the Art people on campus. They list 13 eight o'clock classes for Spring term. The reason isn't hard to figure. Surely conception at dawn must be sweetest.

And the sluggards of the campus are the English majors. There's no such thing as an eight o'clock for them. 'Smatterafact, most of their best work is done after the nooning. Mother Nature might have a word for them, too.

– – – – –

It'll take another revolution in education to get up a law on early morning classes. And when it happens, it'll probably give credit for sleeping through them. Another requirement may be a term paper on what happened in bed, to the instructor.

That'll restrict the nine o'clocks to "A" students and sleepless instructors, for sure.

With a little old driver so lively and quick
I knew in a moment it must be St. Nick.
More rapid than eagles his courses they came.
And he whistled, and shouted, and called them by name:

Won't someone be my idol?

By SHERM BOYSON

When I was in the third grade, I got to be on the Bozo the Clown show. I was really excited about it. Bozo was big stuff when I was seven. He was my idol. I had his bright red hair, super big feet, and rubber ball nose on a pedestal twenty feet high. During one of the commercials he sat right down on the seat in front of me. I couldn't resist the opportunity to reach out and touch my hero. My eager hands stretched out and felt the bright red hair that stood straight out from his head. As soon as I made contact my heart fell. Bozo the Clown's hair was fake. It was nothing but red wire. In one small touch of my hand Bozo fell right off the pedestal onto his round nose, which was probably fake too.

I survived the experience of finding that my idol was not real, but just a lot of makeup and coloring. That experience made me strong. Strong enough to survive all the shocks that I have gotten this semester while working for the Collegian.

In the beginning everyone who was connected with the Collegian was so important sounding to me. They had their names on the mastheads. They had their pictures over the columns they wrote. They were editors and persons of importance. They were as far above me as the stars in the sky.

Bill Ballou, for example. I was just a dumb little freshman who was awed at the thought of someone just a few years older then me writing his own column for a daily newspaper. Okay, he was dumb enough to think that Bobby Riggs could ever beat Billie Jean King, but he was a great writer. I always looked for his columns.

Then I was in the office one day waiting to see my editor. This funny looking kid with glasses and big sideburns was running around with just one shoe on. He was complaining about how the student senate plays dirty football games. Suddenly someone called out "telephone for Ballou" and he went to answer it. That kid was Bill Ballou. I was standing in the same room with him. He was real, he was human, and he was walking around with just one shoe on. One pedestal down, four to go.

Stephen G. Tripoli. The name sounded so impressive. I always pictured him as a six foot four, tall, Clark Kent type. He would be a crusading editor, always spurting out triumphant words of wisdom that would inspire everyone in the office into winning Pulitzer Prizes.

Joan Fassnacht, my editor, pointed him out to me one day. I was never so shocked in my life. The figure she pointed to couldn't possibly be the editor-in-chief. Why I had seen that kid around the office lots of times. I always figured he was just a sports editor or something. Two down, three to go.

Jerry Lazar. I used to see him in his glass paneled office. He would always be on the phone with his feet up on the desk. I figured he would be talking to presidents, senators, and foreign advisors on different facets of editorial opinion. After all, this guy was in charge of all those people who got to have weekly columns.

So when I was introduced to him one day he said "Oh, so this is the notorious Sherm Boyson". He knew my name. He remembered my stories. It was really nice having him recognize my name, but it wasn't up to the image I had of an executive editor. I expected a response like "So what, who the fuck are you?". He wasn't supposed to remember me.

The biggest shock came just one week ago. I have been reading Barbara Voorhees all year in Poor Richard's. She has been my inspiration. She replaced Bozo the Clown as my idol. Her writing was so powerful and so good. If only I could write like that. I had never met her, but that didn't matter. I knew just what she would look like. She would be five-nine, have long red hair, and be a dynamic person whose presence would fill an entire room.

So you can imagine the double take I did when she was introduced at the last Collegian meeting. I didn't hear another word that was spoken at the meeting. I just stared at that angelic little face and tried to figure out how she could be the same Barbara Voorhees that writes all those stories. How could those frail little hands write such great stories? How could that sweet little voice say such powerful words? She looked like someone who would be the poster girl for the National Catholic Crusade for Virginity, not a reporter. I couldn't believe it.

The last pedestal was under the Managing Editor, Robert Scheier. His job was real important. And when he had to leave his post he had a whole column written about him.

Well, fate and circumstances once had him and I working on the same story. I even got to call him Bob. Wow, me calling the former managing editor Bob. But he was still big stuff to me. He was still one of the elite of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian. That is, until he blew it.

I was sitting in the MDC office typing over a story. Bob came into the room, probably to talk to an editor or someone important. I kept my place and continued typing. And then he did it. He came over and said "How's it going, Sherm?". Big people aren't supposed to talk to small stuff. He could have been my new idol — but he blew it.

I just guess I'll have to be satisfied with someone whose image will never falter. He'll always be just like everyone tells me he is. I can't ever imagine Marty Kelly being human.

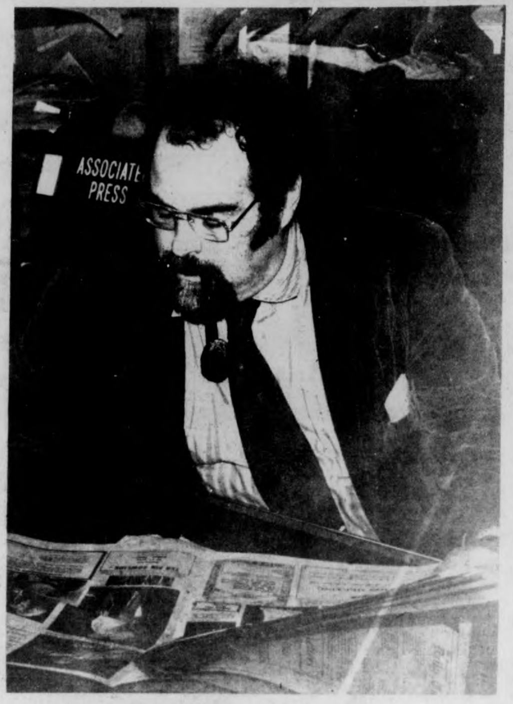
Here come de Ziff, here come de Ziff...

By STEVE TRIPOLI



Howard Ziff

He walked into that first class last September smoking a long cigar, which people who knew him thought to be a bit strange (he favors a pipe). To make it even stranger, this cigar was even longer than the ones he occasionally fancies. "Does anyone have an ashtray in his pocket?", came the query. Everyone perked up. Those who didn't know him somehow sensed that this might be a different type of class. No answer came to the ashtray question.

"Well does anyone have a gin and tonic in his pocket then?" Howard Ziff had arrived.

To anyone who's had any dealings with the Journalism program at UMass the name of Howard Ziff is probably not new to you. If you haven't met him that's your loss. He was born in Holyoke some forty-three years ago, but his road to the head of the Journalism Studies program here at UMass is a lot longer than the trek down 116.

After graduating Amherst college, which he attended on a football scholarship, Howard plunged into the field of Journalism, rising to a Night Editor and Night City Editor's post at the Chicago Daily News. While at the News he also worked Editorial and reporting (being part of two Pulitzer prizewinning teams), and coordinated the News' 1968 Democratic Convention coverage, which won award from both the Associated Press and United Press International No mean feat that, especially considering the historical events both in and out of the convention hall that year.

"When I was in Korea in the Army I worked for Stars 'n Stripes (The Army Newspaper)." Howard had just interrupted himself at a seminar last Spring. "The people in the composing room there were mostly Italians, and we'd send copy to them down a chute. Well they were all nervous one night because Marciano was fighting for the championship. When I got the news he'd won, I sent the story down the chute with the headline 'Marciano wins — White Hope still sought.' They were so pissed they practically came straight up the chute to get me."

Later in '68 Ziff left the "real" world of journalism for a teaching post at the University of Illinois at Urbana. From there, he heard of the changes in Journalism at UMass, and at the urging of a friend applied for the top job in the program here.

Most of the journalism majors at UMass (many of whom reside at this newspaper) have found Ziff an extremely personable man to deal with, and they hold him in great respect for his knowledge of the field. This knowledge includes everything from the ability to teach a basic newswriting course to his great knowledge of the outside field and where to go once you get there.

His lectures are not always gems of stimulation, but they're usually informative and often funny. For instance (while talking about the necessities of life):

"Here's two necessities, bowel movement and sex. Now some people think that only one of those is necessary, but frankly I think it's rediculous not to move your bowels."

He holds forth from a large, cluttered office on the bottom level of Machmer Hall, and anyone who's tried to get an audience with him knows that it's usually a long wait. Once you get inside you'll meet a man who dispenses information with ease, accuracy, but at times a hell of a lot of confusion, too. It's not easy to talk, smoke a pipe incessantly at breakneck speed, and run an entire academic program almost single handedly, but Ziff does. And the end result of everything, including the confusion, is a surprisingly good product which is getting better.

Things are shaping up in the Journalism Department, and since Ziff's arrival the program has been reinforced by the arrival of two new professors, Larry Pinkham and Ralph Whitehead, both of them very good in their own right. Howard's efforts are what brought them here, Pinkham from the prestigious Columbia School of Journalism and Whitehead from a possible career as a freelancer in the old Ziff stomping ground of Chicago.

What it comes down to is that in the often disgustingly sterile world of UMass academics a refreshing exception deserves a little notice. Howard Ziff fills that bill, and then some.

Food services: part nine

ANALYSIS

This is the last of a 9-part series investigating the Dining Commons. Assigned to the series were Cindy Gonet, Mark Citron, Scott Bacherman, Jerry Lazar and Mike Kneeland.

It wasn't very long ago when UMies were listening to Big Brother Bob sing "the grass is always greener in the other fellow's yard." Eating in the Dining Commons, most students are still singing the same song.

"I've worked at Hampshire College and I've eaten at Amherst College," one student recently told Collegian investigating reporters, "and I tell ya, for what we're paying here (at UMass) we're getting ripped off."

Interviewing students at both Amherst and Hampshire College, Collegian reporters did not find the Pier 4 some UMass students described.

"The general concensus here," said Hampshire College freshman Kathy Kartiganer, "is that the food is fairly bad but that it's edible."

"The food is pretty good here (Hampshire College) for institutionalized food," he said.

Other Hampshire College students find the food service at Smith and Mt. Holyoke College nearly ideal.

"Eating at those colleges is like eating at home," one girl told the Collegian. "They have china, not trays and nicely prepared food ... the food is really cared about there."

IS THE PRICE RIGHT?

Most students indicated they would be willing to pay more money for better food.

Jim Murphy, Food Services Director at Hampshire College, wholeheartedly agreed. Murphy is actually employed by SAGA, a national catering firm.

SAGA's contract is renewed on a yearly basis. If the students and Administration are not pleased with SAGA, their contract is not renewed.

SAGA submits its operating budget to Hampshire College. This year students are paying

Caterer surveys D.C.s

$250 for a 15-meal plan compared to $314.75 UMies pay.

These figures are, however, slightly deceiving. Hampshire College itself pays additional money to the catering firm. Murphy declined to release the amount.

"SAGA has nearly 500 accounts so we can draw on each other's knowledge," he said. "We can buy food cheaper than non-profit making schools because of our buying power.

Murphy thinks UMass would do well if it likewise hired an independent catering firm, presemably SAGA.

Amherst College, like UMass, has refused to hire such a service.

William Golding Sr., Director of the Amerst Dining Halls, said students do not pay a dining commons fee per se. Rather, the price of their food is included in their tuition.

Golding sympathizes with former UMass Director of Food Services Joel Stoneham. With the rising cost of food, the various meal plans offered to UMies and the sheer number of students themselves, Golding is not surprised that UMass Food Services is having some problems.

ARA STUDYING PROBLEMS

With such conflicting opinions from "knowledgeable" executives, it is no wonder that UMass has called in an independent catering firm, American Restaurant Association, to study the situation.

As the food service operation withers in the cold winter months ahead with its "non-nutritional" good, an inactive director, an acting director, and employees' contracts in the midst of negotiations, ARA will appraise the efficiency of the entire operation.

This independent catering firm would not, presumably, put the time and money into studying UMass food services, giving away its secrets, unless it had a strong bid in taking over the operation.

Buttressing this possibility are the contract negotiations of the University employees. By contract, state employees may not work for an independent company such as ARA.

It thus appears that the future of those ladies in blue and green is yet to be decided.

Collegian invesitgators have concluded this "loss" is not really a loss or miscalculation.

The following financial problems developed in 1971-2. Food Services has little or no control over these circumstances:

--A retroactive payraise of $189,000 that food services was told not to budget.

--Non payment of a $98,000 Dining Commons bill.

--A $441,540 sales decrease when 21-year olds and seniors in Southwest were made exempt from buying meal tickets.

University Food Services therefore borrowed $554,000 to cover this year's liabilities.

Collegian investigators have concluded that Joel Stoneham, in this regard, was a victim of circumstances.

The deficits were not his wrong doing, but probably someone in Whitmore during 1969 and 1970.

So Stoneham has lost his job, and the Administration is singing "the grass looks greener on the other side."

Suicide

Sporting a feeling of madness, images trickle through my mind. To be the master of life and yet subdued — such irony can only increase my desire.

Obligation and kinship — such oppressing, limiting forces. One seeks to escape them, to break from weary bonds.

A stage perhaps — and it will pass.

Direction still wanting — but it will come. Some lifestyle awaits you to settle your soul, be patient and humble is all you are told.

The conflict grows greater, years pass you by. Vague notions invade your solitude — and slowly you discern solution.

Courage builds, is near its peak.

Distances collapsing — the tide rushing in. Ready to be taken, complete surrender has swept you out.

Approaching a new dawn ....

Nixon turns over more tapes

By Donald M. Rothberg
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)- President Nixon's Operation Candor continued Monday with the disclosure that "a significant number" of White House tapes were turned over to special Watergate prosecutor Leon Jaworski during the weekend.

In addition, the special prosecutor received on Monday tapes of two subpoenaed Watergate conversations from U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica.

The two deliveries marked the first time presidential tapes have been turned over to the prosecutor's office.

The White House delivered the tapes the same weekend it released a mass of documentation relating to President Nixon's personal finances.

Neither Jaworski nor the White House would say which tapes were delivered on Saturday.

"We have asked for these and we have insisted they be delivered to us and they were delivered," Jaworski said. He added that there were "still some outstanding requests for tapes from the White House."

Deputy White House Press Secretary Gerald L. Warren said he would "prefer to maintain the confidentiality" of dealings with the prosecutor.

Jaworski's office said the tapes received from the White House "will be carefully analyzed. Such of these as contain information material to the special prosecutor's investigations will be presented to the grand jury without delay."

Sarge vetoes death penalty

BOSTON (AP)-Gov. Francis W. Sargent rejected a bill restoring the death penalty in Massachusetts Monday but announced that he would sign one-if approved by the legislature-confining the punishment to those who kill law enforcement officers.

The bill that was pocket vetoed by Sargent Monday would have restored the death penalty for nine specific categories of murder.

Israel wants POW list before talks start

By
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Israeli Defense Minister Moshe Dayan announced Monday that Israel will not talk peace with Syria until Damascus turns over a list of Israeli war prisoners held in Syria.

Dayan told the Israeli parliament that the refusal to deal with Syria at the Dec. 18 Geneva peace negotiations was a government decision.

The Geneva conference aims to bring together Israel, Egypt, Syria and Jordan under American, Soviet and United Nations auspices in a search for a long-term Middle East settlement.

Israeli refusal to negotiate with Syria would be a serious blow to chances for its success. The Syrians and the Egyptians were the major Arab combatants in the October Middle East war.

Sources in Amman said King Hussein has withdrawn his conditions for Jordan's participation in the Geneva conference. The king had demanded that only Jordan represent Palestinians in the Israeli-occupied west bank of the Jordan River.

The sources said Hussein has now agreed to attend even if the Palestine Liberation Organization is there claiming to speak for the west bank Palestinians.

Israel says Syria has refused to hand over names of the 102 Israeli POWs believed held in Syria and the International Red Cross has confirmed the claim. Dayan charged in addition that Syrians have killed "42 or more" Israeli POWs and that Egyptians killed at least 28.

Prices put squeeze on Santa

By LOUISE COOK

Santa Claus is feeling the food price pinch this year.

Charitable agencies that distribute food baskets and serve holiday dinners to the needy say their costs are up. Some say they'll find budget-priced substitutes for more expensive items normally included in yuletide gifts.

"It's impossible," said a spokeswoman for the United Fund in Philadelphia. "No one is donating food. We used to get loads of turkey. Now only a few people have come forth. People are going to have to settle for canned goods or bread or something."

Brigadier Earl Stubbs of the Salvation Army in Wisconsin said the cost of providing charitable baskets has risen 30 per cent from last year and said the tab this year will be about $130,000 to provide food baskets to 2,600 families and toys to 8,000 children.

Mrs. Lilo Salmon, assistant director of the Little Brothers of the Poor of Chicago said the group will distribute 5,000 Christmas packages, mostly to the elderly, this year.

Auto price controls lifted

By N.R. GREGORY NOKES
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Cost of Living Council lifted wage and price controls on Monday from most of the auto industry, but extracted a commitment from most auto makers to limit price increases on 1974 models.

The auto industry is the largest industry from which the government's wage and price controls have been lifted.

But the Cost of Living Council said it extracted a commitment from Ford Motor Co. and General Motors Corp. to limit price increases for the remainder of the 1974 model year to an average of no more than $150 per vehicle, and a commitment from American Motors for an average increase of no more than $100.

It also said Ford, General Motors and American Motors have agreed not to increase the retail price of any small cars by more than $150.

Chrysler Corp., the council said, declined to make similar commitments, but the council decided to exempt it from controls.

Council Director John T. Dunlop told newsmen that although Chrysler would not make the same commitments, he did not think it "appropriate to single them out" by keeping them under controls.

By removign wage controls from the industry the council approved contracts negotiated between Ford, General Motors and Chrysler with the United Auto Workers Union, even though Dunlop said the contracts provided for increases that exceeded the government's wage guidelines.

Saxbe Sent To Senate

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon formally submitted to the Senate Monday the nomination of Sen. William E. Saxbe to be attorney general. Nixon acted after signing legislation reducing the salary for the post.

Nixon picked Saxbe, an Ohio Republican, to be attorney general more than a month ago, but he had been unable to make the nomination because the attorney general's salary was raised to $60,000 a year from $35,000 while Saxbe was serving in the Senate.

A touch of class, a touch of blues

By MIKE KOSTEK
and JOHN CARR

Occasionally this campus is graced with a bit of class, a bit of greatness that is unmistakeable. Last night the Student Union Ballroom was home for a precious night of Chicago Blues as Muddy Waters and his band played a fine set that pleased 600.

Muddy Waters

His real name is McKinley Morganifield, and as Muddy Waters he has paced contemporary blues for the past twenty years, writing such classics as "Got My Mojo Working", "Long Distance Call", "Baby, Please Don't Go", and "I'm Your Hoochie Koochie Man".

Behind Muddy was an excellent (What else?) band that deserves mention: California Fat, guitar; Bob Margolin, guitar; Fuzzy Jones, bass; Willie Smith, drums; Mojo Buford, harmonica; Pinetar Perkins, piano, playing beautiful blues, both slow and fast, about as well as they can be played--"Won't Have To Worry No More", "Baby, Please Don't Go", "Can't Get No Grinding" and two classics--"Long Distance Call" and "Got My Mojo Working". "Long Distance Call" was the highlight of the night, and was a pure joy to watch. Up until the day they tear down the Ballroom, Muddy Waters will always be heard in there singing "There's another mu-ool; there's another mu-ool..."

Muddy's voice is pure and direct. All these years have taken nothing away from it. His ending version of "Mojo" was another superb moment to partake in. 'Living Legends' are almost always disappointing, as they don't always deserve that foolish title. However, when you do run into one, nothing's quite the same afterwards.

The Babe Pino Band opened last night's festivities with a competent rendition of the blues. Playing in the intimate atmosphere of the Ballroom to a small audience of blues afficionados, the band early on achieved that rapport with their listeners which is essential for a good concert.

Babe himself, resplendant in an appropriately all-white outfit, played a searing harp and impressed all with his soulful vocals. Wolf Ginandes put down consistently melodious and inventive bass lines which perfectly complemented Ken Pino's lead. David Agerholm presented a rhythmic, if uninspired, percussion, and the keyboard player got off some celestial chords on his electric piano.

Retailers want gas price controls lifted

By GEORGE MEYER
Associated Press Writer

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP)-Gasoline retailers, feeling the pinch of the energy crisis, said Monday they want Phase 4 price controls lifted so they can hike prices by at least one to three cents a gallon.

"We are fighting for our survival," said President Charles Binsted of the National Congress of Petroleum Retailers during a convention here. He made his comment at the same time an industry publication told of rising gasoline prices.

The Oil Daily reported in Houston Monday that last week's average retail price of regular brand gasoline, exclusive of taxes, was 29.23 cents a gallon, compared with 28.96 a week earlier and 24.45 in 1972.

The average dealer tank-wagon, or wholesale, price was 22.24 cents, compared with 22.02 a week earlier and 17.75 cents a year earlier, a survey by the publication of 100 cities showed.

Federal and state taxes boost retail gasoline prices by 9 to 12 1-2 cents per gallon.

"Our pricing is based on volume sales," said Binsted, of Washington, D.C., "and if the volume of what we sell drops, then our profit drops."

Jerry Lazar has no class

When I first met Jerry Lazar I only had one thought. I wished that I would wake up and find it all to be nightmare. But no such luck. I was stuck with the Wrongway Horrigan of journalism as my workmate for two months. After he is gone I hope the only trace of him left is an occasional "Curb Your Lazar" sign on city streets.

Jerry Lazar is a great proponent of the classless society; not because he is altruistic, but simply because he has no class at all. If Tuborg beer has class, then Jerry Lazar is bilge water.

All natural disasters begin with a small thing. The Chicago fire was only a kicked-over lantern at its beginning. Before long it was a very big mess. Lazar's life follows a similar pattern.

Although he won't admit it there is strong reason to believe that he was dropped on his head as a child. Several factors attest to this. The most evident is Lazar's ability to be sitting in the middle of two people, one to his left and one to his right, and look at both of them at the same time. The only other mammal capable of this is the whale.

Jerry has other problems with his eyes. As a child he was beaten up so much by his neighborhood "pals" that he exhausted his tear ducts by age five. Modern surgery saved him though. A Philadelphia surgeon connected Lazar's salivary glands to his tear ducts. The operation was a success except for one small side affect. Everytime Lazar gets near food his salivary glands begin their normal function which in his case is crying. I made the mistake of eating pizza in front of Jerry once. After the Amherst fire department came to pump out the water in our office and revived Lazar (he almost drowned) we returned to work. Working with Lazar is like digging the Grand Canyon with chopsticks.

Another characteristic of Lazar is his dedication to sartorial suicide. I knew him for six months before he wore socks. I later found out that his one pair of hose was being rented by a New Hampshire dog track for greyhound pacing. The track owner told me that they would put the socks behind the hounds and let them run away. Several records were broken that summer including a ninety six percent drop in attendance.

Jerry and I went shopping for clothes one Saturday morning. I brought my checkbook and credit cards. Jerry brought a large shopping bag. He drove us to a shopping center that had a food store, a record store, a stationer, a pizza joint and some theatres. I asked him where he planned to get clothes at this location.

He pointed to a large red box with "Goodwill Industries" painted on its side and quick as a cockroach he jumped from the car and dove into the box. I waited for a half hour before he came back.

Finally he emerged wearing a straw hat with a pin that said "I am an alcoholic, in case of an emergency get me a beer." Class, real class. All the class of a mashed potato sandwich.

Yes, working with Jerry has been rare. I would like all of the University community to meet him. The next time you see a five foot two kid wandering around with a herd of flies in tow, dressed in bright green pants and a lavender shirt stained with a year's drippings from Big Macs, hold your breath, squint your eyes, and approach him. Underneath all the crud, you will eventually discover Jerry Lazar, the man who has done for class what Charles Manson did for communes.

----Dean Tucker is assistant executive editor of the Collegian, and has had the unfortunate experience of sharing an office with the classless Jerry Lazar this semester.

Beauty is only skin deep (but ugly is to the bone)

The man is called Joe College. He is ugly. Ugly beyond belief. He is a legend in his own Greenough House and undoubtedly the entire University. For every house has their own Joe College, just as assuredly as they have their own Suzy Coed. But this is about Joe C. This is a particular Joe College though there may be others of his gender (neuter) roaming about. (God what a ghastly premonition).

College is Ugly. Roget's calls him mis-shapen, mis-proportioned, monstrous, gaunt, dumpy, ill-made, crooked, ill-looking, inelegant, ungainly, uncouth, stiff, gross, rude, rickety, gawky, lumbering, hulky, unwieldy, squalid, haggard, grim, grisly, ghastly, dealth-like, cadaverous, gruesome, frightful, hideous, odious, forbidding, repelling, repulsive, horrid, shocking, foul, dingy and painful. On a scale of zero to one of UG's, ugliness units, Joe College is the standard and has been assigned one. Everyone else has some proportion of UG's. Frank Rizzo has 93/94 ths. Bebe Rebozo 102/103 rds. Marty Kelly 403/404 ths. This humble reporter posesses 1x10-4 UG's, on a par with Robert Redford. Be that as it may, one of the main tenents of J.C.'s philosophy is pride in his deformity. For if one is not proud of his/her disfigurement in this world, one has no identity, no soul. UGLINESS IS BEAUTIFUL and BEAUTY IS UGLY are the hallmarks of College's faith. And so, College's tremendous grossness and his pride in the fact is no less than the greatest liberation on this campus. And anyone can join this liberation. All they have to do is say the magic words "I AM UGLY" and recognize Joe College as the leader, the prophet and the perfect master, yes, even Guru College Ji. For a token fee, College can illuminate the path to true ugliness and bliss for you.

Although according to his roommate, the Greek, that "College is a legend in his own times," there is not doubt in anyone's mind that the world would be a better place were it rid of this pestilent enigma. So ominous is his presence that mankind can never again be devoid of his bubonic contagion. The English offered their Blood, Sweat and Tears; the French had their Liberty, Fraternity, Equality, and College has his Rape, Molest and Pillage. It is no quirk of fate that he was advised "never to come back home!" For who wants him, and who can afford to?

I had the misfortune to talk to College the other day while he was chewing on a dead Yak bone.

Z.N. "How do you feel being so ugly?"

J.C. "It's a challenge. I work at it continously. Ugliness is next to Godliness."

Z.N. "How did you get to be so ugly?"

J.C. "I sprang forth fully grown from my own forehead this way. It was a cerebral orgasm. It's an ongoing nuclear process."

Z.N. "What is the future for ugly people in the world?"

J.C. "Ugly people will mold the future of mankind. I feel that the Human race is evolving toward a true state of ugliness!!! Yes!!! Yes!!! (he leaped up screaming in an epileptic fit.) Someday everyone will have at least .9 UG's."

Z.N. "How many kids are in your family?"

J.C. "42---They were all born dead. You see spores have a way of regenerating themselves unbeknownst to mankind."

Z.N. "That doesn't make sense Joe."

J.C. "Thank You!"

Z.N. "What?"

J.C. "You're welcome!"

Z.N. "What is your advice to your following?"

J.C. "Always strive to maintain complete hideousness in the face of beauty. No matter what anybody tells you, you know you're ugly! You always were, you are, and you will always remain---grotesque! In your heart you know that this is ture. While you yourself can only achive at present geometrical ugliness progression, one day you'll reach my standard of exponential ugliness growth."

Z.N. "Any final comments?"

J.C. "Make no mistake about it. Yes! You too can have lepratic sores on your face."

Phys ed skiing: Berkshire East is better than Mt. Tom

By HARRY CHARYCH

For the last ten years, the UMass phys ed skiing program has been going to Mt. Tom. The cost of the program to the students has been $40.00 for six 1 1/2 hour lessons. No one at the Phys Ed Department or in Whitmore had deemed it necessary to question wheather the price was reasonable or if the amount of contact time (actual time on the slopes) was consistant with the contact time for other phys ed courses. No other alternatives were explored.

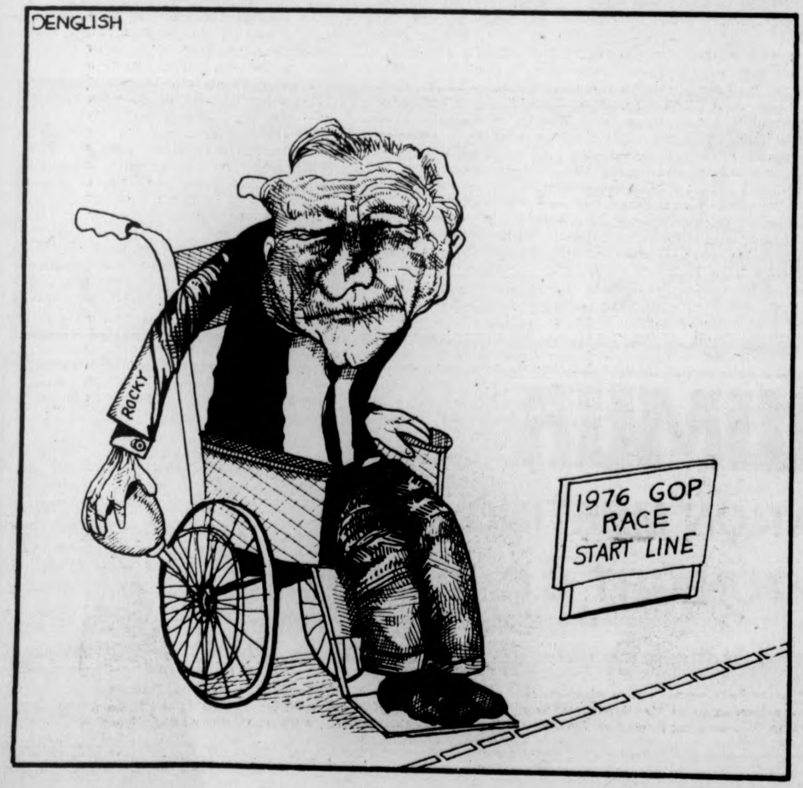
This year Berkshire East Ski Area in Charlemont, Massachusetts proposed a ski lesson program which featured eight 1 1/2 hour lessons at a cost of $32.00. This gave the student two additional lessons at a savings of $8.00. In addition, Berkshire East offered courses in cross-country skiing, a free NASTAR race, and a one credit Ski Instructors Course.

The General Physical Education Program Committee voted unanimously to accept the Berkshire East proposal on November 2, 1973. A letter of agreement was signed by Mrs. Purnell, Director of the General Phys Ed Program, and the course schedules carried Berkshire East as the place for the skiing program. I really feel that the Phys Ed Committee made its decision with only the best interest of the students in mind.

In the past a unanimous decision of this nature by the General Phys Ed Committee would have been sufficient to insure that the decision would stand. This year, however, due mostly, I believe, to the fact that the owner of Mt. Tom is Mr. D. O'Connell (of O'Connell Construction Co.) the decision did not stand. Higher-ups in Whitmore and in the Phys Ed Department chose to step in. Suddenly, a new policy was formulated where any area will be allowed to offer the Phys Ed program as long as the area provide 24 hours of contact time and students would be free to choose the area at which they wanted to take their skiing program. Although I agree in principle with this new policy, I believe that the intent of it was to restore a large chunk of the skiing program to Mt. Tom due to the fact that most students at UMass are familiar with Mt. Tom and are, unfortunately, unfamiliar with Berkshire East.

My familiarity with both areas leads me to ask students who will be faced with the decision to consider these points. Berkshire East has twice the vertical drop of Mt. Tom with an intermediate trail two miles in length. Rather than being located in the center of an urban region, Berkshire East is located in the beautiful Berkshire Mountains. And, above all, Berkshire East is uncrowded. I truly believe that Berkshire East is a far superior mountain and it is available at a lower cost. I urge all students taking skiing to get the facts on both mountains and not make the decision out of habit.

Harry Charych is president of the UMass Ski Club.



Nixon's demise is inevitable

By MARK VOGLER

WASHINGTON, D.C.----"It is my constitutional responsibility to defend the integrity of this great office against false charges. I also believe that it is important to address the overriding question of what we as a nation can learn from this experience, and what we should now do...

"...We must not stay so mired in Watergate that we fail to respond to challenges of surpassing importance to America and the world. We cannot let an obsession with the past destroy our hopes for the future."--President Richard M. Nixon

Now that the nation has become attuned to never-ending disclosures of the White House Horrors, the President's removal pivots on one more "bombshell."

Unfortunately Watergate has saturated the media so extensively that people have become narcotized by its effects and have accepted it with humility.

But as the days pass, the political-social atmosphere in America runs thin. Public opinion has swung around again in the President's disfavor. Eventually the people will tolerate no more and the bubble will burst.

Nixon's demise is now inevitable. It can not be changed. The country's future is cloudy. That can be changed.

People are so obsessed with Watergate at this point that they want to puruse the quickest course to forget it. Allowing the President to remain in office will only prolong the stench which permeates his administration.

America must now undergo another year of Watergate headlines, probes and Congressional hearings. The House Judiciary Committee will drag out its independent inquiry into Watergate events until October of next year.

The Erving Committee, likewise, has not finished its work and may wish to pursue the mounting evidence on the President's trail.

Congress must be criticized for its lack of guts to act responsively. But once they end their hold-out on the impeachment issue, President Nixon will get the message.

Now that we have a Vice President, Congress will feel less constraints when other shocking disclosures break in the newspapers. It certainly seems that more scandalous stories will come out.

The controversial Howard Hughs cash donation indeed is threatening to Mr. Nixon. Once its full ramifications are understood, nothing will stop the public clamor. There will be no holding back Congress, then.

The tapes chicanery--once documented--will likely have an adverse effect on the President's last stand.

Watergate is a very sad and tragic political documentary of a man who wanted to be known in the history books as a great president, and rightfully so.

He rose from obscurity to the stature of a great political giant--given an astounding 49-state mandate for reelection after having ended the country's longest war involvement and achieved better foreign relations with China and the Soviet Union.

No history can color up the tragedy of Watergate. Mr. Nixon's dream to have his likeness ground into stone at Mt. Rushmore is just a delusion of grandeur now.

People want to forget about Watergate...but can not with a wounded man in the White House. The President wants Watergate to be left behind. Yet, he has not resolved in his mind how to go about the difficult business at hand.

It is very unlikely that President Nixon would want his country to go through another year of turmoil. It is just a question of time as to when he resigns.

One more bombshell will blow his credibility (what remains) to bits. Will the President allow this to happen? Or will he resign soon and salvage some integrity for himself and for the presidency? The end seems near.

Watch out for the tape-worm!

By BOB FOSTER

General Alexander M. Haig recently posed a "devil theory" involving the famed eighteen minute gap on one of the Watergate tapes. Today, we discovered that indeed these Haigellian sinister forces do exist and are presently invading the UMass campus and the rest of the nation.

It was discovered late last night that the computer files of 118 students taking the computer science courses were missing. When questioning the director of the University Computing Center, he declared that in place of the files on the tapes, discs, and drums was a strange hum. The director vowed to get to the bottom of the matter! Rumors were spreading throughout the campus today that these missing files ahd indeed been destroyed by the infamous "Tapeworm".

Throughout the University, other tapes and files were disintergrating, humming, and erasing overnight. Hundreds of harried eight track tape owners crowded the local stores searching for a cartridge with a sound other than the dastardly hum. Cassette owners too were found roaming the university with tears of rage seeping from their eyes.

Yesterday evening, it was reported that a WUMV showing of a recent UMass basketball game produced a brilliant pictorial, but no sound! When questioned about the strange technical error, WUMV sport director Matty Keely could only grin while repeating "the Tapeworms are coming, the Tapeworms are coming!"

Further investigation yielded clues in the Whitmore Computing Center. It was discovered that 1800 students were missing from OSCAR's files. We disturbed a distraught programmer and asked him what happened to the 1800 missing students. He replied, "We have two options. First, the possibility of some form of malfunction within the hardware has occured. The second option, and the more logical since OSCAR doesn't malfunction, is the possible fact that these students who claim that their files are missing, really don't exist."

The Tapeworms affected the Food Services as well. Thousands of hungry students went to lunch and dinner without knowing what they were to digest. It was noted that the same disgusting hum was all that the Dial-A-Meal phone number would yield. Not knowing what to do, many students flocked to the infirmary with cases of anxious stomachs muttering, "At least before the Tapeworm infestation, we could prepare our stomachs for the meals."

Nationwide, the effects of the sinister Tapeworm were devasting. Minnesota Mining and Manufacturing, more commonly known as 3M Company, was forced into bankruptcy. Sony and Panasonic were forced to discontinue their tape player-recorder lines. Radio stations lost all of there recorded commercials.

Thus, we wish to warn the University community of the possible evils of the these Haigian sinister forces. If you discover that OSCAR no longer recognizes you as a student, that you receive nothing but a hum from Dial-A-Meal, and that your tape player plays but a single monotone; have no fear, the Tapeworm is at work. Further, when you hear continuing news stories of missing tapes, strange hums, and garbled dialogues, HAVE FAITH! General Haig is correct in his analysis. There is indeed a sinister force, the tiny tapeworm, who is the culprit behind all this mischief. But beware, once a tapeworm hooks itself within, it grows and grows until it controls your innards. You may never rid yourself of its influence for the rest of your days on earth. Let us rid ourselves of this most fiendish of creatures, the tapeworm. Let us rip its hooks from the very workings of our minds and cure its disease with large doses of honesty, integrity, and credibility.

Due to a typographical error, the caption of the cartoon on page 12 of Monday's Collegian was mistakenly attributed to Chester Broderick, Chairman, Boston Patrolman's Association. Chester Broderick favors the reinstatement of the death penalty in Massachusetts.

As I drew in my head and was turning around Down the chimney St. Nicholas came with a bound.
He was dressed all in fur,
from his head to his foot,
And his clothes were all tarnished with ashes and soot;
A bundle of toys
he had flung on his back,
And he looked like a peddler
just opening his pack.

Joyce Kosofsky's bad advice

To The Editor:

To Ms. Joyce Kosofsky's editorial of Wednesday, December 5, entitled "How to Get Out of the Meal Ticket", I have both general and specific responses. Generally, I think it is immoral and irresponsible for someone in Ms. Kosofsky's position of persuasion to blatantly suggest that students lie in order to be granted exemptions from the University's policies pertaining to the purchase of meal tickets and requirements for residing in residence halls. The mentality of such a suggestion smacks of the same inane "ends justifies the means" logic that we have recently seen so tragically employed by Mr. Nixon and company.

My specific response concerns the suggestion by Ms. Kosofsky that all one has to do to get an exemption to live off-campus is claim that he or she plans to be married. The Board of Trustees regulation on this matter states that married students are exempt from having to live on-campus. If the University were to follow the letter of this regulation students would be required to produce a marriage certificate before being allowed to reside off-campus. However, housing administrators on the Amherst campus have in the past generally interpreted this to include students who will be married during the semester in question. The University can only take on faith the student's statement of intent to be married during the semester, backed up by supporting statements from the student's parents. Along with extending this privilege to such students goes a corresponding responsibility on the part of the students not to abuse it. In accordance with this the University grants only temporary, one semester exemptions to students planning to be married during the semester. It is made clear to the student that for whatever reason should he or she not get married during that semester the University will require the student to reside on-campus the following semester.

The University makes every effort to afford those students with a legitimate need for off-campus residency, the opportunity to be seriously considered for an exemption. The Collegian, through one of its staff editorialists, by openly encouraging students without legitimate needs to surrepticiously circumvent this procedure by out and out lying, threatens to force the University into the unpleasant position of having to revert to the letter of the regulation.

I urge all students who read Ms. Kosofsky's article to seriously consider the implications which following her advice will have on your fellow students. In addition, I urge that the Collegian and Ms. Kosofsky take a more responsible approach to this matter.

Thanks, Collegian

To The Editor:

On Thursday November 29, 1973 the Daily Collegian donated fifty tickets to the Barnaban Baily Circus at the Springfield Civic Center. It was much appreciated by the J.O.E. program (Juvenile Opportunities Extention) the M.A.R.Y. program (Massachusetts Association for the Reintergration of Youth) the Advocate program (The Advocates for the Development of Human Potential) here at the University, and also by the Westfield Detention Center. The kids at the Detention Center enjoyed a night of freedom and they liked the circus very much. Without the support of the Collegian, this trip would not have taken place. Here are a few short thanks from some of the youth that took part in the event. "It was the first time and probably the last time seeing a circus and I really appreciate it." "I really enjoyed the circus a lot, and I really want to thank the Collegian for making our trip possible."

We do have activities for the youth but we can't have them as often as we would like for the reason that our funds are limited. The circus was a big event for the youth at Westfield Detention. They get to go out of the building very seldom because there is no where to go. But you people made it possible for the youth to go out one more time. The show was called the greatest show on earth, and now I think they have a lot of people convinced. It was a fantastic show. In one act a guy picked up a Five-hundred pound Lion and carried it to another chair. It was a pretty amazing act. We would like to thank you once again for making our trip possible.

Steak dinner, not survey

To The Editor:

Having read your article about ARA Services in the Collegian (December 5, 1973), I cannot believe the University is actually paying ARA to look into the food service problem. The University definitely has been taken.

Since I worked for ARA for five years, I know the "consulting" aspect of ARA is relatively new. What the University is paying money for used to be done free. Then it was called a "sales proposal" and it was part of their bid for the contract. I would assume that the report will be basically the same as their routine sales proposals with some slight additions on the organizational charts, a food preference survey and a few suggestions. This survey is instant profit for ARA since before it was solely a function of the Sales Department and was done in conjunction with the bid.

One must realize that this report is essentially still a "bid" and a promotional tool for ARA Services. An operation that has a $7 million budget would look attractive to any food service company. ARA could use the business in the Northeast Area and the University would, indeed, be a prestigious account for them.

Students must also realize that the quality of food will not change nor will the price of your meal ticket go down because ARA, as any other business, is interested in profit and not in student satisfaction. I'm sure they spouted their "Four-Sided Approach"; well, it's all rhetoric because it still is a game of dollars and cents and what profit ARA could gain from a UMass. contract. This management survey that the University is paying for is nothing more than a publicity stunt to eventually put in a bid for the contract.

ARA (the so-called "people-pleasers"?) is suffering from organizational problems and it amazes me how they can propose a solution to the food service problem at UMass. when they cannot solve their own internal problems. Certainly, some of the men conducting the survey are experienced food service people, but I feel that any one from the Hotel and Restaurant Department or the School of Business could have done the same job and come up with the same solutions for less money. The University should have saved their money and put it towards a steak dinner for the students.

SU remodeling questions

To The Editor:

This letter concerns the proposal for the reconstruction of the Student Union by the board of governors. Although I know that the board has the best interests of students in their hearts, I feel that some of the proposals are not in our best interests.

First, the money that will pay for the expensive remodeling of the building will come from an increased student tax. The board of governors dictates how much that tax will be. Shouldn't students be asked if they are willing to pay an increased tax so their student union will be color-co-ordinated?

Secondly, the proposal to bring in private enterprise into the union may prove to be a disaster to students. What will happen to all the student offices? Because of a lack of space, many important groups and organizations will have no offices. Even if one agrees with the idea of bringing in businessess into the Union, why should they be privately run without student input? The thinking here is that the private business will be able to pay rents that will pay for the Campus Center building. That may be a good idea, however these rental costs would be passed on to the students. Certainly all these costs would add up to make things very expensive. Businesses in the union could be non-profit student run organizations (i.e. peoples market). This would be more advantageous for students. It would also provide for more student jobs.

I would ask the Student Senate to think about these questions and then act, before we must pay for the privilege of being ripped off.

Beer price increase explained

To The Editor:

In reply to many of my constituents concerning Campus Center fee and the ten cent increase in beer, I approached the Chairperson of the Student Board of Governors, James A. Lindsey for an explanation. His reply was:

"As regards the Campus Center fee — the CC fee is made up of the difference between operating costs in the building and the operating revenues which the building brings in. The difference between these two is divided by the number of students on campus, both Graduate and Undergraduate, and the CC fee is, thus, arrived at. The more efficiently the CC operates and the greater the amount of revenue the CC brings in the less the fee would be. Offsetting this is the fact that the Campus Center Board of Governors, i.e. the Campus Center, is also obligated to provide services to the student body. Thus, some sort of a balance must be struck between operating the CC as a revenue producing facility and a service oriented facility. In either case, it is the responsibility of the Board of Governors to see that the students get the full benefits of the CC fee.

As regards your second question, the increase in the price of beer in the Campus Center. This was done, keeping in mind the above philosophy which I just described. Over the summer, there was an increased cost in the price of beer and in the cost of CO2 which is used in dispensing the beer. Combined with these increased costs and in light of the fact that we cut out all cover charges. The Board felt that a 10¢ increase in the price of beer was both equitable and fair. It is my belief that this is still the cheapest price in the area in terms of both the price and the amount of beer served per serving."

If you are not satisfied with this explanation, I would suggest approaching the Student Board of Governors for further details. Remember they are students too and they work for you.

Whistles, thefts and female support

By TONY GRANITE

COED WHISTLES TO SIGNAL DANGER is the name of the game intended by Student Government at the University of Colorado. They've recently issued 3,000 free metal whistles in a program they call "whistlestop."

The idea is to deter rape and other assaults on campus.

As soon as more money becomes available, 2,000 more of the 45-cent whistles will be purchased and issued to coeds, together with a card listing area police agencies.

I'd rather fight than smoke

Amid the controversy over the cancer causing potential of cigarette smoking, the effect of cigarette smoke on non-smokers has received little publicity. Here are some facts that you non-smokers can use in defense. The breath expended requesting smokers to abstain in public now may pay off in cleaner air and better health for years to come.

For those of you who shop at the health food store, or read the labels on canned food and buy bread without calcium proprionate, you might want to recall these chemicals before entering a smoke filled room: carbon monoxide, nitrogen dioxide, hydrogen cyanide, hydrogen sulfide, hydro cyanic acid, arsenic, and cadmium. All of these invisible substances are present in smoke filled air, many of them in dangerously high levels. consider the following facts put forth in the 1972 report of the Surgeon General and the National Interagency Council on Smoking and Health:

An idling cigarette contaminates the air for approximately 12 minutes. Smoke from an idling cigarette contains almost twice the tar and nicotine of an inhaled cigarette and thus may be twice as toxic as smoke inhaled by the smoker. One test made in Germany showed that the smoking of several cigarettes in a closed room makes the concentration on nicotine and dust particles so high that the non-smoker inhales as much harmful tobacco as the normal smoker inhales from four or five cigarettes.

Inhaled carbon monoxide enters the bloodstream where, in sufficient quantities, it can cause headache, dizziness, lassitude and possible heart and lung damage. Investigators have found that a room full of cigarette smokers can raise the carbon monoxide content to between 20 and 80 parts per million, the acceptable maximum in most industrial situations is 50 parts per million. In a close automobile, the smoke from 10 cigarettes can produce carbon monoxide levels up to 90 ppm. This carbon monoxide concentration can potentially interfere with the driver's ability to judge time intervals and thus lead to accidents.

The tobacco smoke emissions listed above have potential impacts on non-smokers and smokers alike. However, people already suffering from allergies, heart and lung disease may manifest immediate adverse reactions to cigarette smoke. Individuals wearing contact lenses often experience tearing and discomfort in smoke filled rooms.

Out of consideration for the health and comfort of those around them, smokers should be more aware of when, where and with whom they "lite up."

If you are a non smoker, why not take the time now to put your breath to good use by speaking out and protect the right of clean air for non-smokers. For all, the National Interagency council, states that non-smokers have a fight to breathe clean air, free from harmful and irritating tobbacco smoke. This right supersedes the right to smoke when the two conflict. Non-smokers have the right to express — firmly but politely — their discomfort and adverse reactions to tobacco smoke. They have the right to voice their objections when smokers light up without asking permission.

Thoroughly modern Alice

Alice stepped through the looking-glass again and found herself in the middle of a vast quadrangle lined with imposing buildings. Multitudes of individuals were about. She asked one of them "What is this place?" "This is a State University." "And what is a State University?" "Oh, a State University is an institution financed by the taxpayers where learned professors are expected to educate students." "And where are the professors and what do they teach those students who want to learn?" "Oh, the professors who want to teach students have to get tenure first and in the meantime they can't afford the time to teach. They have to do research instead." "How exciting! And what do they discover when they do research?" "Well, they aren't able to do any research. They spend all their time getting research grants." "Oh," said Alice, "I wonder which side of the looking-glass I'm on."

Commuters pooling

The Commuter Assembly in co-operation with other University agencies is sponsoring a computerized car pool program on a pilot basis for next semester. The Parking Office has offered to inform new registrants of the advantages of car pooling and assist them in filling out registration applications. They have also agreed to eliminate the $2 charge for a decal change for those people already registered who now want to form a pool.

Applications will be printed in tommorrow's Collegian. You can also pick them up at the: Parking Office, 103 Hampshire House; Student Affairs Office, 229 Whitmore and Students Activities, RSO Office, Student Union.

Fund-raising: an eye and a foot

With an eye on the future and a foot in the past, UMass alumni plunged headlong this semester into what promises to be a new tradition of fund-raising for the University. Based on the success of a "Phonothon" held last spring in the Boston area, the Alumni Office took on the task of telephoning all alumni for whom phone numbers could be obtained — some 30,000 — and asking for their contributions to the 1974 Annual Fund.

Two phonothons were held this fall with over 250 alumni volunteers making phone calls to some 4,000 alumni. One phonothon in the Amherst area raised approximately $16,000. The other in the Springfield area raised nearly $19,000. That's a tidy sum of money for the University considering only about $5,000 was ever raised from either of these groups in the past.

Interested people can get more information on upcoming programs by stopping at the Alumni Office in Memorial Hall or by calling 545-2543.

"Tis the season to be jolly, yet the Christmas vacation period is not without the potential for emotional stresses and strains. Several factors conspire to make many people especially vulnerable to psychological problems this time of year.

The holiday season is meant to be an emotional period. It is a time of increased anticipation, raised expectations, festive spirit, generosity and warmth. Sometimes, however, certain realities can intervene to create a letdown. These might result for example from increased social pressures or prior individual difficulties.

There are also problems, especially affecting college students, associated with environmental change. It is often necessary to leave friends, and familiar routines to confront once again family situations with their inherent conflicts. Visiting relatives can also increase family pressures as often several generations have to reach an accommodation with one another.

Finally, Christmas evokes associations of childhood, for children are very much the center of attention this time of year. Consequently, even for adults Christmas can encourage regressive wishes, needs, concerns and behaviors. Memories good and bad, conflicts about giving and receiving, old rivalries, concerns about parental love and warmth can all be psychologically re-experienced and recreated.

Now that we have dampened your holiday outlook you will probably discover that your vacation will turn out to be better than you think.

The stacked deck

The TEAC 450 isn't your stereotype stereo cassette deck. It's loaded with more features, more flexibility than any other stereo cassette player/recorder under $1,000. And the 450 only costs $429.

To start off, it's Dolbyized. Which means background noise is reduced to the point of true high fidelity. But the remarkable feature that takes this deck out of the cassette class and up to open-reel quality is TEAC's new tape drive mechanism. It keeps wow and flutter below an unbelievable 0.07%.

How did TEAC do it? With a newly designed capstan having a critical tolerance of 0.15 microns — a perfect roundness that smoothens and steadies tape flow. A new slip clutch has been critically machined to give perfect balance of tension between take-up reel and capstan. A hysteresis synchronous outer rotor motor has the outside revolving for greater inertia. A 93-mm flywheel has twice the mass of any other TEAC flywheel, dramatically increasing stability of the transport drive element which pulls the tape.

In short, you get the quality of reel-to-reel in the convenience of a stereo cassette deck.

And what else do you get with the TEAC 450? The first dual-function Dolby system. Three position separate bias and equalization switches. Two mic and two live inputs with slide control mixing. Full auto or timed stop and shutoff. Large VU meters with LED peak level indicators. High density permaflux heads. Open-reel quality preamp. And more.

We, at The Sound Company, highly recommend the TEAC 450 stereo cassette player/recorder. It's the perfected stereo cassette deck that serious audiophiles have been hoping would come about for years.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Events may appear scrambled. What was settled is moved. One who was reliable "drops out." Maintain you own balance. Study Cancer message. Put out feelers — expand horizons without scattering forces. Maintain pace by working behind the scenes.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Study fine points. Read between the lines. Take nothing for granted. Some friends express conservative views. If patient, you gain. Otherwise you create unnecessary opposition. Funding is available if you present the case in concise manner.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Be ready for change, travel, variety. Gemini, Virgo persons could be in picture. Perceive and analyze. Piece together bits of information for complete story. You may be called upon to be a representative, to speak or write for community or organization or special group.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Soft-sell approach is likely to achieve best results. Taurus, Libra individuals are in picture. Take long-range view. Be aware of potential. One who leans on you is actually a secret admirer. But with that kind of friend you do not need an enemy!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): See through sham, deliberate or otherwise. Insist on factual information. Discard rumors. Money is involved and so is mate, partner. Some who really wish you well might also be misinformed. Protect your interests.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan.19): An apparent setback could eventually result in circumstance which aids rather than deters. You are given opportunity to handle added responsibility. Pressure mounts but so do rewards. Be wary of legal complications. Stick to familiar ground. Organize. Stress money management.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Finish rather than begin — get loose ends together. Aries, Libra persons figure in important ways. Get routine tasks out of way. If you neglect essentials, you pay price. Know it and act accordingly. Check calls, correspondence. What you seek may be closer than is apparent on surface.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Relationships are intensified. Nothing now is apt to happen halfway — it is all or nothing. One who makes promises is seeking attention. Young persons are in picture. Make some concessions but know when to draw line.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are intuitive, a natural teacher; you also are unorthodox and pursue subjects off the mainstream. In September, you glimpsed rare insight to yourself. You might interpret it as a spiritual revelation. You earn more money in 1974. If single, you probably will marry. Married or single, you will be directing your own affairs rather than taking orders from others.

The incredible adventures of frustrated jocks

By STEVE CROWE

The Collegian Sports Staff is a team of frustrated jocks. We have no primadonnas on our squad, but each of us has excelled in sport at one time or another. here the, is the 1973 Collegian All-American Sportswriters Team.

(Ed. Note: All of the following stories are true.)

STEVE CROWE, Sports Editor — played 1½ years of varsity baseball at Lenox Memorial High School. During that time, Crowe developed into perhaps the finest all-around first base coach in Western Mass. The most thrilling moment of his career came when the coach put him in the game for defensive purposes in the bottom of the 9th inning while leading 23-4 over McCann Tech.

STEVE DeCOSTA, Assistant Sports Editor — The 5-10 center of the Westport High Villagers once held Peter Trow to 47 points in one game. In DeCosta's two varsity seasons the Villagers amassed a grand total one one victory against 33 defeats.

BILL BALLOU, Football, Hockey Writer — Holds two baseball records at Northbridge High School in Whitinsville. Most sacrifice bunts in one game (4) and most errors in one inning playing second base (4). This broke his previous school record of 3 errors in one inning, which he set the year before.

SCOTT HAYES, Cross Country, Track Writer — Holds the Platt High School record for most saves by a hockey goalie in a game - 57. Carrying his club to a 1-20 season, Hayes held the opposition to a mere 11.1 goals per game.

WALT POWERS, All-around — Once caught a screaming line drive off the bat of slugger Earle Barroll with his head in the Collegian picnic softball game last year. The ball hit him in the face, bounced off his wrists, back onto his chin and then he made a diving shoe string catch, an inch off the ground.

EARLE BARROLL, Columnist — Once scored 7 goals in one game, including the sudden death overtime winner, to lead his PE 101 Water Polo team to victory.

GLENN POSTER, Columnist — While playing baseball for Darrow School, he broke up a pitcher's perfect game with a dramatic bunt (error) in the thrilling second inning.

MARTY KELLEY, Columnist — Sporting a rude face and a rash to match, Kelley once captained a St. Michael's soccer team to a fine 2-11 season. His Little League baseball team once lost a game by a 33-1 score.

GEOFF KURINSKY, All-around — Geoff will always be remembered as the man who kicked ass on the Ivies. During the annual Battle of the Press touch football game, it was Kurinsky who ran back an interception to give the Collegian a 6-0 victory over the Harvard Crimson.

MIKE "BEAR" BROPHY, Morning Sports Editor — Before 30,000 fans at Harvard Stadium, this UMass football manager took a hand off from Ed Hajdusek and fumbled the water bottle during a timeout. "Bripho" was a childhood chum of Marty Kelley and was the manager of the team that beat Kelley's baseball "Angels", 33-1.

JOHN BOCK, Wrestling Writer — While wrestling in the 145 lb. class at Thomas Jefferson High School in Pittsburgh, Pa., Bock lost all of his varsity matches. Twice he was pinned by boys who eventually made it to the State tournament — two proud moments for John.

BETH O'BRIEN, Women's Sports — Beth claims that she never took sports seriously. And to prove it, she and her doubles tennis partner went 0-7 for two years in high school.

DAVE EIBEL, Columnist, Hockey Writer — Dave received a standing ovation from the partisan Coronation Elementary (Montreal) School fans when he became the first player on his basketball team to get a shot off in a game against Lower Canada College. It was midway through the second half that Dave let one go from three-quarter court. The shot missed the basket by over 30 feet and his team went on to lost by a score of 52-3.

Frustrated jocks? Sure we are. But we don't have to brag about our past sports glories — We'll just let our records speak for themselves.

Dave Eibel

El switchos

By DAVE EIBEL

In Houston, all last week, the eyes of the baseball world were focused on the annual meeting of baseball's general managers, in which men are traded like cattle on the open market, except that the fate of baseball players is a little more pleasant than poor bovines.

Dick O'Connel, praised be the Irish, put together what could very possibly be a pennant-winning pitching staff. Just that they get the hitting.

With cigar-chomping Luis Tiant, Canadian Reggie Cleveland, Rick Wise, Bill Lee, and either Juan Marichal or Dick Drago as the swingman, the Red Sox have a solid and proven pitching staff. Diego Segui right now looks like the Sox' bullpen stopper and for that he is definitely capable.

The Orioles for their part got fireballing Ross Grimsley from Cincinnati to add youth to a starting staff of very effective veterans and they should be as tough as ever.

In the National League, the Astros and Dodgers entered into a trade of veterans: Jimmy Wynn, "the toy cannon", and Claude Osteen, Gomer Pyle's look-alike. I doubt that anyone will gain from that deal, because both players are past their halcyon days.

Montreal let openminded reliever Mike Marshall move from the snow and cold of Quebec to the sun of southern California in exchange for center-fielder Willie Davis. The trade will make the Expos a definite contender in the East and make the Dodgers' already invincible pitching staff even more difficult to score against.

Ed Kirkpatrick, a good hitter who can catch, play the outfield and first base, went from Kansas City to Pittsburgh in a trade that will make the Pirates' torrid bats tepid.

If the baseball season started tomorrow, the Pirates and Dodgers would have to be the people's choices to win their divisions, while in the American League Oakland and Baltimore would have to be considered favorites with the Red Sox just about even. The addition of Drago, Wise, Cleveland, Segui, and Marichal has to be worth at least ten more wins for the Red Sox which would put them about even with the Orioles. The big question mark for the Red Sox will be the outfield especially in center field. I doubt that Rick Miller will be as effective as Reggie Smith was, but Bernie Carbo could pick up any slack by coming up with a season as good as his first one with the Reds. It's Christmas beckoning, but get ready for "play ball!"

Swimmers try to break jinx against WPI

By MDC STAFF

The UMass swim team again tries for that elusive first victory tonight when they take on Worcester Polytech in the Boyden Pool at 7:30.

The swimmers have floundered so far this season, losing their first two meets to Maine and Wesleyan.

One of the major problems for the team has been the inexperience of the individual competitors. Of the 18 or so team members only a handful are upperclassmen.

But the experience gained in the last two meets could start to show up against WPI.

Against Wesleyan, many of the UMass swimmers were in unfamiliar spots in the lineup for experimental purposes. Placing people in their strong events could make the difference in tomorrow's meet and help the Minutemen break their jinx.

Peil overlooked

By MIKE BROPHY

For Tim Berra, UMass wide receiver, it was great news to learn that he had been named to the Coaches' All-East football squad as wide receiver. For quarterback Peil Pennington it was not so good a day as he was overlooked by the coaches who went with Jim Stoeckel (Harvard) as their qb of the year.

For Coach Dick MacPherson, who will be traveling with Berra and Pennington to Miami to serve as head coach of the North squad, it was a day of mixed emotions. "We were pulling for the both of them," MacPherson said, "but I guess that the team's failure to repeat as champs hurt Peil's chances for the honor.

Don't get me wrong," he continued, "Peil is one of the best and he is going places come the time of the draft." Peil has been scouted and rescouted by nearly every football talent scout up and down the East coast as the market for quarterbacks is always good.

The likes of Charlie Hall from Quadra and Willie Wood, former Green Bay great, of San Diego have made many trips to Amherst to see Pennington and Berra workout either on the playing field or on the practice field under the lights.

"It'll be a great honor for me to be able to hang that certificate on the wall when this is all over," said the elated Berra. "I feel sorry for Peil but his day will be coming...especially if he has a great day in Miami."

One you've been waiting for

By EARLE BARROLL

Never, no way does anything lack in the home spun spirits when the principles are UMass and UConn, the event basketball. "Anytime these two get together," says a veteran of many of these tussles, Jack Leaman, "it's an all-out war." Very vivid, but very true.

And so tonight, 8 p.m. but get there early, Curry Hicks Cage will have to brace its ancient self for the imminent onslaught of emotions when the top two contenders and as a matter of fact the only two contenders in the Yankee Conference match forces.

Dee Rowe, the head coach of UConn, is not shy when he preens over his talent. He shouldn't be as many others have goo-goo eyed his ranks that feature six of the top ten players in the Conference and enough basketball wealth as Rowe says to "make a run at the top spot in New England."

In a number of pre-season basketball publications UConn has been selected as the team to beat. The Huskies have a huge front line, if not in actual size, in talent and jumping (like rebounding) ability. Cal Chapman (6'6) and Gary Custick (6'7) are seniors and sound, but many are still waiting for the much anticipated emergence of Junior Earl (6'5 with springs) Wilson. "I'd have to say that he had more potential than Julius Erving had as a freshman," said Leaman. That says alot.

Then there's the backcourt. Jim "I'll take you to the bridge" Foster and Al Weston who opened his career as a freshman last year, very first game with 43 points. They are PLAYERS. And even with UConn's front line, the Huskies' success depends on how these two can find the perfect medium between front and backcourt play. That has been this team's rap.

While UConn has six (five starters and one super freshman) of the top studs in the league, UMass has the other four — Al Skinner (the best), John Murphy, Bill Endicott and Rick Pitino. A fifth, Greg Duarte has been THE surprise of this young season for Leaman.

WUMV

Want to see the Rhode Island basketball game? Due to a scheduling problem the game was not shown at the Bluewall this Sunday night. But WUMV-TV and Video Sidewalk has rescued all you Leaman parasites. At 1:30 this afternoon adjacent to the coffee shop the game will be shown in its entirety spiced by the final public performance of the distinguished acamedician Earle Barroll and Marty Kelley. This will be their final bow together, but maybe their spirit will linger in infamy.

A parting tribute

Steve Crowe defeated Marty Kelley in the Collegian election for Sports Editor, Crowe fired Kelley as his Asst. Sports Editor, Crowe suspended Kelley from the staff for two weeks because he thought his writing had gotten too rude, and Crowe and Kelley had numerous tiffs throughout the last two semesters.

So it shows the regard Kelley has for Crowe when he gives up this column space (the last he'll ever have) so someone can write about Steve Crowe.

He came to the staff as an artist, literally, a guy with a good pen who drew some fine cartoons. He did layout one night a week and generally was one of the least conspicuous members of the staff.

So, when time came last February for elections, nobody gave Crowe a chance against Kelley. He won in an upset, of course, and became Sports Editor.

He changed things, slowly at first, then more quickly toward the end, which is now upon him.

Not all of the changes were met with approval, mainly because changes never are. But he always stuck to his guns, and almost all of the things he changed were for the better.

Those changes will be the things he leaves with the sports section when he leaves for Europe or Bali or Vermont or wherever he decides to go on his travels. Under Crowe the sports pages, for better of worse, finally became what a lot of sports editors preceding him had hoped they'd become.

The section was expanded to three pages on a regular basis. The staff grew in size and diversity, and the writing improved. Increased coverage of women's sports was a major accomplishment, and while it needs improvement the current situation is so far better than what he had to start with. They can't be compared.

But the major accomplishments of a great editor aren't his own, but his staff's. Because that's what an editor's hardest and most important job is---getting the most out of his personnel. In an area of working where egos are sometimes bigger than abilities, it isn't an easy job. Somehow he got through things without making anyone mad enough to quit, and without allowing anyone to get so big he became bigger than the paper itself.

Perhaps his most important contribution was in divorcing the sports pages from the athletic department. At too many schools the newspaper is looked upon as a public relations rag to further the image of State U. At too many schools the paper is used to hype the teams, to serve as a large-scale cheerleader and to raise the coach and his men to status only slightly lower that The Creator.

He never would permit this to happen, and jealously guarded the right of his people to say what they damn well wanted to say about whom they damn well wanted to say it about, no matter how wrong they appeared to be, as long as they said it literately.

He had done a good job. The office is a fun place work, as evidenced by the number of people who hang around even when they're not writing. His writers have confidence in what they do and respect themselves and the other members of the staff. They like being sportswriters.

And, as sportswriters and friends, they'll miss Steve Crowe.

First UYA Confab: Knowledge You Oughta Use

UYA Revenue Sharing Conference presentors included (left to right): Professor Charles Schottland, Florence Heller School of Advanced Studies, Brandeis University; John R. Ford, Director of Worcester Model Cities; D.M. Gossland, Assistant Director of the Lower Pioneer Valley Regional Planning Commission in West Springfield; Guy Rosmarin, Director of Federal-State Relations of the Office of the Governor in Boston; and Attorney Betty Gittes, legal consultant to the Municipal Women's Project in Boston.

A conference on revenue sharing held at the Campus Center on November 29th and 30th and sponsored by the office of University Year for ACTION at the University of Massachusetts ended on a note of negative anticipation of the results of the President's "new federalism."

Current and former representatives of federal, state and local human service organizations addressed the conference participants concerning the history, politics and pros and cons of general and special revenue sharing in two days of panels, lecture presentations and workshops.

Almost every spokesperson expressed the view that revenue sharing was an unsound enactment. Charles Schottland, former Director of the Social Services Administration in Washington and presently, a professor at Brandeis University's Florence Heller School of Advanced Studies, stated in the opening address that it was his analysis that if it had not been for Watergate, revenue sharing would be the number one issue in the country today.

Revenue sharing was summed up by various speakers as reflecting the philosophy of the Administration where the government no longer views itself as responsible for providing human services to the American people, but is reversing the dominating government philosophy of 40 years (since President F.D. Roosevelt) and giving revenue to the States for their provision of such services. The loopholes, however, are many.

Schottland said that revenue sharing ignores the fact that most national level human service programs were constructed because of the negligence of the States. He added that such concerns as unemployment, poverty, etc. are national problems that cannot be adequately dealt with by State and local government machinery. In a panel about the pros and cons of general revenue sharing, John R. Ford, Director of Worcester Model Cities said that for the most part, most States are too small to have the number of skilled persons required to operate such programs.

Much in the same vein, D. M. Gossland, Assistant Director of Lower Pioneer Valley Regional Planning Commission, stated that the fact that the federal government was giving monies to State and local levels did not necessarily mean that the States' capability has increased. The reality that revenue funds are being used to hold down the tax level instead of the purposes for which they were intended was a major shortcoming of revenue sharing, according to Guy Rosmarin, Director of Federal-State Relations of the Office of the Governor in Boston, Massachusetts.

Betty Gittes, an attorney and legal consultant to the Municipal Women's Project pointed out that there are no standards or procedures for discrimination action vis a vis revenue sharing. Addressing the conference participants concerning "Civil Rights and Affirmative Action," she said that it is "very rare that granting agencies cut off funds (for discrimination), and in this case, the State does not have to apply for funds."

The fact that most of Amherst's revenue sharing funds are being used for law enforcement was disclosed by Steven Sheiffer, Assistant to the Town Manager in Amherst. He said that there is difficulty in supporting human service programs such as a mental health program which receives federal funds and because revenue sharing monies cannot be used for matching (federal) funds.

In another of the four afternoon workshops, specifically, social services, it was noted that because of the government's preoccupation with statistics indicating success, many human service programs have resorted to orienting themselves to people who do not really need the services as much as others. Referring to this practice as the "numbers game", agency representatives from Western Massachusetts said that, very often, the success of a community program does not lend itself to statistical measurement.

The second day of the revenue sharing conference opened with a keynote address from William J. Spring, of the Institute of Politics, Harvard University. Much in keeping with the first day's keynote address from Schottland, he expressed his view that, in actuality, "Revenue sharing does not represent a diffusion of power, but a shedding of responsibility." He added that, "Power is where the money is, and the money is in Washington."

In a panel designed to put forth the pros and cons of special revenue sharing, Robert Black, Deputy Director of Worcester Model Cities stated that the local governments, in effect, will have less money with which to operate and inadequate manpower or training programs to upgrade personnel. He also cited the lack of a mechanism for citizen participation and the mobility of city populations as negative factors which would affect the functioning of special revenue sharing. With regards to citizen participation and information, Al Rosenberg, Director of SCOPE in Dayton, Ohio made mention of the fact they many people are not even aware of the federal benefits for which they are eligible. Donald Levitan summed up the feelings of the panelists in his remark that "Revenue sharing's objective is less to serve the people's needs and more to support the fiscal mismatch we are in."

In a presentation about "Welfare Reorganization", Peter Edelman, Vice President for Policy of the University of Massachusetts addressed the conference participants concerning revenue sharing's effect, which, according to him, has done two things: cut down the number of people eligible for social services, and decrease the number of areas designated as social service.

The consensus of the majority of conference spokesmen was that revenue sharing will replace many existing federally-funded human services programs before their potentially positive impacts are felt. Many of the Conference participants had sincere doubts about the States' ability to adequately and sufficiently substitute such service efforts on a State level, especially in view of many States' named

UYA/UMass. Institutes Option No. 1

The University Year for ACTION program at Amherst is initiating recruitment for OPTION No.1 Volunteers.

Option No. 1 is an attempt by UYA to institutionalize the UYA concept — field experince education — on the UMass campus. The Option No. 1 Program offers students an opportunity to work in selected social service agencies in Western Massachusetts either at a UYA sponsored agency or at any other agency serving the needs of the low-income populations of this area.

A Volunteer in Option No. 1 may work full-time or part-time (at least 20 hours-week) at the agency for a period of one or two semesters of a full year. Option No. 1 Volunteers may live on or off campus and may take classes on campus, or take informal classroom work and gain credits through the experiential learning channels such as the UYA CAS Block and the UMASS 200 practicum.

Faculty and students will greatly benefit by Option No. 1. Faculty who sponsor courses which deal with the theoretical problems of the low-income communities may want to arrange for students to test these theories in the field. The opportunity, now, exists to incorporate classroom learning directly with field experience. Faculty may suggest and direct students to agencies that would directly fit into their classroom work.

Students benefit just as much or more so than faculty. If a professor develops a project and agency placement, then accordingly, the student will have direct supervision and guidance from the professor.

In any case, the Option No. 1 Volunteer will receive supervision in the field from agency personnel and from the project management staff of UYA.

The Volunteers are eligible for: VISTA Medical Insurance which covers medical care and emergency dental care; an optional life insurance policy for $10,000 if under 30 years of age; and a reduction in the semester fee bill by the off-campus fee waiver (providing the Volunteer is living off-campus).

Students who participate in the Option No. 1 Program will receive direction and services from the UYA Program which has successfully placed over 250 Volunteers in the field and has initiated programs for the communities of Western Massachusetts. One such program was the In-Service Training Conference on Revenue Sharing which was held recently. Option No. 1 Volunteers will be eligible to attend UYA conferences dealing with such topics as grantsmanship, analysis of communities and agency organizations and record keeping.

Students from any of the colleges in the five college area are eligible for the Option No. 1 Program. All that is needed is a job description defining the problem and the planned impact the Volunteer expects to have on the problem.

If there are any students interested in combining their classroom education with field experience education and have a sincere interest in resolving the problems of the low-income communities of Western Massachusetts, the opportunity is now available to use your strengths and knowledge in this vein. For further information contact Bruce Shefshick at the UYA Office at 545-1381.

UYA Proposes to Expand College Base

To effectively increase the UYA program's impact on communities in the Worcester area, the office of University Year for ACTION at Amherst is proposing to the University the expansion of UYA's college base from the five colleges in this area to also include the colleges in the Worcester area.

This expansion would be beneficial for the students at colleges in Worcester, for the agencies and low-income communities of Worcester, and for the UYA-UMass-Amherst program. The students who are familiar with the problems of the Worcester communities are also familiar with the departments on their campuses. They could use these resources to alleviate the problems in the low-income communities.

Currently, the UYA Program has been very successful in placing students from the five colleges in the UYA program. The students are working as UYA Volunteers in Holyoke and Springfield agencies which serve the needs of the low-income communities in the Worcester area via UYA, the ideal course would be to recruit Volunteers directly from the communities where they will be serving.

In the past, many problems have arisen when the UYA office has tried to recruit Volunteers from Worcester area colleges. The main problem for the interested students is the matter of transferring to UMass-Amherst and obtaining faculty sponsors for credit.

The expanding of the college base to include the colleges of the Worcester area would allow students to remain enrolled at their present colleges, negating any procedures for transfer to UMass-Amherst and enabling them to continue work on the projects after their completion of their year in ACTION by remaining in the Worcester area.

Therefore, the total impact these students will contribute to alleviating poverty in Worcester, will significantly increase the effectiveness of the UYA program in the Worcester area, and will provide a broader base of service to the Commonwealth from UMass-Amherst.

Dr. Ruth Burgin, Director of University Year for ACTION attends to the business of the UYA office during one of its typically, busy days.

Institutionalizing Theory And Practice

A Role for Everyone

Institutionalization is a concept which should be familiar in one way or another to every UYA Volunteer. It should be an ongoing concern of every Volunteer as they ask questions such as the following: "Have I made any provisions for the continuation of the work I am doing? In a year when I have left this job, will the goals I have been working toward be the object of additional hours?"

In a program such as UYA which operates strictly in cycles, these are very real and very crucial questions — ones that the program as a whole must ask itself. The University Year for ACTION program at the University of Massachusetts is undergoing a gradual phasing out of federal funds. Each year we can expect less and less financial support; we are thus engaged in the institutionalization of the entire UYA concept at the University.

How is the task of institutionalization best accomplished? First of all, there must be money. Money, hopefully, will come from such sources as the University and from the agencies where Volunteers are placed. Secondly, there must be an academic framework which is workable and manageable. The Practicum, UMASS 200, affords us the basis for that. And, finally, there must be an awareness of the importance of public service and of the relevance of off-campus programs as a way to broaden educational horizons. That is where the UYA Volunteers figure most strongly.

Volunteers can spread the UYA concept as it becomes institutionalized to all reaches of the University. Volunteers can become Student Senators, members of the Commuter Assembly; they can make the concerns which brought them to UYA clear in meetings with other members of their major field of study. For Psychology majors, the Committee for Undergraduate Students of Psychology (CUSP) exists as a perfect place to begin the work of making field-related coursework part of a standard curriculum. And, that opportunity exists in all areas of the University.

This is a time for change as the program undergoes the types of metamorphosis which will result in its final form as a part of the University curriculum. Now is the time to get involved if you want to help influence that change.

UMass. 200 Available to All UGrads.

Anyone out there who hasn't heard of UMASS 200? A few, huh. Well, let's rephrase the question. Anyone who hasn't heard of the Practicum? OVERWHELMING APPLAUSE! A few boos. But everyone's heard? No?

Banner headlines read, "Students Gain Credit For Field Experience;" "New Educational Option Open to All UMASS Students." What about the red tape? I've heard from my roommate's sister's husband that the fine print takes a semester to read. Another voice pipes up: And someone told me there are more if's, and's and but's attached to this than to the willing of your body to Harvard Medical School.

For any and all who have heard such nefarious rumors, let us lay your fears to rest. Although the Practicum originated with University Year for ACTION at UMASS, it is available to all UMASS students. And surprisingly enough, if you know how to go about it, the Practicum takes (for at least one semester) all the worry out of being close to Boyden Gym during Registration. No add and drop card (of if you've pre-registered, a few): one faculty signature. Easy as a frozen TV dinner.

When University Year for ACTION originated on the UMASS campus with its year-long internships, several UYA Volunteers decided that the learning that they were doing in the field should be worthy of some University credit. After a proposal passed the UYA Advisory Board, the Academic Matters Committee of the Faculty Senate, and finally the Faculty Senate itself, the Practicum found itself pushed into existence.

Students can gain up to 15 credits for field-related coursework, credit which may be obtained over more than one semester. A student must find a faculty sponsor (that one signature), a sponsor who is knowledgeable in the area in which the student plans to work. That professor receives, after the field work is completed, some justification that learning has been achieved through academically related fieldwork; that justification must put the fieldwork in the context of two academic courses, one taken before the fieldwork and one taken after. That's it in its easiest form. We'd be pulling your leg if we didn't tell you it was a bit more complicated than that; but not much.

The Practicum is available to any student who wishes to line up field work on his own. There need be no go-betweens. This can be a do-it-yourself kit. If you're gutsy enough to forge your way into the UMASS 200 jungle, more power to you. But it is also available through structured off-campus programs such as UYA and Outreach.

If this option interests you, and you would like more information as to how to get off campus and still receive credit, while learning something which might appear to you as the most relevant learning you've done since the first day you came to UMASS, why don't you give us a call. We'll be happy to tell you how to tackle the monster. Through our program (since we're where it all began) or through some other channel. That's University Year for ACTION, 5-1381.

Ask for anyone.

Field Experience Holds Confab

UYA-UMass-Amherst staff members recently attended the 2nd National Conference of the Society for Field Experience Education held at the Kellog Center for Continuing Education of the University of Michigan in East Lansing.

Approximately 300 people from all over the country attended the two day conference, which was highlighted by the presentations of the films of various internship programs by the State of Georgia and Mars Hill College in North Carolina.

UYA staff members also visited the Center for Alternatives in Higher Education (C-AHED), a resource center where students may find information on volunteer work, full-time internships and travel.

The second day of the conference was composed of workshops covering such topics as THE ROLE OF THE STUDENT; THE ROLE OF THE BROKER; THE ROLE OF THE AGENCY SUPERVISOR; EDUCATIONAL OBJECTIVES; PROGRAM DESIGN; FINANCING; FOLLOW-UP OF FIELD EXPERIENCE; EVALUATION; and an AUDIOVISUAL workshop. The staff found many of the workshops very worthwhile and collected much of the material presented at the workshops to be made available in the forthcoming UYA reserve section of the new library at UMass.

The Conference presented Dr. Bernard Charles, Academic Dean of Livingston College, Rutgers University and newly elected President of the Society for Field Experience Education as the keynote speaker. "The Role of the Society" was his topic.

For persons who were seeking a rationale by which to incorporate field education into higher education, Dr. Charles said that field experience education has a long history. He quoted educators in history such as Alfred North Whitehead and John Dewey, and present educators as John Taylor of Michigan State University as stating that knowledge is connected with practice as well as theory, and that field experience is necessary for a true education. He said that it was society's obligation to provide this opportunity.

UYAs Help the Poor Get More

New Director Defends Locals From Univ's. Impact

Dave Johnson, former UYA Volunteer (Phase III) and newly appointed Director of the Neighborhood Services Agency in Northampton, attributes his securing of the directorship post to "fortunate circumstances." A discussion with Dave will tell one, however, that his personal qualities obscure the possibility of "fortunate circumstances" being singularly the causal agent for his current capacity. Reflecting on his experiences, Dave says, "I'm sold on the whole concept of getting young men and women off of that damned campus where they see nothing but 22 story towers to jump off of!"

A year ago last August (1972), Dave joined University Year for ACTION. He originally started working with the Hampshire Correctional Services and later transferred to Hampshire Community Action Commission of which Neighborhood Services was a part. He said he chose this project because it "seemed to be doing everything — work in housing, alcoholism, retired citizens, etc." More than that, Dave was impressed with the philosophy of the project which he summed up — "If people are given the opportunity, they can work towards personal fulfilling goals." He said that in his agency's rendering of services, the major responsibility lies with the client so that they have some control over their destinies.

At the time of his appointment to the Hampshire Community Action Commission, Dave was the first Volunteer to work there. He started as a social service worker and helped in the determining of his own job description. His primary responsibilities at that time included welfare advocacy — intake, referral, welfare counseling, housing information, etc. He put together a thirty page Welfare Guide to provide information to the 70 members of the staff of the 7 agencies of Hampshire Community Action Commission and held training sessions for the staff. (This Guide will soon be available in the UYA reserve section of the new UMass library).

When a job vacancy arose for a person who would train and provide technical assistance for the staff, Dave was two months away from the completion of his 12-month program in UYA. He was interviewed and selected for the job, and at that point, he terminated from UYA. Several months later, the Director of Neighborhood Services, Barbara Jordan, resigned to have a baby. Interviewed for the position among 50 other applicants, Dave secured this position. He said that his vantage point was that he knew the community and had a degree of experience in the area of social services.

Expressing the view that this is the greatest educational experience he has had, Dave confesses excitement at being instrumental in helping to place young, alive, creative and alert minds into areas where they can really help people. He said that University Year for ACTION is one of a few available ways where this can happen. He added that, in the future, society will be in need of experienced people who can cope as jobs get tighter, funding sources dry up and intrrelationships get more tense.

Interested in counseling and group dynamics and organization, Dave particularly enjoys working with planning and engineering of social services that are helping people find "self-actualization." He said that his directorship is like that of a "backroom teacher," which according to him is in keeping with his being an education major.

Dave's major responsibilities include insuring that the staff of the program are afforded opportunities to provide social services, and sensing needs in order to design new and valid programs. His major project which he refers to as his "baby" is establishing an effective lead paint poison screening program for the Hilltown community through the Health Office and Headstart.

It is his view that this can be dealt with to get immediate results as opposed to the length of time it requires to secure proper housing for community residents. Dave strongly expressed his belief that the University is a part of the prlblem for limited and expensive housing because of the opulation influx. Stating that the universities are not responding to the social needs of society and specifically, in this county, Dave was emphatic in his assertion that "It's time for the five college area to start making some responses!"

Dave credits his UYA experience with being responsible for making him aware of the extent of the university's impact with regards to the problems in the local area. He said that the five colleges can compensate for the detrimental effects they have by instituting more UYA programs, financing more UYA students. Dave feels that such efforts are one of the many ways the colleges can help vocalize social problems of the nation and make people aware. "It's not new that universities have been requested to make up for their impact, and some have responded," said Dave.

Admittedly comfortable in contending with middle-class America and helping others, Dave says the concept of working in the community and providing community service was not foreign to him. He mentioned that he has worked in campaigning and took a couple of years off of school for such efforts. He said that he initially got involved in social services at the time of Rev. Martin Luther King Jr.'s assassination which he says he had "enough time to stick to and learn something from." He says that his job of servicing 50 to 60 persons a week and trying to make the system work smoothly for the staff as well as the clients is nothing less than a challenge.

188 Area Students Assist Mentally Retarded

Alice Gerritson, a UYA Volunteer at the University of Massachusetts and Administrative Assistant to the Adult Education Director at Belchertown State School has successfully recruited 118 volunteers to assist her in the provision of human services to the adult residents at the School. Four evenings a week, these volunteers aid the mentally retarded by their participation in the night school, the infirmary program, programs for the severely retarded adolescents and the moderate and severley retarded adults as well as their participation in the Greenfield area halfway houses.

Involving some 280 adults and a few adolescents, the programs are designed to provide them with basic skills in reading writing, time-telling and using money. A law course and socilization activities are also provided for these residents of Belchertown State School, the majority of whom are either working on the grounds of Belchertown State School or in the local surrounding community.

When asked how she was able to secure such mass participation in the programs of the School, Ms. Gerritson said that it was the result of a plan which she devised. She said that she had contacted the professors at Westfield State College in the Spcial Education Department and then forwarded to them seven or eight course descriptions (designed for the residents). Later, she was invited to speak to each special education class at Westfield State College, and following her presentations, which lasted over a period of 3 days, she recruited the great majority of the current 188 volunteers.

Later, in an effort to set up an Advocacy Program at the School where advocates would visit individual, former residents of Belchertown State School and assist them with skill development and securing social service benefits such as medicare, Ms. Gerritson talked to the students of psychology and education classes at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst. This effort proved very successful and an advocacy program was instituted as a part of the services rendered at Belchertown State School.

Another UYA Volunteer in Holyoke Legal Services was later to contact Ms. Gerritson ility of the now instituted law course, advising residents of their legal rights. She offered her support to this Volunteer, Steven Ferrarone, who contacted people at Hampshire College and arranged it so that students could work at Belchertown as a part of fulfilling their course requirement and simultaneously secure credit. Presently, these students come out two nights a week to teach law at the School. Ms. Gerritson contends this is needed because the mentally-retarded are often the victims of employers who do not adhere to the minimal wage law.

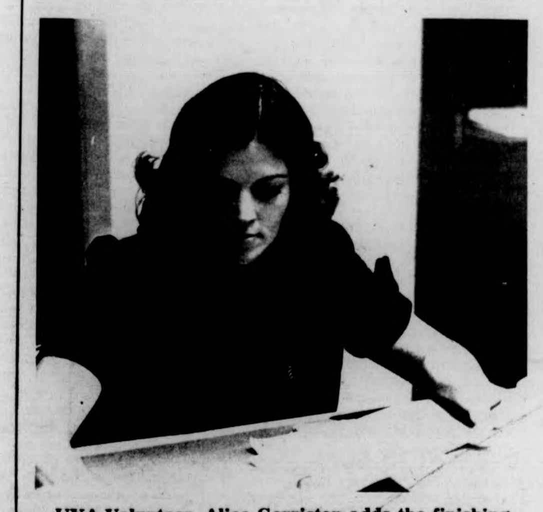
Concerning her hopes for the overall program made available to adult residents and adolescents at BSS, Ms. Gerritson said that, "Eventually I would like to see it expand to reach all adult residents at Belchertown State School and the community." She expressed the hope of combining a vocational workshop with the currently established program where the residents could learn skills to use in the community.

Alice Gerritson has worked with the mentally retarded for nearly ten of her twenty-five years. At 15 years of age, she was a playground supervisor for the retarded, a job she kept for several years. Following that experience, Ms. Gerritson was an assistant at Fernald School and she also taught the mentally retarded in Japan in a summer school program.

Her future plans include going to graduate school to do doctoral work in preparation for mass planning (vocational and educational) and curriculum changes in teaching the mentally retarded members of society, and later, working in some administrative capacity in this area.

The institutionalization potential of Ms. Gerritson's project appears very positive at this juncture, and funds are currently available for a state employee position as assistant to the senior supervisor of education at Belchertown State School. Ms. Gerritson will train the person when he or she is appointed to this position.

Alice Gerritson is from Dedham, Massachusetts. She is the wife of a student here at UMass and the mother of a 16 month old daughter.



UYA Volunteer, Alice Gerriston adds the finishing touches to some office work following her teaching of night school for mentally retarded adults of Belchertown State School.

THE CENTER FOR RACIAL UNDERSTANDING is endeavoring to develop a new vehicle for dealing with racial injustices here at UMass, Amherst. Its agenda consists simply of "seek and destroy" methodology. In other words, they are interested in moving mass consciousness from an ideological, conceptualizing phenomenon to a more pragmatic, crystalized, realistic posture for effectively combatting racism when and where it is seen and on many different fronts.

The Center views UMass as indicative of most of America where white people dominate the power structure and white values and standards are pervasive throughout the institutions. They suggest that white people begin working with themselves to understand the dynamics of racism. For this purpose, the Center offers 3 credit Spring courses which include LUMPEN ECONOMICS; DYNAMICS OF WHITE RACISM; BLACK ETHNOCENTRISMS; BLACK WOMEN: YESTERDAY & TODAY; ANTI-SLAVERY LITERATURE OF 19TH CENTURY. Registration for these courses will be at Southwest's John Adams Lobby. For Further information on course offerings, workshop designs, literature, films, seminars, etc., call Ken Hale (Director) between 10 and 5, Mon.-Fri.

EVERYWOMAN'S UNIVERSITY

priority — that of public transportation. On a national level, such national volunteer service programs as VISTA, SCORE, ACE, Foster Grandparents, and ACTION may be affected by the "new federalism."

Other Conference presentors included John Dalton, Director of the State Office of Municipal Planning and Management, Dept. of Community Affairs in Boston; Monica Fairbairn, Housing Planner for Franklin County Social Planning Project; Gloria Parker, Resource Parent of Hampshire County Association for the Mentally Retarded in Northampton; David Moriarty, Coordinator of Community Services for Adults in Holyoke-Chicopee Area Mental Health Center; Attorney John Bush, Northern Worcester County Legal Services; Eric Person, Federal Coordinator based in Chicopee; Albert Bogdan, Executive Director of the Urban Coalition in Pittsfield; Jerry Hayes, Director of Holyoke Model Cities; Alan Lawson, Assistant Director of UMass-Amherst Department of Public Safety; Hank Shafran, Public Relations Officer of the Governor's Committee on Criminal Justice; Professor Solomon Barkin, UMass-Amherst Economics Department; Nikolai Savenko, Assistant to the Mayor in Springfield; Byrd Jones, UMass-Amherst School of Education; and John Saloma, UMass President's Advisor for Intern Programs.

An attendant of the UYA Revenue Sharing Conference, Mr. Robert Platner, an Associate Professor of the School of Business Administration (UMass), and admittedly impressed by the presentations and workshops, stated that, "The program format and the quality of the speakers, including their backgrounds and how they complemented each other in terms of their various level views of the subject of revenue sharing, made for a very interesting and informative conference."

John Ford and Albert Rosenberg discuss the pros and cons of general revenue sharing at the UYA Conference.

Chicago's Black Community Has Its Own Vehicle For Consumer Protection

In a room of the New Covenant Gospel Tabernacle Church and in the center of the black community in Chicago, one of the most productive agencies in Chicago is functioning to serve the black and oppressed communities of Chicago. Conceived by its current director, Mr. Silas Brown, in 1957, the Community Thrift Club, Inc. was formulated in 1964.

Silas Brown and the UYA Volunteers who work in CTC, Inc., a consumer protection agency, have no limits to the complaints they register on behalf of consumers who have been abused or deceived. In a massive file kept in the CTC's Headquarters, Mr. Brown showed members of the UYA staff of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst the scope of complaints that his office receives from the local and many times, low-income residents of the community. Among the types of businesses against which consumers have filed complaints are food chains, contractors, auto dealers, furniture stores, insurance companies, bakeries, and real estate businesses.

The CTC Headquarters is characterized by numerous visual aids including posted surveys, charts, demonstrations — all designed to facilitate the education of the consumer. The Headquarters also has in its possession documents specifying the organization and operation of Chicago's city government as well as big corporate structures and businesses. Mr. Brown stated that the education of the consumer was necessary because "Consumers are unorganized and very poorly informed compared to the scientific organization and operation of business, industry and labor unions."

With the emphasis of CTC being on consumer education, many of the charts in the organization's Headquarters are food charts for the purposes of informing the consumer about how to shop and how to perceive deceptive packaging and poor cuts of meat. Mr. Brown spoke of how many food stores in Chicago inject water in meat cuts in order to add extra weight to the meat, or color the meat to prevent detection of meat decomposition.

The UYA Volunteers who work within CTC, better known as "Brown's Raiders," are engaged in the inspection of grocery stores, price comparison surveys and visiting courts where fraud cases are heard. Mr. Brown and his Volunteers have been instrumental in closing down some of the community's merchants who exploit the consumer by deception and abuse.

The surveys of "Brown's Raiders" have uncovered as much as a 71 cent difference in prices for the same cuts of meat within one community and have found as much as a 69 cent difference in prices for a particular product in a food chain.

The extensive and intensive work of "Brown's Raiders" or the Volunteers of CTC Inc. has resulted in the current hospitalization of one of the UYA Volunteers who was pursuing his work as a consumer protection advocate at the displeasure of local merchants. Mr. Brown said that his agency has received threats and bomb scares due to the nature and thoroughness of their work.

The threats have not stopped Mr. Brown and his Volunteers who are currently looking for a vehicle to train people on a mass scale. Mr. Brown said that formerly the agency used to have "shows" where heavy information was presented in order to "blow minds", but that now the emphasis of the agency's education of the consumer is on seminars in order that the people may retain the information provided them.

Mr. Silas Brown, a soft-spoken and amiable person whose demeanor, however, demands attention and respect told the UYA-UMASS staff that the slogan of CTC, Inc. was "Operation Bootstrap." By that, he explained, the focus of his agency in its education of the consumers is that the people become self-reliant consumers.

The UYA staff of the University of Massachusetts ended their visit with the Community Thrift Club, Inc. with their being given a consumer quiz by Mr. Brown. Only the Director, Dr. Ruth Burgin, made a passing score.

..Professor Charles Schottland answers questions from UYA Volunteers following his keynote address at the UYA Revenue SHaring Conference.

History In The Making: The Watergate Events

Rosemary Woods became another cast-off Nixon supporter.

Agnew resigned rather than face the courts for his shady dealings. And we got a new one.

Nixon finally gave up his tapes via Charles Wright, his lawyer.

Special Prosecutor Archibald Cox was "fired" and became a national hero along with Elliot Richardson.

CAR POOL

One significant way that members of the University Community can contribute to the conservation of energy is through the formation of car pools. The Commuter Assembly, in cooperation with other concerned University agencies, is sponsoring the development of a computerized car pool program on a pilot basis for the Spring Semester, with plans for an expanded system beginning in September 1974.

In order to facilitate car-pooling, the Parking Office has offered to assist by:

1. Informing all new registrants into the parking system of the advantages of car pooling, and assisting them in completing their registration applications; and,
2. Eliminating the $2.00 charge for a decal change for those people already registered who now wish to form a car pool.

For the coming semester, the Commuter Assembly and Parking Office will collect, process and make available through computer printouts a list of people registered in the parking system who indicated a willingness to join or form a car pool. This list will be sorted by city or town, and formatted to show street address first. Such a format is designed to make it as easy as possible for those interested in forming or joining a car pool to use the list to find others within a reasonable distance. Obviously, the level of service that this project can provide is wholly dependent upon the cooperation of members of the University community in supplying the necessary information. If you are interested in forming or joining a car pool, please fill out the form below, and return it as directed. An additional opportunity to participate in this "car pool bank" will be offered during registration in January.

PUBLIC TRANSPORTATION

A special sub-committee of the Amherst Public Transportation Committee will meet for the first time next Monday at 7:30 p.m. in the Town Planner's Office in Town Hall.

The sub-committee, formed last week, is responsible for publicizing a proposed public hearing next February on the feasibility of a townwide system of public mass transit. The sub-committee will also solicit the views of various public officials and town and college groups concerning the level of need for an expanded system of mass transit.

Individuals or groups wishing to offer their views at the February hearing are urged to contact sub-committee member Kenneth Mosakowski at 253-7768, prior to Monday's meeting.

The meeting is open to the public.

"What's The Story?"

About A Bunch Of Stuff

This is my last column — for the semester. When I first started writing "What's the Story" I had two goals in mind. First, I like to write. Second, working in the Ombudsman Office I talked with people every day. The one thing that these people have in common is that they all have problems or questions and don't know where to go for relief. Some of the problems are complex and need to be dealt with in the Ombudsman Office. But often, all people need is a simple answer or the name of a person who can help them. It seems inevitable that in a school this size not every one can know where to go or who to turn to when channels are clogged. But it also seemed senseless that people walked around complaining or feeling confused when there were answers to their questions or help for their problems.

It's been very satisfying to me when students, staff, and administrators have come up to me and mentioned that they read my column and feel that I am performing a necessary service for the University community. While I hope that people will continue to give me questions for my column, I also hope that people have become aware that there are answers, and those answers aren't all that hard to get...often only a phone call away.

Question: Is it true that food is recycled in the dining commons?

Answer: Art Warren, Assistant Director of University Food Services, prefers to use the term "utilization of leftovers" instead of recycled. Of course, this doesn't mean that food put on a person's plate and not eaten will be re-served. It does mean that when a quantity of food is prepared and not used up, it may be served at another meal. For example, the portion of turkey you ate at last night's meal was part of 1800 pounds of turkey originally prepared. Now if that 1800 pounds is not totally consumed, you may be eating a turkey cold plate for lunch today.

Question: Why are the rolling paper machines always empty when you need them the most?

Answer: It could be a plan to keep people from smoking. But most likely the person in charge of filling the machine wasn't aware that it was empty. If this happens to you again you can either carry a pipe around with you or tell Dick Davies, whose office is next to the Information Desk at the Campus Center. If he isn't in, leave a message at the Information Desk.

Question: The University Library closes at 10:00 p.m. on Saturday night. I'd like to know if there is any quiet library or place to study on campus that is open later than 10:00 p.m.?

Answer: I spoke with someone at the library and found out that no libraries on campus are open after 10:00 p.m. on Saturdays. During final period, however, the library will extend its normal hours. The main library will be open from 8:00 a.m. on Thursday Dec. 13 until Saturday midnight, Dec. 15, and then from 9:00 a.m. Sunday, Dec. 16 until Thursday midnight, Dec. 20. On Saturday, Dec. 22 the library will operate from 8:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. and will be closed all day Sunday, Dec. 23. During the extended hours (midnight to 8:00 a.m. the next morning) only floors two to six will be open for studying.

While this will be helpful to you during final period, I have two other suggestions for the rest of the year. You might check out the libraries of other colleges in the area to see if they have longer hours on Saturday nights. If transportation is a problem, your second alternative might be to talk with your resident director and find out if there is some room in your dorm that might be accessable to you. Often dorms have study lounges or rooms that are not in use that might provide the quiet atmosphere you need to study.

Question: Why aren't there busses going to Riverglade and Brittany Manor? Let's get it on.

Answer: I spoke with Ken Temple at the Transit Operations and he was very encouraging that there would be service to South Amherst by hopefully next semester. The bus service would be minimal, however, comparable to the service now offered to Belchertown and South Deerfield.

Ken said that Transit Operations is in favor of adding this new bus route, and did, in fact, recognize the need for it. He seems to feel that the problem lies in other areas. One difficulty is that Holyoke Transit Service feels that free busses from UMass will hurt their business which covers some of the same route, thus causing them to lay off some workers. If this did happen, the Federal Government could issue a Cease and Desist Order to stop UMass service. A second problem that Ken is aware of is a law which prohibits free busses to interfere on a route where other busses charge customers. This could be avoided by not having UMass busses stop on Route 9.

When the grant was first received for UMass busses, there was not a large concentration of the population in South Amherst and there was also a potential zoning law to prohibit further apartment building in that area. Allocations for bus service were made with these considerations in mind, so now it becomes a matter of trying to change the minds of people who decide which areas will be serviced. Ken's suggestion for students interested in this matter was to speak with their Student Senator, because the Senate will eventually have to vote on the allocation.

Question: I have a sticker for lot 27. When I come in at night it is usually filled so I am forced to park in lot 44. Lot 44 is closed for overnight parking when it has snowed in order to facilitate snow removal. My question is — where can I park this winter without being ticketed or towed if 27 is filled and 44 can't be used?

Answer: According to Bill Lambert, Director of Transportation and Parking, the lots which have been designated as snow removal lots, and therefore, prohibit overnight parking, are 26, 31, 34, 35, 40, 62, 63, 65, 66 and 71. Originally lots 25, 33, 44, and 46 were included on this list, which has since been revised to accommodate students who had to be assigned these lots. When the parking registration packets went out at the end of the summer, a paragraph was included that advised students not to sign up for certain lots because they would be designated for snow removal. These lots were felt to be used by students who were commuters, and would therefore, remove their cars at night anyway, and not by on-campus residents. Because of the new system, there is no definite way to know what the status of the person assigned to every lot is. Bill suggested that if there are on campus residents assigned to snow removal lots, they try to transfer to another lot, if space is available.

"What's the Story" is a regular feature in Wednesday's Collegian. I will be looking into various aspects of the University system that may be of concern to or need clarification for the University community. I will also answer any questions or problems that people are having within the University system. So if you are having a hard time finding the answer to your question, write it down on a piece of paper and put it in the "What's the Story?" box outside the Campus Center Store, put it through Campus Mail to box 6, Campus Center, or bring it to the Ombudsman Office, room 919, Campus Center.

Debbie Bernstein is Student Assistant to the Ombudsman.

HEART FUND WALK

A 12-mile walk for the Heart Fund, a used book sale, the November Blood Drive — sound familiar? If it does, then you've had some contact with us. We're the National Service Sorority, Gamma Sigma Sigma.

The 29 sisters of the UMass chapter ammassed 1500 service hours this semester in projects involving both the campus and the community which earned us the award for Outstanding New England Chapter. The word "service" describes our ideals and activities. This spirit of helping others has led us to Belchertown State School, area nursing homes, and Our Lady of Providence Home for Children.

Service also means working with our brothers in Alpha Phi Omega, the National Service Fraternity. But Gamma Sig doesn't only mean service. It means getting together every week to play intramural sports, having a sisterhood dinner or a party with APO. Most of all, Gamma Sig means working with friends to help other people.

Black Feminist Speaks In Final DVP Lecture

By DEAN TUCKER

"I promise you now that the Black Feminist Women will leave their print of their hand on the face of America." Attorney Florynce Kennedy told a group of one-hundred fifty people in the Campus Center Auditorium last night. Ms. Kennedy was the last of this semesters DVP presentations.

In her hour long talk Ms. Kennedy defined the separatist attitudes of black women from the white feminist movement that she claims is a middle class institution today. "Everybody is somebody's nigger," she claimed using the term to account for all people oppressed, "but the black woman is everybody's nigger."

The black woman has been oppressed by many things she claimed, starting with their rape by white slaveowners and the mistreatment of black husbands who had left them because they could not support families anymore. She feels that black women are conditioned to need the nuclear family in their lives because they have never had it.

This thinking separates black feminists from white feminists who are now questioning the nuclear family as a social group.

Aiming criticisms of socioligists, newsmen, the Nixon Administration, white men, black men and the Pentagon with a tongue sharpened on a wetstone of street talk and irony Ms. Kennedy hammered home the point that if the black women are to be truly liberated she will have to reject all the toutings of these groups and define herself as an individual with particular needs.

She claimed that certain groups of black women have already divorced themselves from the institutions that will let them free themselves only as fast as the institutions allow. Citing groups of prostitutes that have organized and rebelling wives as harbingers of what black woman can do when they reject the controlling institutes she claimed that progress was being made.

"Everybody becomes somebody elses nigger" said Ms. Kennedy, and then said that "once someone is a nigger they make a nigger of someone else."

The cycle could only be broken by black women through their own movement separate from that which creates it and impedes its motion towards freedom she said.

You may not believe it, but the Christmas spirit is on campus. Walking around the grounds yesterday, I found that some areas were more "with it" than others, however. That bastion of apathy, Southwest Residential College, surprisingly, seemed the most conscious of the upcoming holiday. The photo that looks like a stained-glass nativity scene is a sample of the numerous decorations Southwest residents used to cheerup their doors. For Freshmen: You Too Can Skin A Cat

By FRITS GEURTSEN

What's that old saying about the number of ways a cat can be skinned?

A program on campus called Global Survival Freshman Year is supporting that axiom. It is one of several special programs designed to provide an alternate course of studies at UMass.

The program has a two-fold purpose — to improve a student's freshman year experience and to offer a multidisciplinary approach to the various problems confronting our earth today.

The goals of the program, according to its director, Steve Guild, are "to help students see and better understand the relationships between things and to develop skills in reading, analysis, and critical thinking in the area of global survival."

Referring to the 75 students currently enrolled in the program, he said, "They're much further along toward realizing these goals then we expected they would at this point."

Some of the topics to be covered in the program during the course of the year include the energy crisis, war and peace, methodologies for looking at the future, and utopian communities.

Students in the nine credit program attend eight hours of Global Survival classes per week in addition to those courses they are taking outside of the program. The eight hours is divided into ninety-minute modules twice a week, three-hour integrating seminars once a week, and a communications skills module which meets three times a week for 45 minutes. The modules are the actual classes and are usually comprised of 20 students or so. Each module focuses on a specific problem such as the energy crisis or the population problem, and lasts for 4 weeks.

The integrating seminars were designed to allow the students to meet with students from some of the other modules in an attempt to tie everything together. Each of the seminars is led by one of the core faculty and attended by eight to ten students.

By taking the communications skills module for two semesters, students in the program are exempt from taking rhetoric, yet receive credit for it. Although the skills are the same as those taught in the rhetoric program, the content is based entirely on global survival.

Guild described the evolution of the program. He said, "I suppose the idea first came up in a faculty colloquium on global survival. Originally, it was just meant to be a special program for anyone, but then we decided to make it strictly a freshman year program. Myself, Lloyd Adalist, and the core faculty drew up the plans for the program last spring."

The core faculty is comprised of five faculty members representing the departments of botany, engineering, physics, education, and anthropology. In addition to them, there is adjunct faculty and guest lecturers.

When asked if there had been other such programs to model this one after, Guild said, "Yes and no. There are programs around that handle some of the problems that we deal with. However no one else has put all the pieces together the way that we have. Our program was pretty much set up based on the past experiences of our various staff members — experiences at other schools, in the Peace Corps, at an experimental college, and so forth."

"We're very excited about the whole thing. I think it's a very big plus for the students having close contact with their faculty and being able to identify with a smaller group of peers within a large university. I think because of this program the students have developed a different attitude to the University and learning than they would have otherwise. I think they're less likely to fall into the play-the-game syndrome of grades, requirements, and the like," he continued.

Where do the students go from here? "Well, next semester they'll be getting into more independent work. There will still be modules and seminars as well. Each of the students will be engaged in some sort of project having to do with global survival. For instance, one student in interested in doing some research on solar energy, others want to work for WMPIRG, and another wants to write a novelette. We don't know at this point how the students will share what they learn," said Guild.

He continued, "After this program, the students are really all going their own ways — to the various majors, to BDIC, to the school of Ed., and so forth."

"We're only in the developmental stage at this point, but I see big things in store for the program," he concluded.

...Across The Campus

one of the dorms which held door-decorating contests. And, again, in Southwest, residents of a low-rise give a selected view of the campus, from J.Q.A. Tower, an empathic atmosphere, with a holiday greeting. In The Quad, more corridor salutations I found. In Worcester Dining Commons, however, there was just a sad bottle of holly and pine sitting on the ticket lady's table. But surprise, surprise!!! In Whitmore, the spirit overflowed. Everywhere, folks were outgoing and cheerful. I caught one woman at the Records Office under the mistletoe and received what was mine for the asking, a kiss. She swore she'd tell her mother. And further up the hall, a Norfolk Pine was converted into a Christmas tree symbolizing, once and for all, that the spirit of the coming holiday can, and does, reach us through all we have, everyone of us.

Frosh Reactions To GSY Program

By FRITS GUERTSEN

During a period covering the last ten days, I was able to speak to several students in the Global Survival Freshman Year program and find out how they felt about the program. The following is a condensation of the various answers that I received. Most students expressed the sentiments of the below answers:

How do you feel about the program?

I like it — now.

Now?

When I first got into the program it made me very depressed and I was pessimistic about everything. I mean when you find out that the world might not last another thirty years, then you start wondering what the hell you're doing here. It makes a lot more sense to just get up and leave and enjoy the time that's left. It was really a kind of future shock. They gave us too much too soon with not enough to offset it and it was hard to handle. I don't feel that way anymore. There are a lot of problems but there are some solutions too. I think next time they do this program they should make sure that such feelings are dealt with, because they definitely exist.

Are the faculty aware of this problem?

Yes, now. One of the greatest things about the program is the closeness between the faculty and the students. We know them as human beings and not superiors. They're really open to student feedback and listen to our suggestions. It's student ideas that have accounted for a lot of the changes in the program. The faculty is really helpful in finding us other faculty, in handling red tape, and all that.

How important is the program really?

Very important. Both to us as students and to us as people who will be running the world tomorrow. It's unique too. Almost all of the courses taught on this campus are concerned with the past or present. Our program deals with the future and how to live in it. It's not just some science course that we'll take and forget about after the final. It's something that's going to be very important in our lives. It will be relevant. And soon.

It is an experimental program. Do you feel like you're in an experiment at all?

We don't feel like guinea pigs, if that's what you mean. There are a lot of problems, of course, due to its newness and the fact that it has no precedent, but we're ironing most of them out. Otherwise we're really not conscious of its experimental nature.

Ertrel will speak on Thursday, December 13 at 2:30 p.m. in Campus Center Rm. 176 on the subject of "Current Trends in Collective Bargaining in the Steel Industry — Experimental Negotiating Agreements and Expedited Arbitration."

HENRY STEELE COMMAGER

Henry Steele Commager, noted American historian and professor at Amherst College, will speak on "justice and Equal Protection" on Tuesday, December 18 at 7:30 in the Campus Center Auditorium.

REGIONAL CONFERENCES ON INDOCHINA, B-1 BOMBFR

The First Church in Amherst will be the scene of two regional conferences on vital peace issues during the weekend of December 15-16.

Saturday morning, December 15th, peace activists from the six New England states will convene at the church, located at 24 Churchill St., to hear reports by journalist Don Luce and others on the present state of the war in Indochina, techniques on lobbying Congress to cut off American military aid to the Thieu regime in South Vietnam, and other information on the Indochina peace campaign. Registration for the conference will begin promptly at 10 a.m. After the morning presentations and an informal lunch (bring your own bag lunch), the conference will break up into organizational caucuses at 1 p.m. These will be followed at 2:15 p.m. by workshops on the January 27th peace accords, media, Congressional actions, peace education, and related topics. At 5 p.m., the conference will split up into state caucuses to plan regional action on Indochina. A supper will be served at 6:15 p.m. More information is available from Frank Dorman, head of the Western Massachusetts chapter of Clergy and Laity Concerned (telephone 253-5055).

Sunday, December 16th, the focus will shift from Indochina to the national campaign against the B-1 bomber. This second strategy conference will begin at the church at 9 a.m. Sunday. Peace activists from the New England—New York region are expected to attend. The agenda for this conference is more flexible.

THE BLACK HOLE AND THE END OF TIME

John A. Wheeler, world-renowned physicist will talk on "The Black Hole and the End of Time" tonight at 8:00 in Mount Holyoke College's Gamble Auditorium.

Of all the fascinating processes in the sky, none is more intriguing than the collapse of a star to a black hole, with its matter fading from view and only its gravitational attraction remaining behind. Collapse of matter to a black hole is a kind of "experimental model" for the collapse of the universe itself. The final stages of the process in both cases present physics with a paradox out of which decisive new insights are being discovered about the nature of space and time and matter and energy.

RESOURCE NETWORK WORKSHOP

To Resource network, funded by HEW's Office of Drug Education, will sponsor a workshop for student development staff and faculty in which creative, collaborative approaches for the enhancement of student life will be explored.

It will examine the interrelated forces operant on the 1974 UMass student, staff, and faculty, and will develop a variety of positive interventions focused towards the elimination of self-destructive behavior by the individual and self-defeating behavior by the institution.

Specifically, the workshop is committed to: 1) Exploring the community development model as a new approach to student development efforts on the Amherst campus; 2) Exploring personal and institutional self-destructive behavior as expressed in racism, sexism, and alienation; 3) Exploring the emerging needs of the increasingly diverse student population; 4) Exploring non-sexist, non-racist principles as they relate to the management of programs and policies; 5) Exploring a model of reciprocal education in which the various participants — students, staff, and faculty alike — are encouraged to utilize their resources, experiences and skills to educate each other; 6) Exploring creative, growth producing psycho-social environments in residence halls; and 7) Exploring legitimate academic programs which integrate cognitive learning with personal growth.

The two weeks will flow from diagnosis, to exploration of positive alternatives, to action for implementation. The format will include lecturettes, informal discussions, panel reactions, films, workshop support groups, and a variety of informal supportive experiences. Opportunities for special interest concentration (e.g. racism, sexism, drugs), skill development (e.g. decision making techniques, force field analysis, micro counseling, strength training), and personal growth experiences (e.g. role planning, value clarification) will be provided.

The first week will concentrate on an exploration of new conceptual models as related to the stated objectives. The second week will examine the possibilities of operationalizing these concepts through optional task forces and the availability of special interest and skill development modules. Ideally, the end of this two week session will mark the beginning of a second semester's work.

Loans take 4-5 weeks from start to finish. Therefore, applications should be initiated as soon as possible. Information on the loans are the institutional protion of the application are available from the financial aid office — 243 Whitmore Building.

In order to be assured of funds for second semester, students planning on H.E.L.P. Loans should contact their banks before Christmas.

No Records For Christmas

By
Richard M. Howland

The Great and General Court has produced some very special Christmas presents for the younger citizen's of Massachusetts who have experienced the greatest evil effects of the marijuana laws — being convicted of them. Other harmless arrestees are now made happy, to wit:

Chapter 322 of the Acts of 1973 provides that in any criminal case where a defendant has been found not guilty, or no bail has been returned by a grand jury or a court has found no probable cause, said defendant may write to the Commissioner of Probation (Court House, Pemberton Square, Boston 02108) and obtain a form requesting the Commissioner to seal the record of appearance in court and the disposition. The Commissioner must seal the record and cause it to be sealed wherever else it appears and the defendant may thereafter report to any inquiry that there is "no record".

Similarly where the prosecution decides not to prosecute, or the Court dismisses a case, the record may be sealed by order of the court with the same result.

Chapter 533 of the Acts of 1973 provides

(a) that a person found not guilty or for whom a complaint is dismissed or an indictment not prosecuted which involves a violation of the law against possession of drugs shall have the public records of arrest, indictment, conviction, continuance or discharge, sealed and the person need never report it to anyone thereafter;

b) a person entitled to have the record sealed who was convicted of a felony which is now a misdemeanor will be treated as if it was a misdemeanor at the time of conviction and when in doubt it is treated as a misdemeanor; and

c) any record of an offense which is no longer a crime (for instance presence violations in narcotics cases except heroin) shall be eligible for sealing forthwith.

If it applies to you, write to the Commissioner of Probation giving your name and date of birth and requesting the necessary forms.

THEY CALL IT THE CAGE and jammed to the rafters with screaming UMie's it's worth about ten points a game. Latest victim was UConn 79-72, last night.

"Minuteman Murph" guns down UConn

By STEVE DeCOSTA

John Murphy, playing much of the game with four personal fouls, hit on 14 of 20 shots from the field as the Minutemen toppled UConn 79-72 to take the early jump in the YanCon basketball race.

Murphy drew his fourth foul late in the first half but managed to come back to the hardwood after intermission and hit for 18 of his 31 points before fouling out with three minutes left.

Other double-figure scorers for UMass were Al Skinner and Bill Endicott with 13 and Peter Trow, who came off the bench to throw in 12.

But again it was the defense and work off the boards that turned the trick for the Minutemen. Playing the same man-to-man that throttled URI, UMass held the Huskies to 29 points in the first half to take command with a six point lead.

Actually, the lead was never threatened. Murphy hit on four straight buckets at the start of the second half as the Minutemen ran up what was once a 20-point lead.

UMass countered the towering UConn front line with fine positioning and boxing out to grab the edge in rebounding, 41-35.

Skinner, who along with Murphy was the individual rebound leader with nine apiece, also had to overcome some early foul difficulty. He drew his third midway through the first half and his fourth at the same point in the second stanza but stayed on until the verdict was no longer in doubt.

Cal Chapman was the high man for the Huskies with 19 after a torrid first half in which he caged 15 points with drives to the hoop in an effort to disqualify the two UMass big men.

Jimmy Foster poured in 15 for UConn while freshman John Thomas clicked for 11.

The Minutemen trailed only once in the game and that was at the outset as the Huskies ran off the first four points. But UMass then countered with eight straight of their own and was never headed.

The Minutemen are now 4-0 while UConn is mired at the .500 level at 2-2.

Santos does it all as J.V.'s topple Huskies

By STEVE SARACENO

Sophomore guard Billy Santos did everything but collect student I.D.s last night as he led the UMass jayvees to a 67-61 victory over UConn at the Cage.

All the 5'11" backcourt ace did was score 30 points (tops among all scorers), steal the ball time after time, set up numerous baskets with super-smooth ball handling (5 assists), and sink a pressure jump shot with 53 seconds left to put the game out of UConn's reach.

However, Santos wasn't the only player to shine. Arnie Johnson collected 11 points and 11 rebounds, and made several UConn shooters eat a few.

For UConn, long range bomber Bill Harris netted 18 points while his not-so-high jumping teammate Budzinzki accumulated 14 before he fouled out.

The Huskies had an auspicious start as they went four and a half minutes into the game without scoring. Hopes of a Minuteman shutout were dashed when Harris sank two foul shots, but Connecticut still went almost 7 minutes without sinking a field goal.

The junior Minutemen had control most of the slow moving game. They led 28-26 at the half and their lead fluctuated from 3 to 8 points throughout the second half.

Mistakes, in the form of turnovers and personal fouls, were as abundant as cars at a traffic jam, and served to draw out the contest to nearly two hours. There was a total of 55 fouls between the two teams, and the squads managed 53 turnovers.

Although UMass had more of those 108 mistakes than UConn, they made up for it by shooting an even 50 per cent from the floor while the Huskies shot a not-so-husky 36.1. The shooting was a definite asset for UMass.

So was Billy Santos.

WHEN HE WAS IN A PINCH, HE DIDN'T FLINCH — that's jumpin' John Murphy whose timely accuracy at strategic moments kept Jack Leaman's winning streak alive.

Kelley leaving UMass

Marty Kelley, ex-sport columnist on the UMass Daily Collegian has retired.

The announcement came in a small, private ceremony at the "Collegian Office yesterday. "Mr. Sport" has conquered every sports media on the UMass Campus — radio, newspaper and cable t.v. He is scheduled to begin work this January at a Worcester radio station; his employment part of an internship granted by the Outreach program. For his work, Kelley will receive academic credit, but no financial remuneration.

Kelley had one semester left on a four year contract.

Mermen swamp Worcester Poly

By B. ZULU

While the basketball team fought off UConn, the swim team had its' fins full warding off a strong WPI team last night.

UMass accumulated 7 out of the 13 possible firsts, 5 out of 10 seconds, and 5 out of 10 thirds. Taking the top spot again was Ben Crooker, the outstanding freshman distance freestyler from Amherst. Crooker won both the 1000 and 500 yard freestyle events. Co-Captain Dick Blaisdell also stood out with a first in the 50 yard freestyle and a second in the 100 yard freestyle missing 1st place by only a fraction of a second.

Undefeated freshman Dave Boucher again proved tops in the 200 yard breaststroke coming close to breaking the school record he set last week. Jeff Crouse won the 1 meter diving, edging out up and coming Earl McAllister by only 5 points.

The meet was close all the way until UMass took the lead as Duncan Lomas won his 200 I.M. event, about half way through the meet. UMass did not fall behind after thâ, but the outcome of the meet did come down to the last relay. The score stood UMass 56, WPI 50, and the pressure was on the relay to win. The team of Hebert, Blaisdell, Ron Boucher and Lomas edged out WPI as the fans went wild.

Other important seconds came from Spencer Sullivan in the 1000 Freestyle, Ron Boucher in the 200 freestyle, Joe Hebert in the 200 butterfly, Scott McNab in 200 backstroke, and Earle McAllister in the 3 meter diving.

Bill Ballou

Where was the defense?

By BILL BALLOU

(Ed note: This is what happens when a hockey writer in his first visit ever to the Cage in four years at UMass, is assigned to cover a basketball game.)

Coach Jack Leaman, was a happy, no make that thrilled, man last night as his team beat chief Yankee Conference rival Connecticut 79-72 at the Cage.

But it appears from where this reporter sat that Leaman needs to do a lot of work on his team's defense.

The Minutemen gave up 72 goals, believe it or not, and the only thing that saved them from humiliation was that UConn gave up an even more amazing 79.

You could probably fault the goaltenders, if you could find out who they were. At various times Al Skinner or John Murphy looked like they were guarding the UMass net, but at other times were nowhere to be found.

And Murphy certainly didn't play like a goalie offensively, as he scored 31 (that's right 31) goals singlehandedly. Skinner scored 13 himself, but his main value was in his fine handhandling and his good work in collecting rebounds that could have been potentially tapped in for more goals.

There was so much scoring, in fact, that instead of raising their arms when they scored, the players would raise their arms when penalized, evidently saving energy, since they scored more than they were penalized.

And if it wasn't for the two horrendous officials, there probably wouldn't have been any penalties. There weren't many good checks thrown and when there were the officials were quick to call a penalty.

Unfortunately when they called penalties, it was either all or nothing. Early in the periods they simply stopped play, let the man stay on the court and awarded the other team the ball. Later on they overcompensated by awarding a penalty shot to the player fouled.

Granted, the penalty shot is the most exciting play in sports, but this was overdone. In 15 years of hockey-watching I'd only seen three, but I saw that many in the space of a minute late in the first period.

Possibly things would have been improved if the officials had taken the proper pre-game precautions. Instead of freezing the ball to prevent it from bouncing too much they let it stay at Cage temperature and the result was an overlyelastic ball that at times was hard to control.

It's also unfortunate that the officials didn't see the offsides that were occurring on almost every play. The crowd certainly didn't mind, for they cheered the loudest when a UMass forward, standing under the UConn basket and obviously offside, received a long pass and scored into the empty net. At least they were consistent in the calls.

However they did pull one royal boner. Connecticut's Cal Chapman was hit as he went in for a goal, and the official raised his hand for a delayed call. Chapman scored anyway, and the official allowed the goal and then gave Chapman a penalty shot instead of waving off the penalty. The result was a hat-trick for Chapman on one play.

But all-in-all, Leaman should be proud of his team's over-all performance. They certainly showed a magnificent offense, despite the fact that a lot of players took shifts a lot longer than two minutes.

And the Minutemen did a fine job killing penalties, even though they were never faced with a short-handed situation. It was undoubtedly a big win for UMass.

One more thing, though, and that's the outrageous thievery that's permitted to go on at the concession stands. Hot dogs cost 50 cents, candy bars 35 cents. At both Norwich and Middlebury this weekend hot dogs were only 35 cents. Now you can't tell me that expenses are 30 per cent more down here, and you can't tell me that UMass hot dogs are 30 per cent better. It seems to be the old case of screwing the customer when you can.

(Staff Photo/Gib Fullerton)

Heavyweight Boxing:

From Frazier vs. Quarry '69...

On June 23, 1969, there were five men upon whom the eyes of the boxing world were focused. One was the Spirit of Boxing Past, one the Spirit of Boxing Future, and the other three were rivaling for the right to be called the King of Boxing Present.

On that day Joe Frazier, the world heavyweight champion, (recognized by only five states) would defend his title against the number one contender, Jerry Quarry.

Frazier, the cruel machine of destruction, had won his recognition as champ and avenged a defeat in the amateurs by destroying behemoth Buster Mathis, an amazingly quick and capable boxer for such a giant. The "other champ", Jimmy Ellis, had gained his version of the title by winning an elimination tournament sponsored by the World Boxing Association to find a successor to dethroned champion Muhammed Ali.

But at this time Ellis was inactive, seemingly avoiding a showdown with Frazier. Quarry was a question mark. Having ko'd favorite Thad Spencer and decisioned two-time champ Floyd Patterson in the WBA tournament, he fought Ellis a dull fifteen rounds in the finals, losing a close decision. Quarry claimed to have had a back injury during the fight and his performance attested to it. He failed to land any of the vicious hooks which had ko'd Spencer and decked Patterson twice.

But in his next big fight he knocked Big Buster Mathis out of prominence for good, landing his hooks and putting him down. Now he had another shot at another version of the title. A flamboyant figure from a few years back loomed over the entire picture.

Muhammed Ali, undefeated in the professional ring, still claimed to be "The Greatest" and many felt that he could easily whip any of these various champs and contenders. But Ali was entangled in our judiciary system and whether he would ever return to the ring was at present an unanswerable question.

There was one more pugilist receiving the fans' attention that day. Flag waving George Foreman, the powerful 1968 Olympic Champ, was making his pro debut as a preliminary to the Frazier-Quarry championship bout. Many followers of boxing knew that young Foreman had the potential to win the Big One someday. Right now he was a rookie with his eyes open and a lot of respect for the men fighting the main event.

On that day Jerry Quarry's strategy was bad. As he failed to slug with Ellis, a boxer, he chose not to box Frazier, a slugger. In violating boxing's number one axiom, Quarry was tko'd after seven rounds of toe-to-toe slugging.

George Foreman looked green in his pro debut, ko'ing one Don Waldhelm. After being destroyed by Frazier the following February, Jimmy Ellis never won big again. He was replaced as a top contender by Earnie Shavers, who knocked him out in the first round a few months ago.

And in 1970 Muhammed Ali made a comeback scoring a third round tko (cut eye) over Jerry Quarry, who was once again the number one contender as a result of ko'ing Mac Foster (who was the top contender with twenty-four ko's in as many fights.

Ali then knocked out Oscar Bonavena in the fifteenth round, and on March 8, 1971, put his pride on the line against frustrated champ Joe Frazier, whose claim to the title was still being doubted since he had not yet fought dethroned Ali.

Frazier was a slight favorite going in the Battle of the Century between two undefeated champions, and he won, surprisingly by decision, fracturing Ali's jaw and sending him to the canvas in the process. Ali has since won a number of bouts and also lost one, to strongman Ken Norton, this time receiving a broken jaw, as well as beating Norton in the rematch.

Muhammed Ali and Joe Frazier: They have a reunion in February.

...Right Up To 1974

Today four of the five along with Shavers and Norton remain as the world's top heavyweights. George Foreman got his chance and massacred Joe Frazier in two rounds, knocking him down six times and winning the title. He made one token defense of his title ko'ing Puerto Rico's Joe "King" Roman in two minutes, and then went into hiding.

Frazier remains in the top five, and awaits a rematch with Foreman. He has decisioned British Champ Joe Bugner since losing the title, but his comeback may be seriously affected by the death of his manager and close friend, Yancey Durham, who passed away late this summer.

Madison Square Garden, the center of boxing, is putting on a Frazier-Ali rematch in February. Ken Norton would like a title shot or even another rematch with Ali. And December 14 Jerry Quarry and Earnie Shavers meet at the Garden, supposedly as an elimination for a title shot.

Foreman has rejected many offers for fights, particularly a fight with Quarry, which Garden matchmaker Teddy Brenner has offered to Big George with a flat guarantee of $1 million.

This evasion of Quarry in particular could have something to do with Jerry's "new" self. Disgusted with his performance in his second loss to Ali and beset with personal problems, Quarry quit the ring.

He divorced his wife, got a new manager and made a comeback last January. Since then he has ko'd Randy Nuemann in seven, demolished James J. Woody and Tony Doyle in two and four rounds respectively, and in his biggest victory, whipped previously unbeaten favorite Ron Lyle over the twelve round route.

Whatever the case, the proper authorities should use their influence to urge Foreman to defend. An inactive Heavyweight Champion is not a champion.

As far as Quarry-Shavers is concerned, it should be a hell of a fight. Jerry is a banger with a great left hook and superb counterpuncher. Shavers is a slugger with great power. He will come after Quarry and land some punches, while Quarry is countering and landing as well.

Quarry rarely goes down, but Shavers was staggered in that first round by Ellis, who was never considered powerful. Jerry has also fought opponents of muchhigher caliber than has Earnie, and when at his best, is one of the best.

The bout will make or break Shavers, and for the reasons given (and a bit of personal bias), I think a Quarry victory will prevail, probably a knockout if Shavers comes to Quarry the way he has come to each of the men on his victim list. Due to the title implications and the style clash between Quarry and Shavers, it should be a hell of a fight.

It was a frustrating year for the UMass football team...

FRUSTRATION — Coach Dick MacPherson didn't know what to make of his team's disappointing 6-5 season. They were kicked all over the field at Boston College and UConn. But on the brighter side, wide receiver, Tim Berra, had a fine season and was named to the coaches All-New England team.

How you express yourself depends upon your camera.

Today almost everybody is getting into photography. And it's not the snapshot variety. People are doing sports stories, nature stories, portraits—you may even have a friend who's doing photographs through a microscope. Or a telescope.

You also know that everybody has his own idea about which camera is best. That's why it's important for you to know about the Canon F-1. Because it's the system camera that's fast becoming the favorite of professionals. And the new status symbol among photography enthusiasts.

The whole F-1 system includes over 40 lenses and 200 accessories. It's capable of doing virtually everything in photography. So whatever idea you have for a picture, the F-1 has the equipment to make sure you get it.

Because it was conceived from the beginning as a system, it works as a system. All the elements are quickly and easily interchangeable. No matter which lens or accessory you use with the F-1 body you won't have the feeling that something has been "tacked on."

What's more the F-1 is comfortable to handle. Years of research went into the design of the F-1 body and placement of controls so your fingers fall naturally into place. You'll appreciate this comfort when you're on assignment. It's also an important thing to keep in mind if you're investing in a camera you plan to keep a long time.

Canon has been in the optics industry over 37 years. We make microscope equipment, amateur and professional movie cameras and TV lenses. It's this experience that helps make our still cameras the best selling cameras in Japan. In America, it's just a matter of time.

See your dealer for more information. He'll also show you Canon's other SLR cameras, like the FTb and TLb. Both of which offer accurate metering, easy film loading, a wide range of lenses and the same standard of engineering that goes into the F-1.

The 1973 season was a frustrating one for the UMass soccer team. Playing under the direction of Al Rufe, their third coach in three years, they finished with a 6-3-1 record, but failed to win conference or New England honors. Tom Coburn (above left), did win the Yankee Conference scoring title.

One cannot help but feel that with a well organized program, UMass soccer fortunes could soar. With the graduation of such key seniors as Kurt Syer (left), UMass will look to performers like goalie Carl Vercollone, (above) to lead them back to conference contention.

(Staff Photos-Kevin Erkkila, Joe Martins)

For Ken O'Brien's Cross-country team, the road to the Nationals was long and exhausting, but when it was over, they could look back on the most successful season in their history.

UMass has always boasted a strong cross-country team, but it took a new style of running and a new assistant coach to make UMass the best in New England.

By SYDNEY OMARR

Taurus can be bullheaded but also can be moved to tears–these natives are stubborn but sentimental. They tend to go to extremes–either they are very much aware of physical conditioning or they break all the rules. There seldom is middle ground where Taurus is concerned.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Emphasis is on a relationship that intensifies. This is decision time. Postponement or delay does not work. Make up your mind. Member of opposite sex could be prominently featured. Choice between intrigue or security is up to you.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your ability to make what appears finished come back to life is highlighted. Older individuals make concessions. You gain praise from established quarters. Means you will receive boost from those who have experience and appreciate your unique talents.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Better relations with neighbors indicated. Relatives, visits, short trips also are in picture. You will be active, teaching and learning. Rise above any tendency to be petty, especially where family is involved. Stick to principles and you won't go wrong.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Go in many directions without going in circles. Means get antenna out–get pulse of public. Experiment without scattering your forces. Money is involved. Popularity enables you now to make friends–and increase financial potential.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Lunar cycle is such that your showmanship, personality and appearance combine to make you a winner. Timing is sharp. Judgement is on target. Now you can make new starts in new directions. Stress originality and independence.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Ask questions. Those who talk about need for discretion indeed may have something to hide. Get facts on table. Use natural ability to analyze, be selective enough to discard rumors, to grab on to facts. Gemini, Pisces persons may be involved.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You will make arrangements with friends. These could include party and invitations and vacation. The way you live becomes more important than in recent past. You beautify surroundings. You also appreciate music and the arts to a greater extent. It's that kind of day!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Co-operate in civic project. Be willing to assume responsibility. Set example. Stand tall. You may find yourself selected as subject of newspaper interview, radio or television appearance. Have faith. Expand ego! SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Emphasize ability to communicate, to bridge language barriers. Get organized. Take stock and inventory. Get facts about who pays how much and to whom. Don't play games. You are worth plenty and let others be aware of it.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Now you can find where you stand–emotionally and professionally. More persons become aware of your capabilities, potential. Aries, Libra individuals are likely to be in picture. Special account comes to your attention. Plug money loophole.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Maintain low profile. See with new insight but don't insist, push or chide. Listen and learn. Establish strong base of operations. But try not to arouse envy. Move ahead without shattering precedent. You may be walking on eggs but you do take steps forward.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Study Aquarius message for valid hints. Go slow without stopping. Means take precautions without being timid. You have plenty in your favor–but some co-workers, associates could be envious. Know it and protect self in clinches.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you love travel, reading. You also have been known to raid the refrigerator. You have sense of humor, are "curvy" and draw to you persons born under your own sign and Gemini. May and August will be significant months for you in 1974. You will be known to more people, perhaps famous!

Sonics "dump" investigated

NEW YORK (AP) — Commissioner Walter Kennedy of the National Basketball Association said Monday the league's security division is investigating a published report that the Seattle SuperSonics purposely lost a game to the Philadelphia 76ers last season.

Tom Nissalke, the Seattle coach at the time of the Jan. 7, 1973 game, refused "under my attorney's advice" to discuss the alleged dumping.

The investigation was prompted by a story in the current issue of Sports Illustrated magazine written by Bob Brinner, former general manager of the ABA Dallas Chaparrals.

Briner wrote, "When a few SuperSonic players found Nisalke too tough for their hign-salaried style, they boasted — even to referees — that they would lose enough to get him fired. It took, finally, a dumped game against the woebegone Philadelphia 76ers to get rid of Nissalke."

"The charge comes as a complete surprise," Kennedy said Monday. "We will get in touch with Nissalke, Briner, the game officials, everyone concerned. We're looking for unusual patterns of play in the box score and the running account.

"One of the league observers was at the game," Kennedy added. The 76ers, who won only nine games all year, beat Seattle 85-82.

Nissalke, who is now coach of the ABA San Antonio Spurs, refused to comment on the report.

Simpson runs for the record

NEW YORK (AP) — If O.J. Simpson could play 14 games a year against the New England Patriots...

Two is quite enough, thank you.

And 219-yards, that is-were quite enough to give Simpson a clear shot a perhaps breaking Jim Brown's greatest National Football League record.

Simpson's performance in the Buffalo Bills' 37-13 walloping of Nea ZHGLAND LAST Sunday was more than enough to earn him the selection-for an unprecedented third time in one season-as the Associated Press Offensive Player of the Week.

It didn't look as if he'd have anything resembleing a shot at a record by halftime. He'd managed just 43 yards and was fighting a snow-covered field. "My feet were cold," he said. "It was tough keeping warm and the snow hindered me turning the corners."

The snow didn't mean a thing the rest of the way, though. In the third quarter, he turned the corner and blazed 72 yards on one play and later tacked on runs of 24, 25 and 28 yards.

Simpson's odyssey began 13 weeks ago against the Patriots, when he stampeded into the record books with a 250-yard day. Immediately, the question arose: can he break Brown's record of 1,863 yards in a season?

No way, the skeptics said.

O.J. wasn't listening. In fact, he was trying very hard not to think about the record. "If it comes, it comes," he said. "It'd be nice to have — but if we don't get into the playoffs, it won't mean that much."

By the fourth week of the season, though, when he rushed for 171 yards against Philadelphia for his second AP Offensive Player selection, nobody would let him forget about the record.

Reggie McKenzie, Buffalo's outstanding and outspoken guard, was the chief cheerleader. "Just run it my way," he'd say, "and I'll open it up for O.J."

LETTERS:

To all you Moe fans:

As an active Distinguished Visitors Program Committee member I have been following the Collegian's seemingly one sided coverage of the Moe Howard situation. I would like to express my personal feelings about this matter.

Many people seem to believe this is the first time Mr. Howard has been written to. Two summers ago a letter was sent to him by the summer committee and we received this letter back marked "not deliverable". It was at this time a Collegian staff member (Bill Manburg) took the idea and tried to get some feedback. Since we have to go through more red tape than most people realize to contact, schedule, and contract a speaker (some rooms like the SUB are booked almost 9 months in advance) we decided to look into this semester as a possibility. This summer Barbara Voorhees contacted Moe on her own in the name of D.V.P. which I think was a good idea. My opinion of the Committee's reaction differs from Barbara's. I honestly wondered if the UMass community would want us to pay that amount of money. At that particular time we had no great amount of feedback from the students. I believe that was my reason for hesitating. Contrary to the Collegian's coverage the Committee was very impressed with the student support. (We stated so quite a few times at the meeting so many Moe and anti-Moe people attended and we even thanked them for coming but I guess that is not what the reporter came to hear.) These people failed to realize that the committee just cannot vote yes or no to a particular program. We first must have a suitable place for the presentation, (how many Moe fans can fit into Mahar?) terms for a legal contract must be agreed upon and a date agreeable to both parties must be established.

I must admit there are some Committee members and some students who believe $1500.00 can be used differently but I think I can safely say that a program stirring up this much interest should not be denied the student body who so wholeheartedly support it. This difference makes the Committee a functioning one. If we all had similar viewpoints things would get mighty boring. Some members were upset by the fact that only a few hundred people show up for our lectures on amnesty, prison reform, and Viet Nam and yet we get thousands of signatures on petitions to bring Moe. I do not believe it is up to us to make a value judgement on where the students heads are at.

My point is this. D.V.P. is a student run organization run to serve the students at UMass as effectively and as satisfactorily as we can. Please don't get down on us without hearing out both sides of the story. We receive fewer and fewer applications for membership every year. As with so many other Committees on Campus we need the energy you spend on criticizing to help us better serve you.

My last comment (and if you've made it this far I thank you) is that these opinions I have expressed here are mine. I cannot in every case speak for the entire Committee. I had hoped, as I read Barbara's article in Poor Richard's, that she would have implied that her comments about the Committee were her interpretations of what has been happening. I hope this is how you will take what I have said here.

If you have any questions or comments please let me know. I'm at 253-9066 or leave a message at 545-0920.

To The Editor:

In the Tuesday, December 11th issue of the Daily Collegian, Mr. Harry Charych, president of the UMass Ski Club, authored an editorial espousing the benefits to be derived from a phys. ed. program at Berkshire East and deriding the program which has existed between UMass and the Mt. Tom Ski Area, in Holyoke, Mass., for the past ten years. In his article, he also asks that "all students...get the facts on both mountains." However, Mr. Charych, himself; does not have the facts when he states that the ski program at Mt. Tom "has been $40.00 for six 1½ hour lessons." The facts are that Mr. Tom has offered a 1¾ hour lesson with 1 to 1¼ hours of on-slope practice time for a total of 3 hours of contact time.

Mr. Charych, in talks before the ski club and other interested ski groups, has indicated that driving time to Berkshire East is only ten minutes more than to Mt. Tom. In point of fact, the distance from Amherst (Boyden Gymnasium) to Mt. Tom is slightly under 16 miles. The distance to Berkshire East is 38 miles. The editorial also states that the Berkshire East program is available at a lower cost to students. When figured on an hourly basis, Mt. Tom offered, in years previous, eighteen hours of contact time for $2.20 per hr. and Berkshire East twelve hours for $3.15 per hr.

Students, in addition to being price conscious, should also be value conscious. The UMass-Mt. Tom Phys Ed Program has been in existence for ten years under the able direction of Adi Scheidle, Certified American and Austrian Ski Instructor. Through Adi's efforts and the efforts of UMass faculty members, this program has grown to number 500 students. Mt. Tom employs a staff of 65 experienced ski instructors who understand the needs and requirements of the UMass program.

We believe that students should be allowed to make a choice and should be given that chance.

To The Editor:

After incredulously re-reading Mr. Cochrane's anti-Kosofsky letter (only one in what seems to be a continuing series of irrational hate mail levelled at this particular writer) I can only ask him to consider the tone of light parody that underlies all of her columns. But really, flirting with the sanctity of a D.C. mealticket is in no way comparable to the atrocities of Nixon et al. The other possessors of the poisoned pen (the woman who, as an avid supporter of Vaseline, used a Kosofsky column as reason enough to cancel her subscription, and UMie III who managed to be simultaneously vicious and pompous in his scathing epistle) should ask themselves if their impotent rate is all that justified.

Ms. Kosofsky's columns make it alot easier to swallow what the Dining Commons is dishing out.

Fall '73:

By Alvin F. Oickle

That fall semester of 1973 was ending at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst and the people who like to lable everything were trying to get the proper identity for the 14 weeks now past.

The labelers agreed, more thought had to be given to this fall's student body at UMass-Amherst. There had been the terribly apathetic students of the 1950's, and they became, to the perennial observers at least, the long haired activists of the 1960's and then the militants of the 1970's.

But here it was 1973 fading into 1974 and these 22,000 students were neither apathetic nor explosive.

They were just there, said one administrator.

There were just there when the television sets glared through the Watergate hearings' dying days in September.

And they were merely standing agape and aghast in November when Richard M. Nixon tried to scrape up the bits and pieces of his shattered administration.

And they were still spilling into classrooms and overflowing into recreation facilities in December when another tape went negative and Gerald Ford became yet another vice-president of the United Static.

They were just there and they were doing nothing.

No marches, no pennant waving, no screaching and shouting.

The buses to Washington had run out of the gas of inspiration.

The organizers were staring off into space and when someone offered a half-hearted suggestion that something, well, anything, ought to be done, everyone agreed.

And nothing was done.

But, some of the labelers decided, there had to be a reason.

Why, they wanted to know, was this generation of young people any different from any other? Or, perhaps, the question should be: Was it any different?

(All of this, we must agree, is to determine how to classify Fall Semester 1973 at UMass-Amherst. The reader may well decide there is no such need and such readers are excused because they may be right.)

There did seem to be a thin thread in the fabric's pattern. It was interpreted as representing "individualism". It could be a turning point in the whole progress of the student from apathetic to militant to whatever new form the campus life was to take.

The characteristic was not sharply defined. There were, nevertheless, some signs that it was there. There were students, for example, who said, "I am going to disagree and I don't care that I am alone." There was, then, this slightly discernible movement away from the crowd. The student seemed to snuggle into the comfort of the whole while recognizing that he could move away and not lose his sense of confidence.

If accurate, the conclusion was that the Fall Semester 1973 was the beginning of an emerging trend--toward a student who could stand alone.

The paradox lay in that the student, like everyone, was in search of a leader. The student's search was on campus; everyone searched the land.

Where was that person who could make the campus Camelot come true? Who was the leader to restore the national confidence, to quell the national guilt, to return to the individual the sense of dignity strong enough to need no crowd?

Perhaps this generation would, after all, turn out the better person. The Fall Semester 1973 student did study in pursuit of knowledge, some of the professors agreed. The student had a greater sense of community and yet there was no movement toward group action.

The search for leadership might develop instead a success within each search: self-confidence, survival, self-sufficiency.

An administrator shook his head: "I don't know. I'd feel better if there was more action out in the open. I keep thinking something is going to happen and I get worried."

Perhaps, the labelers decided, there was no cause for worry. This could be the turning point; this Fall Semester 1973 may well have been the four months when the first recognition came: that this was the beginning of a new generation of people who could stand alone...in dignity and with confidence.

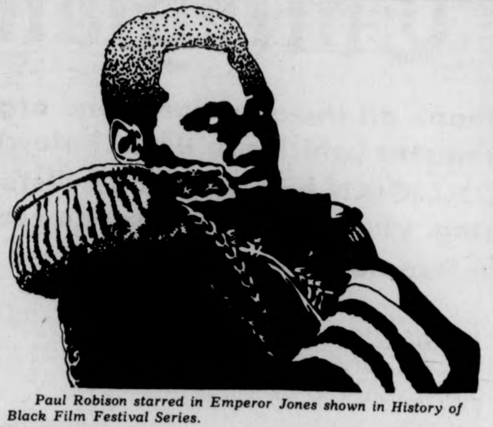
Black Cultural Center/ Review & Preview

by Aishah Raman

One of the major accomplishments this semester of New Africa House's Black Culture Center is the organization of a Steering Committee that is comprised of representatives of most of the Black organizations on campus. The Steering Committee which has representatives from Black Scientists Society, Third World of Central Area, Black Caucus of South West, African Students Association, CCEBS, Upward Bound, Imani, Black Studies, Drum and Black Psychological Association has just ratified its new constitution and should be operating at full strength next semester in its capacity of the policy making body of New Africa House.

In spite of an unrealistically low budget and a change over in administration, the Cultural Center managed to present programs that were unique in their educational and cultural values. These programs could not have been presented without the financial aid of Fine Arts Council and the Campus Program Center. The season started off slowly with a poorly attended Trinidadian Steel Band Concert. This was followed by a first on the campus of UMass — A History of Black Film Festival. The Festival was an entire week of films mostly by independent Black Film makers but included such classics as The St. Louis Blues starring Bessie Smith and Emperor Jones starring Paul Robeson.



Paul Robison starred in Emperor Jones shown in History of Black Film Festival Series.

Black Cultural Center will close the year with a presentation of Aishab Rohman's Lady Day: A Musical Tragedy

Neville Riche director of JuJu Players to do a presentation of Shango De Ima in Bowker: Feb. 10.

From the comments received the most successful films were the most contemporary ones: Let the Church Say Amen Rasta and A Luta Continua. Perhaps even more successful than the films were the students receptivity to the Black Film Art Exhibition featuring the collection of film archivist Charles Griffin. Brother Charles Griffin is indeed a "Historian of the People". An actor, and director, he once served as Paul Robeson's stage manager and has spent most of his life collecting posters photographs and other memoralbilia on Blacks in the film media. His collection included photographs of the film debuts of Paul Robeson, Sammy Davis, Jr. and Sidney Poiter. It documented the cultural exploitation of Blacks by Hollywood through photographs of scenes from the many "Tarzan" type movies.

Unfortunately, because of lack of funds, Griffins' collection is in danger of disintegration. The preservation of Black Cultural History is an integral part of the Center and the coordinator hopes to solicit funds for the preservation of this important record. Gylan Kain, popular actor, poet and lecturer closed the BCC's season with a poetry—rap session in the candle lit atmosphere of Lumumba hut. Free chicken and punch were served to about 50 people.

Next semester activities increase. February is a busy month and will open with a gala reception in the New Africa House Art Gallery on Sunday, February 10 for the opening of the Artists Collective Art Exhibition. Ten visual artists including painters, sculptors and graphics from the Artists Collective based in Hartford, Conn. and founded my musician Jackie MacLean and his wife will exhibit for one month. Following closely, on Feb. 12, the Juju Players an off broadway New York repertory company will present "Shango De Ima" in Bowker Auditorium. Written by Pope Carrill — a Black Cuban, this play is a unique one and indicative of the Renaissance in Black Art in post-revolutionary Cuba. The play encompasses the culture of Africians, Afro-Cubans and all Black people when through the heirarchy of the Yoruba Gods, Shango, Olorun, Yemaya, Ogun and others the origins of man are portrayed.

Also in February a book party for Sonia Sanchez is planned. The Frank Silvera Playwrights Workshop of the Black Theatre allica nee will present dramatic readings in the last week of February. The Cultural Center plans to close the year with a musical and dramatic presentation of Aishman's Lady Day: A Musical Tragedy under the direction of Horace Boyar, Archie Shep and Paul Carter Harrison.

The cultural center hopes that support and participation in its activities will grow. It always opens and encourages program proposals.

If we are to learn from the examples set by other universities, all Black programs of any kind are in danger of being annilihated. Black study programs and cultural centers all over the country have been closed down. The Cultural Center was allocated a budget that only meant built-in failure. We of the Black Community must be in a position to demand a realistic budget that will enable the Center to support, initiate and preserve our culture. Our oppressors have fully realized the importance of culture as a tool for exploitation and slavery. Through enthusiastic support and participation we must demonstrate that we now intend to use our culture as a revolutionary weapon for liberation.

Alaskan Pipeline - Nixon's Folly

by Samuel Hassan

Despite despondent cries of environmentalists, Alaskan oil will inevidably reach the U.S. marketplace. This of course doesn't mean it will end up in the oil burners and gas tanks of American consumers. If you liked the U.S. - Russian grain deal, you'll love this one. U.S. fuel oil exports are up 185 per cent despite shortages we face.

Regardless of how much oil actually remains, there have been manipulations such that ecological concerns have lost out to the economical concerns of Americans. The 789 mile trans-Alaska pipeline from Prudhoe Bay in the North Slope to the southernmost port of Valdez will run nearly parallel to the eastern border of the state. The pipeline will cross four active earthquake zones.

I'd like to focus on all components of the pipeline, and examine the ecological dangers it will thrust upon us. Possibly the most catastrophic outcome of the pipeline itself will be permafrost. "Hot oil, piped through this frozen ground, might melt the land around it, causing the pipe to sag and break — tarring huge areas with toxic crude. The construction of the pipeline will disturb wildlife and scar the wilderness of Alaska, but, assuming the oil does get from Prudhoe Bay to Valdez with a minimal amount of disruption and spillage, there still remains the most dangerous aspect of transporting it.

Cordova fisherman, who were brushed aside by officials when they naively ventured to Washington, say that Valdez harbor is too shallow to accomodate super-tankers. Another danger is that winds of up to 120 miles-hour will blow for ten days to two weeks at a time across the harbor. The few hundred fishing families whose subsistence depends upon harvests reaped from the ocean are threatened with survival, fish, clams, crabs, and edible crustaceans resembling shrimp called prawns being the basis of those harvests.

Just how threatening is water pollution, and what actual effects will it have on us now and in the future? To answer this question, and to exemplify the seriousness of the problem. I would like to quote Professor of Biology at Stanford and prominent ecologist Paul Erlich. In his Ramparts magazine article entitled "Eco-Catastrophe," a prediction of what our world will be like in ten years, Professor Erlich writes.

Other changes had taken place by 1975. Most ocean fishes that return to fresh water to breed had become extinct, their breeding streams so dammed up and polluted that their powerful homing instinct only resulted in suicide. Many fishes and shellfish that bred in restricted areas along the coast followed them, as onshore pollution escalated. By 1977, the annual yeild of fish from the sea was down to thirty million metric tons, less than half the per capita catch of a decade earlier. This helped malnutrition escalate sharply.

The irony of oil pollution contributing to food shortgages is that scientists have found crude oil to have food growing capabilities. Yeast is a unicellular fungi that grows rapidly simply by splitting itself. (cell division, called budding) This process occurs in fermentation which produces amino acids, essential components of the protein molecule. Oxygen must be present, thus, by bubbling oxygen into vats of crude oil, a 66 per cent protein yeast can be grown. Fish meal contains 62 per cent protein while soybean contains 45 per cent. It is estimated that from the amount of oil consumed in one year, twenty million tons of protein could be produced. Interestingly enough, 90 per cent of the oil remains after the process. It appears that there will soon be no oil available to develop the aforementioned process into a means of easing present and future food shortages.

The intensity of oil spillage that will occur in Valdez harbor can be determined from the projected level of production, two million barrels per day. According to Robert C. Clarke Jr. and John S, Finely of the National Marine Fisheries Service in Seattle, .01 per cent spillage is considered exceptionally low. Thus we have 200 barrels a day or 73,000 barrels annually flowing into Valdez harbor. This is only the projected amount of spillage after the oil is piped to Valdez, excluding what happens to it on the way. It is also a figure based on the assumption that there will be no tanker mishaps in trecherous Valdez harbor.

According to K.E. Biglam and R.H. Wyer who work with the Water Quality Office of the Environmental Protection Agency, "Chronic, small discharges from both onshore and offshore facilities are less obvious and are believed to have the most serious and long term effects on the environment." Should the oilmen manage to avoid massive spills in Valdez harbor, they, along with the government, can very possibly deceive American people into believing their operation is ecologically sound. Even if Americans are made to understand the disaster the Alaska Pipeline will cause, it is unlikely their concern for the environment will outweigh a concern for economic stability and an at least temporary solution to the energy crisis.

I am reluctant to recognize the recent advent of the energy crisis as anything but a fruitful economic endeavor for oilmen and all associated industries. Oil exports have increased, and the once very controversial pipeline proposal has been hastily approved by Congress. The sequence of oil related events brings me to conclude that President Nixons' actions are an exploitation of a legitimate and literally shivering problem, and in turn, an exploitation of the American people.

Possibly the title of an article published in the June 4th 1973 issue of U.S. News and World Report adequately sums up the situation we face. It reads as follows; "Oilman's View — there'll be enough gas and oil if people pay the price.

Weiss: "Ten Books I'd Recommend"

"NOT NECESSARILY A "BEST OF ..." LIST, BUT A LIST JUST THE SAME!

by Frederick C. Weiss
Book Review Editor

Everyone's got their lists. There is always the best athlete list; the best dressed list; best records; best students; best cars; best teachers list; and best courses list. The "best list" can keep going on, because you name it, and there is a "best list" for it.

Making such a list for books is a bit tougher. It is hard to read even a fraction of the books coming out, and like anything else, what is good for one, can be a bummer for another. So, without worrying about the "best of the year" list, I am going to give you a "books worth looking into list." This list will contain a number of books that have attracted attention for being good reading, or just plain controversial. In many cases it is a list of private preference; in others a composite of books highly recommended to me. It goes.

The Best of Life — Edited by David E. Scherman (Time-Life $19.95). I really liked this one. Full of great pictures, and as the Title would suggest (ah, another one of those "Best of . ." books) they are those that the editors of the now defunct Life magazine considered to be Life's top photographs. The subjects range from Presidents to paupers; children to soldiers; and a lot of natural and prank pictures in between. Not all that much to read, but a great book to look at.

Marilyn, by Norman Mailer (Grosset and Dunlap, $19.95). I never got a chance to read this book, but I plan to one of these days. Mailer has been called all sorts of things because of Marilyn, and if not the best book of the year (there we go again) it is at least the most controversial. The book is about film goddess Marilyn Monroe, and is filled with gossip, inuendo, facts already known, new facts. The basic natural resource of the book is the Mailer style, a style that I usually can really get into.

Burr by Gore Vidal (Random House, $8.95). Vidal has written a novel based on the life of Aaron Burr, and those other Colonial bigwigs that he came in contact with. For history buffs who aren't as much concerned with "truth" as good reading, Burr comes highly recommended. At least in it, our Colonial fathers come off as people and not deities! While this seems to be the trend these days anyway, in Burr it is done in a compelling and funny style.

The Summer Before the Dark by Dorris Lessing, (Knopf, $6.95). Ed Smith reviewed this novel for Poor Richard's" and really liked it. Apparently so did the New York Times Book Review who picked Dorris Lessing's new novel, as one of the top three books of the year. The novel is about the role of a modern woman, who at 45 knows that she isn't getting any younger. In it, Lessing shows how she comes to grips with herself when faced with the crisis of deteriorating health and a miserable personal life. The Times describes her as a "master" of modern fiction, so she must have something going for her. This book looks like it might really be worth looking into.

Cosell by Cosell (Playboy Press, $8.95). Marty Kelly really got off on this book, as did a whole lot of others. In it Coseli, the cocky yet worthwhile sportscaster does what he does best — he writes about himself. If you can stomach his ego, you can enjoy his book. Cosell provides numerous insides into the world of sport, and is inexpensive enough to make a great Christmas present for almost anyone who likes sports at all.

The Gift by Pete Hamill (Random House, $4.95). THIS book, is my favorite book of the year. Hamill is a magician with words. He knows how to express feelings on paper, in a way that reminds me of J.D. Salinger. The Gift, is about a young man coming home from the Navy during Christmas leave, only to find that his girlfriend has broken up with him, and he feels as alienated from his father as ever. Hamill uses this plot to build a warming story about the young soldier's "coming of age". If you can only read one book this year, read this one. If my word means anything to you at all, read this book, either borrow it or buy it, but you've got to read it.

World Without End, Amen by Jimmy Breslin, (Viking Press, $6.95). Jimmy Breslin is a funny man. He's from the old school of the fighting Irish, who drink hard and laugh a lot. he is also a member of the dying breed of Liberal Irishman. In this novel, Breslin tells us just what happens when you take a reactionary Irish Cop from Queens, New York, send him to Ireland, and have him fall in love with a beautiful leftist student rebel while there. The books has interesting possibilities.

Allistair Cooke's America by Allistair Cooke (Knopf, $15.00). Perhaps it took an Englishman to write a history book so alive and readable about this country. America, based very much on the script of Cooke's television show by the same name tells the story of this country with fine prose and many pictures. The pictures are nothing special, your standard American Heritage sort of thing; but the words — Wow. Cooke writes in a lively, moving style which escapes the sterility that seems to have slowed down so many other books (especially those in the American Heritage series) dealing with the same topic. America, is a nice book to have.

Goodbye, Mr. Christian by Richard Dougherty (Doubleday, $7.95). Unlike so many other post election "tell it like it is" books, Dougherty's book on the George McGovern campaign is not one "to set the record straight", or explain "why things went wrong". It is a funny, honest, and informative account about one man's experience (Dougherty was McGovern's Press Secretary) inside the McGovern camp, and is considered by most people (including myself) to be the best thing written yet about the McGovern campaign.

Come Nineveh, Come Tyre by Allen Drury (Doubleday, $8.95). Jon Carr reviewed this one for "Poor Richard's", and found it to be interesting, and really worthwhile reading. Another Drury political thriller, considered to be a very timely novel in view of recent Watergate happenings, and other such goodies going on in Washington.

This is by no means my "Ten Best list", it is rather a list of ten books that are worth looking into. If it helps you in your holiday shopping, or just in picking out a book to read and relax with over the vacation ... its existence will have been justified.

+Some of these books are available in the University Bookstore.

The Art Of Walt Disney

The Art of Walt Disney
From Mickey Mouse to the Magic Kingdom
by Christopher Finch
Illustrated: 458 P.P.
New York. Harry N. Abrams Publishers $35.00 to Dec. 31. After that $45.

WALT DISNEY'S
Disneyland

Reviewed by: Frederic C. Weiss

Images of Mickey Mouse and Donald Duck surrounded my earliest years: Goofy; Pluto; the Mickey Mouse Club! While I never met Walt Disney, he always seemed like a realization of a dream; a laughing playful Uncle, taking me on his knee and showing me pictures that he drew, and stories that he knew.

The Art of Walt Disney is an extensively well done, thoroughly illustrated, yet uncomplicated work. Like a Disney film, the book is simplistic; what it lacks in intellectual vigor, it more than makes up in its chronological coverage of the growth of the Disney empire.

In the book, Christopher Finch describes Disney as an aggressively creative person, who would spend every penny he had on an idea; a man who truly believed in himself and his ideas, Disney mixed this self convidence with good judgement, to build a mediocre film group into the pioneering force of animation as we know it today. Finch notes, that in most of the Disney Successes, Walt Disney played the major role in planning and production. When at times the films seemed weak or harried, it could be traced to Disney's energy having gone into another competing project.

Without a doubt the most impressive aspect of the book can be found in the numerous illustrations of Various Disney projects. There are 763 pictures in total, and at least half of those are in color. The pictures themselves show the various skills that the Disney artists mastered over the years. The sketches of Disney projects in production, leading up to completion show the herculean task that the studio took on, and completed in each of its major animated films (each of which were described in their own special chapter); Snow White (the first feature length film, and the one that Finch describes as "Disney's Finest Moment".); Pinocchio ("Disney's finest film"), Fantasia, Sleeping Beauty, and Mary Poppins.

Throughout the book, one thing is clear, Christopher Finch obviously had full access to the Disney archives and files while researching and putting together the Art of Walt Disney. This is good and bad. The good thing about it, is that he is able to give you a sense of intimacy with the entire organization. He explains the various processes of production; most of which are too complicated to even begin to put in the review; quotes inter office memos extensively; and draws on the enormous resources of memories of those who worked with Disney from the beginning.

The bad thing about this is that at times the book sounds more like a promo for Walt Disney than a book about Walt Disney. I doubt that the people at Disney Productions would have opened themselves up so fully, if they felt that they would get critical treatment from the author. In this case their convidence was greatly rewarded. But how about the reader? Is the reader given the full story about Walt Disney?

There are questions that should have been raised by Finch, concerning the charges of white ethnocentrism that have come out the past few years. Questions about Disney himself, that people like to talk about, but were never even mentioned in the book.

But these are points that I bring up as a reviewer, and for this book I'd feel more comfortable slipping back to the role of a fan. When I was three yeaas old, I saw my first movie; Disney's "Song of the South". I've been a Disney fan ever since.

When I refer to being a Disney fan, I don't mean the idiocy of Fred MacMurry's flubber glop; nor Tommy Kirk bonanzas. I loved Walt Disney's animated films. There was magic to them, and it isn't soon forgotten. In this sense The Art of Walt Disney is very true to the topic of Disney's Art, and is worth having. Too bad that it is so expensive. If you have a rich friend, hope for it. If you are someone's rich friend; think about it as a gift. For anyone who even remotely likes Disney, this book is really worth having!

Dylan's Writings & Drawings

Writings and Drawings
Bob Dylan
(319 pp. $6.95 Knopf)
Reviewed by Mike Kostek

"my songs're written with the kettle-drum in mind-a touch of any anxious color. Unmentionable. Obvious. An' people perhaps like a soft Brazilian singer . . . I have given up at making any attempt at perfection — the fact that the white house is filled with leaders that've never been t' the Apollo Theater amazes me."

Swooping back years on years, where's Dylan been now that we need him ever more? The supine, supreme excellence that Dylan used to be, his words anyway, are here in this book, and so is a bit of the supreme nothingness he's been playing at since John Wesley Harding. Up to New Morning.

Yes. all the questions answered positively yes. Well-noted, well-indexed. $6.95 is fair. Any Dylan fan will overload at finally being able to check out That Which Has Been Unclear after all these (eight? five?) years. They do, after all. have got to know exactly.

. . . my poems
"are written in a rhythm of unpoetic distortion — divided by pierced ears. False eyelashes-subtracted by people constantly torturing each other. With a melodic purring line of discriptive hollowness — seen at times through dark sunglasses an' other forms of psychic explosion. A song is anything that can walk by itself — I am called a songwriter. A poem is a naked person . . . some people say that I am a poet"

The word worlds that spill out of this book are arrayingly amazing, and let us remember how much we've been missing. Or how much we had before. And jesus, they certainly remind us what a hell of a poet Bob Dylan was-is.

If copies of this were dropped in high places (Pentagon, The Collegian) anyplace, look out. But "Nothing was delivered

And I tell this truth to you,
Not out of spite or anger
But simply because it's true.
Now I hope you won't object to this,
Giving back all of what you owe,
The fewer words you have to waste on this,
The sooner you can go."

Fear Of Flying

by Christine Dillard
Holt, Rinehart & Winston $6.95
ERICA JONG.. Fear of Flying

Isadora Zelda is afraid of a great deal besides riding in airplanes, but she flys never the less. Fear of Flying opens with our antiheroine en route to a psychoanalytic congress in Vienna. Immediately the reader learns that this woman is unfulfilled in her marriage and nurtures fantasies of "the zip less fuck."

"Zipless you see, not because European men have button flies . . . but because the incident is seemingly free of all remorse and guilt . . . it is absolutely pure . . . and it is rarer than the unicorn. And I have never had one."

From here the author sails in and out of the present. On a liberating jaunt around Europe, we meet the Isadoras of years past. As she cruises with her Laingian lover she is haunted by her Jewish childhood, previous affairs of the heart, and her struggle to write.

Her amusing candor brings many of her conflicts to life. The value of this book is not in pat answers or a fairy tale ending because they don't exist here any more than they do in every day life. Instead, her courageous search and momentary enlightenment offer a window on the world.

"Why is being alone so terrible?" she asks herself. What about liberation? What about independence? What is freedom besides having nothing to lose? She argues to herself about the apparent hypocrisy that she is fighting. She considers other literary figures.

"Me: Think of Simone de Beauvoir!

Me: I love her endurance, but her books are full of Sartre, Sartre, Sartre.

Me: Think of Doris Lessing!
Me: Anna Wulf can't come unless she's in love.
Me: Think of Sylvia Plath!
Me: Dead. Who wants a life or death like hers even if you become a saint?"

As the old saying goes when Ms. Jong is good, she is excellent, but when she is bad she is horrid. Occasionally her humor seems forced instead of funny. Her honest and open descriptions of being female can be vulgar as well. Radical women may complain that the finish is a cop-out, for Isadora sees salvation as the coming together of men and women that don't need to pretend that they haven't a need for love, that second rate is first rate when it isn't. The strength of this work is not in this discovery but in the progression to it. As a first novel, it will undoubtably join the ranks of other similar contemporary works such as Lois Gould's Such Good Friends and Joan Didion's Play It As It Lays.

FLASHBACKS
I sit proudly in the first branch of the big catalpa tree, but a sour fear
grips me when I realize I can't move for fear of falling.

I watch
my new red sneakers
as I run across the pasture.
I watch one foot sink into a wet brown mass.
Little flies buzz up all around my face.

I hate playing softball with the Williams kids.
They make me stand in the outfield for hours,
so I make the best of it and sit down to pick dandelions.

Down on Mr. Gunns land
we swing from long vines.
I crawl over a rock and find the bones of a dead deer.
I won't swing there anymore.

I sit up on the hill with my hot face watching the house and barn.
I can hear cars go by as I tear out handfuls of grass.

The plywood board is warm against my stomach
as I lie across the brook.
My nose almost touches the water as I watch it curl by.

Winslow and I take each of the windows piled carefully in the barn and methodically smash every pane of every row.
We never tire of that beautiful shattering noise.

In the gravel pit
we take a running start at the hot sun,
leap into the air feeling like slow motion, and land softly in the warm dirt.

It's great to be sick home from school.
I rearrange mud and leaves out by the brook all day and think of my friends.

Is your Osiris eye drawn out in black mascara because a jewel like that needs a cage —
Are your scarves piled nile high around your neck to gauze the glare of headlights streaming through the night —
Did you float in a longboat from a foreign shore —
Were there swarthy arms fanning cicadas from your black hair —
And did they laugh at your lotus face because they knew the frost would bite harder here than in your marble palace where you climbed roofward to flirt with the stars shedding silver on your ten-ringed fingers?

Hector Ames

by Bryan Harvey

"Is there anything I can do to help?"

I glanced up in annoyance from the litter of timetables and schedules in my lap. Instead of the red-striped porter's uniform I had expected, however, I saw a pair of perfectly creased houndstooth trousers. My eyes quickly went past the matching coat and vest to the smiling face of the tall, sandy-haired man before me.

"I'm terribly sorry," I stammered, "I thought you were a —

"Porter. No, the porters never seem to be as helpful to the weary traveller as they might." He bowed slightly. "My name is Hector Ames," he said, gesturing toward the mass of papers with his gold-headed walking stick, "you seem to be in need of assistance."

I stood up awkwardly, vainly clutching at the paper accordions which cascaded to the floor.

"Why, yes, thank you, I suppose I am," I faltered, looking at him curiously, "are you with the Traveller's Aid?"

"Oh, no, nothing like that," he chuckled. "I simply saw a fellow traveller in distress. Ever since the new schedule came out there have been lost souls all over Milwaukee."

"Perhaps you could clear something up for me," I said, running my finger along a row of figures. "Is Topeka on Transystem One or Transystem Three? I can't seem to find it listed here and..."

"Oh, yes, Topeka," he cut in, "Topeka seems to have been left out of the new schedule for some reason. No doubt they'll correct the error in the revised edition." He rested his hands on the head of his walking stick and squinted at the ceiling. "I believe Topeka is the ninth stop on Transystem Three. The last train left fifteen minutes ago, and there won't be another for an hour and a half." He turned and looked around the crowded terminal. "That leaves us just enough time for lunch."

I stooped over and picked up the timetables, preparing to make my excuses and go on my way. Despite his easy manner, Ames was nevertheless a stranger in an alien city. I would be much wiser to sit down and read the new issue of the Astrophysical Journal and dine on the train.

"Coming?" Ames asked politely. "The restaurant in the shopping mall is really quite nice."

I wavered, unsure of what to do next. While I didn't know Ames, I did feel comfortable with him. It would be rude to turn him down after he had been so helpful. We would have lunch in Milwaukee and then go our separate ways.

"All right," I said finally, "let's go eat."

We started across the lobby of the terminal, forcing our way through the streams of people. I let Ames lead the way, since he knew where we were going, and since it gave me an opportunity to observe him more carefully. The crowd seemed almost to part before him as he thrust ahead. The walking stick, which I had taken to be merely ornamental, became a hound on the leash, pulling its master toward some unseen prey. As I struggled to keep pace, I was struck by the image of a British cavalry officer leading a vanguard through the Mongol hordes.

"Mr. Ames," I said, stumbling through the crowd to where he waited in front of the restaurant, "do you always travel through crowds like that? You nearly ran down one poor woman."

"Yes, yes, of course," he said, guiding me toward a table, "but the noon train from Chicago was due in momentarily, and then we should never have found a table."

Surprised, I looked toward the door of the restaurant and saw a group of twenty or thirty people queued up, waiting for tables.

I glanced at Ames where he sat idly drumming his fingers. "How did you know that the train was due in? How did you know what time it was? I never saw you look at a clock?"

Ames looked genuinely amused for the first time since I had met him. "It's all a matter of timing, my friend. People get up and go to work, children go to school, rockets are launched, races are won, all by the clock." He gestured around the room. "These people owe their very existences to the clock, yet they hardly know where they are, let alone when."

Oh, no, I thought, I'm in the company of a madman. "Mr. Ames, surely you can't be serious about this fixation with time? I carry a watch, and I consult it when necessary. I think I have a fair conception of my place in time."

"Your place in time? What do you know of your place in time! If I ask you what time it is, you may tell me six o'clock. What good is that? By what are you determining time? It may be five before six, or five after. Your watch may be broken, or it may have stopped altogether. Time. You know no more about time than you do about the rest of your universe." He stood up and flung his hand toward the ceiling. "The cosmos is in motion around you, and you are content to close your eyes to it. Spring forward, Fall back. A nice nursery rhyme for the ignorant!"

By this time he was quite loud, and had begun to attract the stares of the people at the adjoining tables. I stood up and moved around the table to his side.

"Mr. Ames," I whispered urgently, "what are you doing? These people will think you've gone mad."

Immediately, the fire went out of his eyes, and the flush left his cheeks. "I'm sorry," he said, breathing heavily, "I'm sorry."

Now docile, I led him out of the restaurant and into the mall. We stood looking at each other, a motionless island in the sea of shoppers.

Very quietly, he began to speak. "You don't know quite what its like, being the only one who knows what time it is." He stuttered, groping for words, "You must have heard about people who have perfect pitch. They can tell exactly what the pitch is of any sound they hear." He lowered his eyes and went on almost inaudibly. "They can do something with their gift. They can become musicians and singers and boast of their abilities. But of what use is perfect tempo?" His voice raised to a shout on the last word, and he took a step back from me. The hot fire was back in his eyes and running down his cheeks. "I call it not a gift, but a curse!" he shrieked, and dashed off into the crowd.

I plunged after him, but again the walking stick pulled him through the crowd. This time, however, he was the hunted, and the stick clawed and bit its way out of its human corner. I followed as best I could, having to stop several times to assist bystanders to their feet in the wake of the fury.

I saw Ames burst out a side door into the parking lot beyond. "Mr. Ames," I cried, "stop running, I want to talk to you." Ames kept going until he was nearly in the middle of the field of cars. I cupped my hands to my mouth and shouted, "Mr. Ames, come back. I need to know something: What time is it?"

He stopped suddenly, as if hit by an arrow. Very slowly he turned, looked toward me, and slumped to the ground. When I got to him, he was sobbing silently on the ground between two cars.

"Mr. Ames, get up, please, it's all right. I want you to walk me to my train, so I'll be sure not to miss it."

He was still for a moment, and then he began to get up. First on his knees, and then finally on his swaying legs he lifted himself off the ground. His coat and vest were pulled open from his head-long dash through the crowd, and his trousers were oil-stained from the asphalt of the parking lot. His walking stick had rolled beneath a car. I dusted him off and sat him on the hood of a car.

"Thank you," he said, smoothing his hair back with his hands. "I think I'll be all right now." He smiled weakly, "You'd better go now if you're going to catch your train. It leaves in seven minutes."

At this point my only thought was to get Ames back to the station and turn him over to someone for help. He must have sensed my doubt, as he immediately jumped off the car and moved toward me. "It really is safe to leave me," he said as he buttoned his vest, "this happens only rarely, now that I'm undergoing treatment."

,'Mr. Ames," I protested, "I can't leave you out here like this. At least walk me to my train."

"Certainly," he said, drawing himself up, "it's the least I can do." He looked around for a moment. "Now where has my stick got to? Oh, well, I shall have to get another. We must hurry, or you'll miss your train. Only six minutes more."

Feeling somewhat relieved at his improved condition, I felt it would be safe to go on to Topeka, after all. Ames' spitits had improved considerable, and he was quite cheerful as we walked through the rows of parked cars.

"You know, it was my daughter who insisted that I get treatment for my problem. I apparently used to be quite annoying." He was silent for a moment. "I think the problem came to a head one day when the clock tower in the middle of town went on the blink. They tell me I almost killed myself running up the ladder in the belfrey, trying to get to it."

I walked on in silence. The eeriness of the situation had finally struck me, and I said, "Mr. Ames, do you know exactly what time it is right now, without consulting any timepiece?"

He smiled and leaned his head back. "Certainly," he said, "but you don't really want to know, do you?"

"No, not really. Ignorance is bliss." We walked in the door of the station and were immediately surrounded by the sounds of the trains pulling into the platform. Ames pointed to track three and said, "this is where your train will be coming, in exactly thirty seconds."

We walked to the edge of the platform and stood looking down at the tracks. I looked up the tracks and saw the train just coming into sight. "Mr. Ames," I said with a smile, "it looks as if my train is going to be a few seconds late. Should I have a word with the railroad?"

Ames wasn't listening, however. His eyes had glassed over, and he was counting to himself, under his breath. "...thirteen, twelve, eleven, ten..."

"Mr. Ames," I said worriedly, "the train is going to be ten seconds late. Do you hear me. ten seconds late!"

The train was still moving down the track, hundreds of tons of rolling steel, as he said, "two, one. Here your train is, my friend. I hope you have a pleasant journey. Watch the step," he said as he swung me off the platform.

Between Nothingness & Eternity
Mahavishnu Orchestra Live
(Columbia KC 32766)

President Nixon once again vigorously denied today the reports and "vicious rumors" that he is losing his sanity and simultaneously announced his new plan for combatting the energy crisis: He is sending his friend John Wayne up with the next Skylab mission with instructions to lasso the commet Kohoutek as it passes near the Earth. "...and if we can't harness it," the president added, "We'll at least make the bastard slow down to 50 m.p.h., bigod."

Now I'll just bet you're wondering how I'm going to relate all this nonsense to the new Mahavishnu album. I'll bet you think I'm going to say something typically clever like, "There's no energy crisis as far as the music these boys play is concerned." "Haw, haw, that's rich", you'd say. Splat. Well, I really put one over on you this time: There is no connection between any of the above and the new Mahavishnu album. Nyaah. All right, let's get down to business:

One thing's for sure, there's no energy crisis as far as the music these boys play is concerned (muffled laughter builds in intensity until the pressure becomes too much and someone breaks: "Oh God, is that funny!" he cries out, and falls over, convulsed-- Some people shouldn't be allowed to read record reviews. Others shouldn't be allowed to write them. For a complete listing of each write to me c-o Poor Richard, 1600 Pennsylvania Ave., Washington, D.C.).

Okay, all seriousness aside. This is a good album, a 'one-record set' of live recordings from August of this year, containing, in the words of a concert poster I seem to recall, "all new tunes." The album title is a little more hokey than usual but their music has gotten a lot less hokey--not quite back to the gut-level of their Inner Mounting Flame, but with a lot more of that raw-energy feel than Birds of Fire had. Yessiree, there's no energy crisis as far as the music these boys play is concerned (My God, what creative journalism! Rolling Stone, move over).

The album has only three cuts on it: "Trilogy", a medley of new McLaughlin 'tunes', "Sister Andrea", group keyboardist Jan Hammer's first contribution, and a side-long piece entitled "Dream". "Trilogy" and "Sister Andrea" are both excellent and worthy of attention, but it will be "Dream" that gets played, and deservedly so. It's one of the most solid compositions I've heard from McLaughlin since the days of My Goal's Beyond. A beautiful set of ominous, plodding chords weave their way in and out of the beginning of this, well, dream-like piece, tying together the sweeping changes of mood that take us through fear to ecstacy andeverywhere in between.

I almost wish they'd done this in the studio where the sound would have gotten just a touch more polish, but if i had to choose between the polish and the incredibly driving, almost frenzied energy and spontanaiety of this performance there could be no question (Uh-oh, he said 'energy' again. You don't think he'd...oh, no. He couldn't. Please don't do it. Please don't. No, please...Augh!). By golly, there's no energy crisis as far as these boys play is concerned.

For those of you who are unimaginative enough to give records for Christmas presents (and rich enough to afford to) this album will be perfect for the Mantovani lover in your family. However, if you do decide to give it as a gift and if you have the time, it might be advisable to send your copy to the Pope for blessing. I mean, it is a Christmas present, and all this MahaHindu stuff isn't exactly...you know, Kosher. Oh well, like those bald guys with the orange robes say:

Happy Christmas,
Happy Christmas,
Christmas Christmas,
Happy Happy

Caustic Comments

BOB DYLAN-DYLAN (Columbia)

Actually I'm assuming this artificially concocted $6.98 Columbia Christmas Turkey is by the person we call Bob Dylan as the name 'Bob' never appears on here. These outtakes from the Self Portrait and New Morning sessions are interesting, but a few are stinko. "Lily Of The West" and "The Ballad Of Ira Hayes" are quite right, but too much of the rest is not there.

It must be said that Dylan did not put this album out, Columbia did it for him. C.

ALL-AMERICAN BOY-RICK DERRINGER) Blue Sky-Columbia KZ 32481) time: 40:13

This is a hot one. Rick's finally made his own record, after years of rocking inspiration for The McCoys and the Winter Brothers. Derringer gets a high score on the zooming tunes here, as most of them seem to explode, and also does quite well in the Rundgren-like softer sensitivity sections. Only a couple spots are weak Winter-like exercises in incessant raunch. Kudos to drummer Bobby Caldwell, as he's playing so hard and fast that it seems like someone speeded up the tapes. See about "Rock And Roll, Hoochie Koo" (Rick wrote it, and this is by far the best version), "The Ariport Giveth (The Airport Taketh Away)" and "Jump, Jump, Jump." B+

OOOH SO GOOD 'N BLUES-TAJ MAHAL (Columbia)

Sweet record of just what Taj is really about. It's only the gentle spirit and some right back-up (like The Pointer Sisters) doing some of "the welcome friends in my house of music." B+

WOVOKA-REDBONE (Epic KE 32462) time: 29:46

Every Redbone album is a bad mix of their pointed redone American Indian-style rock, stringy schlock and strange (for the situation) excursions into some rather far-flung and interesting musical fields that work more often then they don't. However, Wovoka doesn't have much of anything in any of these situations (Docked a Christgau for its short time) D+

It ALL COMES BACK-PAUL BUTTERFIELD'S BETTER DAYS (Bearsville BR 2170) time: 38:27

Excellent, excellent album of perfectly brewed 'rock' and 'blues' played by the best new band of 1973. As friend Steve Sliva says, "No body else could play this. It's just perfect." What this music is is a beautifulblend of rock spirit tempered with blues sense, peppered with New Orleans fonk that could only be formulated by someone who has played as long as Butter; you also need an egoless band willing to submerge individuals into one shazotin' unit, and most of all, a bunch of real musicians (along with Paul are Christopher Parker, Amos Garrett, Ronnie Barron, Billy Rich and Geoff Muldaur) who are crazy about the music they're playing. I haven't heard anything that feels so right in quite some time. A

INSIDE OUT-JOHN MARTYN (Island SMAS-9335) time: 39:55

Here's an English folksinger who publishes his songs under UFO Music and writes "love.....love.....love.....love.....tra la la...triddly dee dee" inside his album. And here's an English folksinger whose music sounds best when he's not singing. What does sound good are those moments on here that sound like they were made by an English folksinger who's bored with straight guitar, straight arrangements, and realizes he doesn't sing that well, and therefore comes up with some pretty interesting, pretty twisted ideas. C+

SWEET REVENGE-JOHN PRINE (Atlantic)

Good album of varied Prine;he's singing in a less 'offensive' voice than on Diamonds In The Rough. You will not die, it's not poison. B

ATTEMPTED MUSTACHE-LOUDON WAINWRIGHT III (Columbia KC 32710) time: 38:38

If you've been happy with Loudon so far, you'll dig the proceedings here. If not, this will put you off as much as his other stuff. There is a sublime mixture of musics on here that make it quite nicely varied Wainwright album. B

SLIDEWINDER
J.B. HUTTO & THE HAWKS

SLIDEWINDER-J.B. HUTTO & THE HAWKS (Delmark)

One of the beautiful blues masters of our day has a new album that should be investigated by anyone into digging Hound Dog Taylor and other Chicago raunchy blues. Tough stuff. B+

THE LAST ILLUSION-J.F. MURPHY & SALT (Columbia KC 32539) time: 43:20

A nice, sophisto album that won't win any contests, but is a neatly-done bit of Mark-Almond music, but with more flavor and puch and a lot less wimpiness. There are a lot of good ideas here, but they're diminished by the excessive lenghts of the songs, esp. the two ten minute showcases. B

THE DIRT ON THE GROUND-DAVE ALEXANDER (Arhoolie)

Dave's second good album for Arhoolie. He from S.F. and sings and plays in a rough blues style with a lot of interesting ideas, and deep feeling. B+

THE BOB WILLS ANTHOLOGY-BOB WILLS & HIS TEXAS PLAYBOYS (Columbia KG 32416) time: 66:13 (2 recs)

Anyone seriously interested in the music made by Dan Hicks & His Hot Licks, Asleep At The Wheel or others playing music in the '40's swing' style should definitely see about Bob Wills. What Wills did was to essentially substantialize, popularize and legitimize the peculiarly sweet mix of jazz, hillbilly and country blues that became Western Swing. This is a good assortment of some of the varied styles Wills embraced so well. Sound quality is poor, but you can handle it. B

OCCUPATION: FOOLE - GEORGE CARLIN
(Little David LD 1005) Time: 47:53

A record by the very nature if its limitations can only approximate the totality of a live performance, even if the recording is of a live performance, as all George Carlin albums are. Not being able to watch his facial expressions and bodily movements forces the listener to concentrate harder on what is being said rather than how. Each of Carlin's recordings has focused on a general theme, the media (FM&AM), growing up (Class Clown), and working (Occupation: Foole), while in concert Carlin incorporates all of these into a highly perceptive view of life. Because most of life is funny to begin with, Carlin's forte comes not from merely rehashing the obvious but from interpreting it and putting it onto a higher (if not funnier) plateau.

Unortunately Occupation: Foole is Carlin's most disjointed record, engineered and spliced much more haphazardly than the previous two Little David recordings. But you can't fault Carlin's wit, here or anywhere. Here he touches on everything from blackheads to Nixon ("He looks like he hasn't taken a shit in a month") to farts, and though there's a little repetition ("Filthy Words" is a twelve minute expansion of the 'seven words you can't say on T.V.' theme and includes what appears to be the first recorded discussion of the word 'twat') it is difficult not to like this one. With the almost total absence of good comedy during these trying times, George Carlin is a rarity indeed. His concerts are sheer wonder and his records give an insight into his first rate mind.

OCCUPATION: FOOLE

FLEETWOOD MAC - MYSTERY TO ME
(Warners)

More of the same from Fleetwood Mac; this one is called Mystery To Me. It is their second album since guitarist and songwriter Danny Kirwan left the group. Kirwan, whose compositions dominated Future Games and Bare Trees was replaced by Bob Weston, leaving the task of songwriting to Bob Walch and Christine McVie.

Welch has finally come into his own as a songwriter. He wrote or co-wrote half of their previous album, Penguin, and he has written seven of the twelve songs on Mystery To Me. My favorites on this album are both Welch's tunes: the mysterious "Emerald Eyes" and "Hypnotized," a dreamy ballad.

Christine McVie's songs seem, for the most part, forced and contrived. Her writing talents have progressively regressed since "Show me a Smile" on Future Games; she's worn out her bag of catchy melodies, but fortunately her voice still holds its grasping innocence.

As an afterthought the group added the Yardbirds old number, "For Your Love" (it's not even listed on the cover), which is enhanced by Christine's electric piano and subdued harmony. It sounds no where near as raunchy as the original.

Fleetwood Mac has found a safe and comfortable niche (less kind souls might call it a rut), in the rock music field. They haven't changed over the past four albums and while they may at times be uninspired, they have reached a level of tightness which will keep their fans satisfied.

LADIES INVITED - J. GEILS BAND (Atlantic SD 7286)
Total playing time: 41:26

Those Bad Boys from Boston have recorded five albums in the relatively short period of three years. Their latest, like its predecessor Bloodshot combines the hard drivin', hard drinkin' foot-stompin' rock and roll with that occasional touch of reggae which made "Give it to Me" their biggest hit to date. Unfortunately the studio sound of both Bloodshot and Ladies Invited is too sterile after they let it all hang with Full House which stands uncontested as their classic. All the songs on Ladies Invited are Peter Wolf-Seth Justman originals, and don't misunderstand, several are quite good. "Did You No Wrong," "Take a Chance" and "The Lady Makes Demands" make me want to fix another drink and shuffle. These are good enough to make the bland moments easier to take.

It is still hard to believe that these guys sold out the Boston Garden just a few weeks back. I mean you've got to be a little crazy to go see a concert there in the first place. Without coming up with anything new, the J. Geils Band have a sound of their own which people around here have really taken to. Thinking back to seeing the Hallucinations and the early J. Geils Band at the Berkeley Street Tea Party, it is hard to put Ladies Invited in the same time-space continuum. I'll break down and give it a B for sentimental reasons.

BETTE MIDLER MIDLER

(Atlantic SD 7270)

Picture it. You finally sleeze a good album off the music editor, estatic, you run through the campus center occasionally hiding behind the couches fearing he will find you and reclaim it. You run into your room and ask whoever happens to be standing closest, "Wanna listen to the new Bette Midler album?" they nod yes. You put it on the stereo and all of a sudden, like out of nowhere, the room is filled with little voices faintly resembling munchkins and you know it could only be Bette Midler on the turntable. The Wizard of Oz like sound is the first cut on side two named "Optimistic Voices", its fantastic tc say the least, I could go on and on, but I'd only end up reprinting the whole twelve or so songs printed on the back cover.

I was a little disappointed to find out that she is not the only vocalist on the album, she is accompanied at one time or another by some eleven background singers; a little disheartening, but a beautiful album.

Writing record reviews is a frustrating experience for me. The frustration comes from knowing too much about music to enjoy 99 per cent of what's coming out of rock these days and not knowing nearly enough about music to discourse intelligently on or even comprehend a large majority of contemporary "jazz". Therefore I find myself drawn to music which straddles the border between the two categories or falls somewhere outside of both, such as the Paul Winter Consort, who didn't put out an album this year and so didn't make the list. However, I haven't totally excluded myself from Mother Rock, as you'll notice. For the record (no plug intended) I'd like to add that these albums are not listed in any particular order and I only included Quadrophenia because the Music Editor threatened me with violence and sarcasm if I didn't.

The music editor would like to take this opportunity to thank the people on his "staff": Gomes, Feld, Sokol, MacKenzie, Miller, Carr, Yeslow, Michelove, Santos and Mack in the main, and also those who drifted in and out for one reason or another. Life ain't quite so easy when you're music editor, but having fantastic people getting things done is the only way any of the last thirteen weeks of this insanity could have been carried out. Tonight, 201 Greenough, okay?

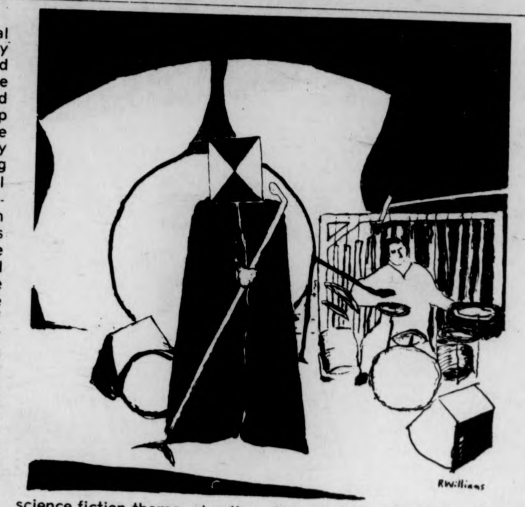
Genesis - Captives Of The Human Squid

Genesis 1973

by Garguman Gomes



Genesis first hit the musical rounds about 1966, when Tony Banks, Michael Rutherford and Peter Gabriel, three aspiring songwriters, decided they wanted to form a group (early influences — the Beatles, then to Family). They were named Genesis, (along with a couple of musical cohorts) by the singer-producer-pop-figure Jonathan King (remember "Good News Week" and "Everyone's Gone To The Moon"?), and released an album in Britain ("Some nice things happened, but the production wasn't that good" — Tony Banks). From that time on, they've been producing themselves, and put out a very nice album in 1970, "Trespass" (now available in the bargain bins, or as a British import), but they feel that the actual band's first album occurred a bit later, with "Nursery Crymes" (on Buddah-Charisma).

Nursery Crymes introduced two very important things to the group: 1) Guitarist Stephen Hackett and drummer Phil Collins, both nearly virtuoso material on their respective instruments, with Hackett having an excellent imagination for the electronics of the guitar and Collins being able to push the band with a forceful rhythm, and 2) the use of small 'stories' surrounding their compositions, with which they had started one of their best known pieces from Trespass, "The Knife", which, legend has it, is based around the events of the Russian Revolution. On Nursery Crymes they took this technique one step further with a few compositions, the most notable being "The Return of the Giant Hogweed", which had beautifully swirling but gruff melody lines, a definite science fiction theme, plus the story of "The Musical Box", which consisted of a profile of children with adult patterns, involving murder and a sexually deranged old man.

On Foxtrot the science fiction themes were becoming more and more obvious, and Genesis began to take on a definitely polished instrumental sound, with near early King Crimson tightness, and the lyrics started being better for storytelling. "Supper's Ready" is a monstrosity of ambition, science fiction, and an almost impossible range in Gabriel's voice. "Supper" has a unique range and style of variation, moving through five or six movements, all of which join together to make a solid work.

Selling England by The Pound. (Charisma — on the Atlantic — FC 6060; over fifty-three minutes, and the personnel is: Phil Collins — drums, Percussion, vocal; Michael Rutherford - 12 string, bass, Electric Sitar; Stephen Hackett — electric guitar, nylon-string guitar; Tony Banks — keyboards, 12 string guitar; and Peter Gabriel — vocals, flute, oboe, percussion), the title of which comes from the track "Dancing with the Moonlit Knight", which is presented onstage with Gabriel dressed in a Roman soldier's costume. It's a staggering eight-minute piece, with time changes that would make even the most adventurous bands blush — and it concerns itself with "Selling England". This breaks into "I Know What I Like (In Your Wardrobe)", which is also performed live, this time with Gabriel imitating the motions of the lawn-mower Arp synthesizer. The song is bright, cheery, and seemingly mindless — Gabriel does a nice little puppet dance in the middle of the song — but it concerns itself with a lad being told what to do with the rest of his life, and finally concluding "Me, I'm just a lawnmower, — you can tell me by the way I walk." "Firth of Fifth" is a basic fantasy song, orchestrated and developed, while "More Fool Me" is-choke!-a love song, but nice vocal work by drummer Phil Collins.

Side Two starts off with "The Battle of Epping Forest" (Taken from a news story concerning two rival gangs fighting over East End protection rights.), which onstage develops into A Clockwork Orange type of feel, with Gabriel leaping back and forth over the seven-four time signature. This, too, also shifts a great deal, and the song works well, especially in person and in Phil Collins' martial drum work. Its weak spot is some rather lame Arp work by Banks, which is nice, but not as impactful as his improvisations on the live sets.

"The Cinema Show" and "Aisle of Plenty", finish off the album's mammoth scope. "Cinema Show" revolves around plastic fantasies of weekend pick-ups; and in "Aisle of Plenty", old Tessa realizes that she doesn't belong here anymore, and restates her sadness with the opening of the album. Sad but final.

When Genesis appear "live", the atmosphere is very energetic. At Tufts, the concert began with two eyes, painted in green and illuminated with Black light, and in the corner stood Banks hovering over his twin keyboards like a concertmaster, laying out the chords for "Watcher of the Skies", which is based, around Arthur C. Clarke's Childhood's End, and a character called the Watcher from Marvel comix. Gabriel is the most astonishing member of the group to watch on stage, since he leaps about, and creates a presence over the sophisticated Genesis music — Dressed to the hilt as the comix character, in a Sun Ra-ish cloak of many colors. Polyrhythmic eruptions and scream guitar ensue, only to be faded out on a majestic mellotron organ sequence.

They finished off the set (after a brief guitar solo by Hackett called "Horizons" from Foxtrot, and one more song from Selling England) with quite conceivably their best piece, Supper's Ready", which is a Sci-fi oratorio concerning the Apocalypse, and the events shortly preceding and following it. Gabriel and Collins mixed in Beautiful harmony, until it was time for the "Guaranteed Eternal Sanctuary Man" to come on, dressed in a plastic crown of thorns — the false prophet. The group then storms through the battle sequence with Gabriel staring out at the audience in sobriety. Then came "Willow Farm", a little bit of Cabaret-type decadence, with Gabriel strutting the stage like the master of ceremonies. Quickly —into "Apocalypse (in 9-8)", with an excellent jam by Banks, Rutherford and Collins, until Gabriel comes back in, singing the melody to "Eternal Sanctuary Man", this time dressed as a... geometric shape! The major transformation has taken form, as the guitar and organ begin to perform spirit wailing. By the way, smoke bombs were employed on stage, to signal the transformation. Phew! It was one gasser of a show. Catch Genesis the next time they come around.

MUSCLE OF LOVE-ALICE COOPER (Warner Bros. BS 2748)
time: 39:03

BAND ON THE RUN-
PAUL McCARTNEY AND WINGS
(Apple SO-3415)
time: 44:40

Alice Cooper's latest is something of a surprise and may be something of a disappointment too for his die-hard fans. Unlike School's Out and Billion Dollar Babies, Muscle of Love is not a soundtrack album for a Cooper tour. The many special effects and overt theatrics found on the last two albums are not present here; there is no "Grand Finale". Whatcha get is Rock and Roll, and very good it is for the most part. Another change found here is that, while the band continues its lyrical obsessions with American myths and the dynamics of early adolescence, (and managing to make the two into one), none of the songs on Muscle of Love deal with the overtly morbid topics which have come to be one of Cooper's trademarks. No butchered chickens, no "I Love the Dead" or "Raped and Freezin'" — instead there's "Big Apple Dreamin' (Hippo)", about taking on The City, "Man With the Golden Gun" — the Gangster, and stuff like "Workin' Up A Sweat", "Woman Machine", and the title tune, all about the tender emotions accompanying puberty and what follows. And if you don't think that's part of our national heritage, think again...And if Alice Cooper can end one of his tours with a patriotic recording of Kate Smith, it's not too inconsistent for Liza Minelli to sing backup here. Musically, Muscle of Love ranges from the acoustic loveliness of the opening of "Hard Hearted Alice" to the rather unsurprising rock of the title tune — a bit weak in spots, but it's a good Cooper album generally and might get the band wider acceptance, maybe...

The paper shortage and the end-of-semester squeeze prevent me from doing the job I'd like to do cn these albums, so please bear with me. To say that Band On The Run is far superior to Red Rose Speedway isn't much of a compliment. The same is true for saying that it's better than Wild Life — so what? But to say that Paul McCartney's latest album is possibly the best thing he's done since leaving The Beatles might give you an idea of just how good it is. The lyrical and melodic flatulence which made up 85 per cent of Red Rose Speedway is almost entirely missing here, and when it does occur (as on "Bluebird"), it's so well orchestrated that it doesn't make any difference. And I don't mean another "My Love" — it's hard to find any strings here at all. One reason for this album's clear superiority over Wings' previous albums might be that Denny Seiwell and Henry McCullough have resigned from the band, leaving the McCartneys and Denny Laine. In any case it's true that Linda is learning to sing backup well, Paul's use of the synthesizer as extended organ is better here than his fweep-fweeping on Ringo, and the lyrics consist of something more than "oh lazy dynamite" repeated too many times. Present on Band On The Run are massed vocals à la "Dear Boy", alternations of extremely dense arrangements with very sparse ones (particularly on "Let Me Roll It"), a grand finale in the style of "Back Seat of My Car" — "Nineteen Hundred and Eighty Five", and a "Sergeant Pepper"-"Ram On" — like restating of earlier songs in "Picasso's Last Words (Drink To Me)". In other words, there's a lot of intriguing things here for those who've always hoped that McCartney can do better than that. Just don't expect anything profound.

Until next semester folks — "Say bye."

BOOGER BEAR—BUDDY MILES
(Columbia KC-32694)

CROWN PRINCE OF DANCE—RUFUS THOMAS
Stax STS-3008)

After listening to the title cut of his new album, one could think that Buddy Miles will finally have a top forty hit and then crack the 'big time'!

It is bluesy that I realize the title cut is the only song that might project Buddy. The rest of his album doesn't come across with the power, the zeal, the outright beautiful R & B one grew to accept from the Booger Bear.

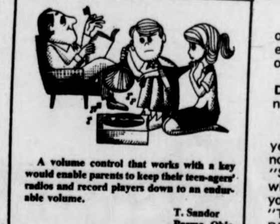
There are many Buddy Miles fans. I am one of them. Whenever a new Miles L.P. is released the faithful quickly purchase and generally enjoy. I enjoy this album but realize that those not into Buddy, as a soulful institution will not enjoy this release. As usual Buddy offers roaring drum solos and an occasional fierce guitar riff. If you took all the separate riffs and combined them, Buddy Miles would have a bitch of a song.

The birght moments of the United Nations song are there, but it's too little music, too late to grab the listener. His guitar solo fights like Buddy live — but not enough.

Miles offers a shining example of rhythm and blues artist with the Kinks' 'You Really Got Me.' After listening to Miles version, it is obvious that the Kinks are white, are English, are dated.

Booger Bear lacks the drive that Buddy used to offer. In 1967 listeners received a true freedom express playing to their minds. The music was fierce non-stop funky drive.

Where Buddy leaves off with powerful R & H, Rufus Thomas picks up.



A volume control that works with a key would enable parents to keep their teen-agers' radios and record players down to an endurable volume.

Rufus Thomas is a Stax artist, an old standby — a legend of a soul entertainer. He traditionally has offered driving music to dance with.

From listening to Crown Prince of Dance you realize that Rufus has never stopped.

My vote for best R&B album of the year goes to Rufus. From the first note of "I Wanna Sang" on down to "Steal A Little", the dancing man with a voice like a wolf blasts into your mind. Digg it, the man sings "Tutti Frutti" faster than Little Richard.

The Funkiest Man Alive not only invites dancing and hand clapping, but it aptly describes Rufus Thomas.

'So you wanna hear some good R&B kid? Get on down to Rufus Thomas and let him take you very high with The Crown Prince of Dance — A refreshing release from Stax.

WISHBONE ASH
(MCA Records) Time 78:31

Wishbone Ash has been touring the U.S.A. a lot in the past two years and has finally emerged as one of the better rock bands to ccme from England. Although their last album, Wishbone Four, was somewhat uneven; their discs have been warmly received by the critics. Argus was one of the best albums to be released in 1972. With this LP, Wishbone Ash proves that they're no fluke.

Material ranges from all their albums and surprisingly, it's the best. The album has the clear, crisp sound that a "live" album should have. Wishbone doesn't play sloppily either. Instrumentation is on the level of Yes in concert (we all know how good Yes is). Again, vocal harmonies are very good (I wonder if Jon Anderson hasn't been teaching them the art of good vocal work!).

My favorite cuts are "The Pilgrim" and "The Ballad of the Beacon." I must stress that everything on this disc is great; so it's really hard to pick favorites. Do yourself a favour and pick up this album. It's fantastic and probably the best "live" album to be released this year.

NEXT COME ON

Freedom exists only in the denial of intellectual, experiential, and authoritarian rules (in the spirit of freedom, this cannot be "a tract for the masses"). Desire limits freedom, for what is it that causes men to become entwined with authoritarian structures, in the aim of money, doing one's duty, etc. Destroy desire and you are free. But be prepared to die, because the maintenance of life is the greatest bondage of all. Or be prepared to have all sorts of shit storms descend on you.

A Review Travelling Incognito

THE BEST OF IAN AND SYLVIA
(2 record set on Columbia)
by Pete Forget

Hal, do we have a copy of Poor Richard's on board? I want to find out what's happening on the old campus this weekend. You lose touch with things out here in Jupiter's orbit. I used to have some pretty wild weekends at UMASS before I graduated and went to training school down at NASA.

Yes, Dave. I have stored the contents of this week's Poor Richard's newspaper in my memory bank. Would you like me to read it back to you?

Well, not all of it Hal. What's on page one?

There is a picture of a woman climbing the side of the world's tallest library in a pair of Earth shoes. The caption reads, "With these shoes, I just love walking to class."

Things have sure changed there, Hal.

On page two, there is a detailed review of the movie "2001" by film critic Clod Zesty. A beautiful film featuring stunning imagery and spectacular visual effects which complement the brilliant musical score in a superbly directed scheme of montage and symbolism....

Release the pod bay doors, Hal. I think I'm going to be sick.

On the next page, there is a review of The Best of Ian and Sylvia album.

The best of whom, Hal? I know I've been in space for twelve years, but I try to keep up with contemporary jazz.

It isn't a jazz album, Dave. Ian and Sylvia is a married singing duo who perform traditional folk music and country and western music in their own style. Ian was a singing cowboy who met Sylvia in a nightclub. They've been recording for years and have just released a collection of twenty two songs on Columbia. Both performers are fine singers and musicians. An excellent group called "The Great Speckled bird" plays with them.

The album is a beautiful low-keyed production with a country flavor. It features a sensitive treatment of such subjects as hard drug addiction, the vanishing natural beauty of America.....

I'd like to see some of that myself, Hal.

The reviewer continues by saying that the album contains a wide variety of material from game songs to a 'sixty rock hit, all of it tastefully performed. The album is basically for listeners who can appreciate C & W music emphasizing vocal harmony and original lyrics, not for heavy-rock freaks.

That's enough, Hal. What about local entertainment?

200 Motels is playing in the Campus Center Cinemas 4, 5, 6, 7. Midnight Cowboy is playing in T-5 and T-6 Southwest. Cops and Robbers is running at the University Drive-In. Executive Action is featured at the plush Whitmore Cinema In-The-Round. Little Caesar, Charley Varrick, The Don Is Dead and Return of the Godfather are playing at the new Fountain of Charms Mall in Hadley.

What about music, Hal?

Crisco and the Thrillers are in the Patch this week.

Blind Tangerine Greene is at the Musty Grail. Milky Way is in the Blue Wall.

Far out, Hal.

I.B.N.U. is at the Glub.

That's enough Hal, really. I'm so homesick, I can't take it.

Ted Taught Us is at the Top of the Campus. Some of my best nights are at the Neckers.

That does it, Hal.

Don Playall is in the Rage.

I hate to do this, Hal but....

The playful Dead is playing My circuits are failing, Daave.......

PRESERVATION ACT 1-
THE KINKS (RCA LPL1-5002)
Time: 38:19

With Preservation Act 1, Ray Davies has written an ultimate horror story, a journey to the depth of entropy. Davies' haunting musical trip contrasts the world views of the simple tramp whose existential fantasies give him no desire to partake in the evil, corrupted world outside, with the ultimate capitalist, materialist, known as Flash, who along with his cronies in the den, strive to destroy, to demolish.

THE KINKS★PRESERVATION ACT 1

The Kinks have always been gifted with the ability to convey vivid vignettes which have been presented in the forms of social commentary, sarcasm, and wit Though unlike any of their previous works, Preservation succeeds completely on the musical and lyrical plains. Davies flashes back to the Village Green days with references to Johnny Thunder, here one of the survivors of a time best forgotten, and to the Village Green itself. Early in the morning, the Green symbolizes purity, apart and away from the wickedness which still sleeps yet is so close at hand. But as the day (or life) gets into full swing, the Green gets defiled, actually raped, and ultimately its image is demolished. All that remains pure is the poor tramp whose naivity allows him to spend his time sitting in the midday sun. Yet, he has got his pride, and though everyone thinks he's crazy, he is really what it's all about.

"Everybody thinks I'm crazy.
And everybody thinks I'm dumb
But when I see the people shouting at each other
I'd rather be an out of work bum."

Davies' religion transcends the institutionalized kind and is seated in ultimate humanism: the realization that racing with the rats creates nothing but treadmill fever. Protestant ethic be damned. The antagonist whose life revolves around money and demolition will die without realizing that there is more to life than the here and now necessity to make a buck quick. Flash's philosophy is summed up in "Demolition":

"It's time to make some money
It's time to get rich quick
It's the wonderful world of capitalism
I've got to make a profit."

So Davies takes us on a voyage from purity and beauty to money and corruption, and the strength of the latter prevails.

Preservation Act 1 says more about life than most novels, and I can't help but express my joy that not only is Davies continuing to write, but that his writing which in the past has been so diverse and at time brilliant, has evolved one step further. Musically, Preservation contains some of the Kinks' finest moments. "Sweet Lady Geneviere", "Where Are They Now", and "Money and Corruption-I Am Your Man" are simply magnificent.

Perhaps it is not right to get so enthusiastic over such a pessimistic record, yet knowing that all is destroyed in the end only makes me want to go back to the beginning where all is well. Perhaps knowing the future, we can improve the present. God Save The Kinks.

—David Sokol

Jive Music:
Mad Angel
Bluewall
Dec. 7

The only reason so many people stayed was probably that they were curious as to who exactly was this Mad Angel, with four roadies, a sound man, a light man, and even two women fans complete with Worcester's Own Mad Angels printed on their chests. What did the Bluewall do to deserve such an honor, or was it some kind of benefit?

Instrumentally, they were tight, at least tight enough for the Bluewall. Vocally, there was definitely something missing, maybe a good lead singer. But this thought only came to me occasionally, and didn't seem to really bother anyone too much. When they tried to harmonize it came out sounding very similar to the Andrew Sisters, but they were missing their green army skirts and the tired-looking UMies surrounding them barely resembled the cheering soldiers of World War II.

Their songs, all written by members of the band, were varied enough to keep you from falling asleep but still included enough traits to keep it from being new and unpredictable. They've played at Katy's, Lucifer's and the Kenmore Club, but so could Nellie and her French Horns, given a lucky break. But still, is the music more important or are the lights, four roadies, and clothes the key? And just because you may have a few Boston clubs under your belt, does that mean you are musically proficient and have to stop trying? That's not how I heard it.

—lorianne

Jive Music:
Mad Angel
Bluewall
Dec. 7

Mad Angel is a band from Worcester that has been together for a year and a half, although they certainly don't sound it. They write all their own material and only play original tunes, though original isn't quite what they sound like. Imagine any cliched lyric, they sing it; any average riff, they play it. Robby Zicaro does a very good job on drums, but he is the only exceptional one in the group. Don Thayer (bass), Jimmy D'Angelo (guitar and Organ) and Joe D'Angelo (also guitar and organ) are all average. None of them can really sing, but they try very hard.

This group is commercially minded. Their main goal is to get an album out and this goal has become a full time job. Their material is a blend of such commerical stuff as to be boring. When they aren't taping, practicing or paying off their equipment debts, they are fooling around with professional light and sound shows. They should be working on a unique professional sound instead.

Mad Angel is a group of nice guys who deserve a chance, but they will have to get a tighter, less commercial sound. Leave your groupies behind, boys, and just enjoy your own music. You might get somewhere if you don't try so hard.

ROOM TO GROW-BARNABY BYE
(Atlantic SD 7273)

I saw Barnaby Bye, a new group from New York, perform this summer in Boston. They were extremely impressive with amazing four-part harmonies (they're a four man band) resembling those of the Beatles or of C,S,N and Y, although infinitely tighter than those of Stills and company. Their instrumental work was excellent both acoustically and electrically, and it fit the type of pop and soft rock which is their strength.

They have released a first album, "Room to Grow", on Atlantic records and it is at least slightly disappointing. Pepi Castro's (formally of Blues Magoos) strong lead guitar and Bobby Alessi's (from the "Hair" Broadway stage band) excellent keyboard-work are sacrificed in the mix, in favor of the already-strong vocals. It's not that the vocals are not deserving of attention, they are excellent and form the basis of Barnaby Bye's unique style, but they are often not enough to compensate for the weak song-writing displayed, especially on side two. There are several songs included in the album which are noteworthy including "Laneya", "I Think I'm Going to Like It" and "I Feel For You", but by and large the album is weak and pretty, hiding the group's real strengths.

If you have a chance to see Barnaby Bye live, take it. Even if you're not a fan of the sort of music they do, the vocal work and especially the acoustic instrumental backing is worth hearing. Room to Grow just doesn't reflect it.

WRINGING APPLAUSE — BRIAN ALEXANDER ROBERTSON
(Ardent ADS-2804)

Wringing Applause is more than just a rock album; it is an exceptionally exciting musical-theatrical production conceived, written, arranged and performed on piano by Brian Alexander Robertson. With the support of Herbie Flowers on bass and Barry Morgan on drums, (British sessionmen noted for their work with Elton John, Harry Nilsson and Carly Simon). Robertson's terrifying, personally myopic vision, which is his life story, is remarkably transformed onto vinyl. It consists of ten new songs, each personal, enigmatic parable that reveals the genius — once flourishing, now tormented — inside Brian's soul. Robertson's recorded schizophrenia makes for an incredible and believable piece of private anguish and is, in the final analysis, a true masterpiece.

TAKIN MY TIME—BONNIE RAITT
(Warner Bros. BS-2729)

A lot of good people helped Bonnie Raitt make her latest album, and it would take too long to name them all. Almost needless to say, Freebo is playing his Fender Fretless Bass on all but one song; Taj Mahal does bass on that, while Freebo plays tuba. The album reflects the people who created it — it's also good.

Bonnie is not afraid to do new things, nor is she skittish about doing old songs. This album includes "Let Me In" by Y. Baker (nothing like a great new version of an oldie) and "Wah She Go Do" by McCarth Lewis, a reggae number. She also does Mose Allison's "Everybody's Cryin' Mercy", Jackson Browne's "I Thought I Was A Child" and Randy Newman's "Guilty". The best cuts on the album are Chris Smither's "I Feel the Same" (Bonnie toured with him for a while) and "Write Me A Few Of Your Lines-Kokomo Blues" written by Fred McDowell. These are especially good if you admire Bonnie for her rich and powerful alto voice.

There are no bad songs on this album. Bonnie Raitt proves that she can add to someone else's song and make it sound personal, so not only do you appreciate the song for the original version, but for the feeling she lends to it as well. There aren't that many good albums coming out these days, so don't waste time and money on those. Run out and buy this, put it on your turntable, relax and enjoy.

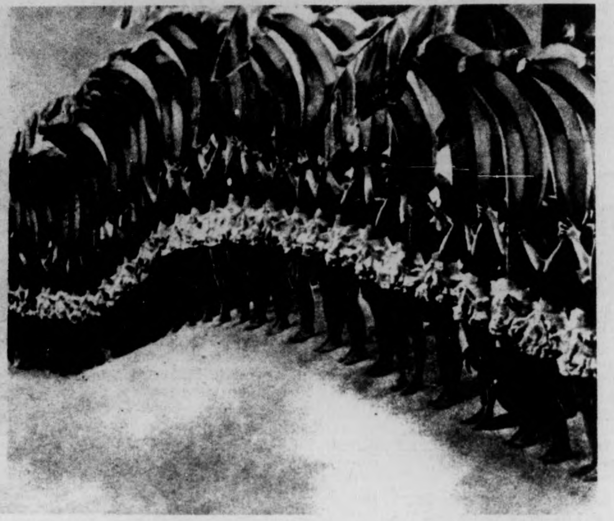
Spend A Weekend With Carmen Miranda And The Gang

by Robert Nesti

The Gang's All Here

Screenplay by Walter Bullock, based upon a story by Nancy Wintner, George Root, Jr., and Tom Bridges; directed by Busby Berkeley; with Carmen Miranda, Alice Faye, Benny Goodman and his orchestra, Charlotte Greenwood, Edward Everett Horton, Sheila Ryan and Eugene Pallette. Oirignally released in 1943. To be shown Friday and Saturday, 12/14, 12/15 at 7:30 and 9:30 in Mahar.

Carmen Miranda.



Some of the many bananas, of The Gang's All Here.

The Gang's All Here has Carmen Miranda singing "The Lady In the Tutti-Fruiti Hat" admidst fifty chorus girls carrying six foot bananas; Alice Faye torching her way through a war bride's lament "No Love, No Nothin" as she caresses her missing husband's slipper; Benny Goodman singing "Padooka" (". . . if you wanna you car rhyme it with Bazooka"); the great Charlotte Greenwood performing anatomical wonders as she adds a new twist to the jitterbug; and a blazing, kaleidoscopic finale which remains director Busby Berkeley's testament as a naive surrealist and a master conjurer of the infectuous lunacy of the medium. Busby Berkeley worked as director and/or choreographer on more than fifty films and this film remains the most ebullient and satisfying. He has never been more extravagant or in as firm control of material, and this is going some. Berkeley is the choreographer who, almost single-handedly, rescued the film musical from probable oblivion in the early Thirties through his highly cinematic and often bizarre staging of musical numbers. He staged dancing, flourescent violins in Golddiggers of 1933, then came back with swirling white pianos for the next film in that series some two years later. He placed a piercing, choking social commentary entitled "Remember My Forgotten Man" to give an eloquent finale to the frivolous Golddiggers Of 1933. He created one of the finest pieces of musical story telling ever to be found in an American film in his timeless setting of the classic song "Lullaby Of Broadway", again found in The Golddiggers of 1935, which is so expansive that a young lady falls out a window to her deeth while a giant chorus tap out the song's melody. But none of these, for all their campiness and brilliantly staged fun, can compare to the wonder of The Gang's All Here.

The story is little more than a ridiculous trifle about a chorus girl at a New York night club who falls in love with a Marine and waits while he fights in the Pacific. The story is so ridiculous that it seems like an excuse to fill the space between musical numbers which, thankfully, take up at least half the running time of the picture. The film was made in 1943 and is the quintessential Forties musical; it's filled with the joyful spirit of wartime America as only Hollywood can fabricate. Our hero chases our heroine from her nightclub to an adjacent Army Canteen where Benny Goodman and his orchestra are playing and the camera slowly scans the energetic jitterbuggers. Everyone's always jitterbugging, or doing the Conga, or a rhumba, or a new dance sensation called the Uncle Samba. The reason for all these Latin American-influenced dances can be answered in one name: Carmen Miranda. As the nightclub star Dorita, Carmen Miranda is one of the great illusionary figures on the screen: I am sure she's not real. She's simply an apparition wearing nine inch platforms and foot high fruit headdresses. (If she was real, she was no more than four feet tall). She comes pretty close to stealing the film away from its director with her irresistable homely looks and her delightful flair with malopropisms. Her parrot beak, quick smile (and quick temper), flamboyant dress, and wonderful singing delivery make her the envy of any female impersonator who has ever seen one of her movies. The Gang's All Here has her finest moment on the screen: the banana ballet where fifty chorus girls make strange dancing partners with six-foot bananas. Berkeley makes the whole thing work with his clever use of slow motion and other trick devices which give a graceful, balletic shape to the number. Carmen is the Lady in the Tutti-Fruiti Hat and never has technicolor been this intense. The fruit in her headdress literally glow, not to mention the pure, cartoon tones of the giant bananas and strawberries, and the blue, blue sky. And what the bananas and strawberries do in this number is probably the most explicit sexual reference ever seen in an American film.

Other apparitions appear in The Gang's All Here, the most obvious being Charlotte Greenwood who seems to simply float, like a beautifully endowed, mystical creature, as she kicks her gorgeous legs high above her waist and grins her etherial smile. Charlotte Greenwood has always been one of Hollywood's leading character actresses continually playing wacky, gangly society matrons and the like. While catelogueing the real and imagined, Alice Faye definitely sits in the former category. Any acress who could possibly say to her beau: "Quit acting like Don Ameche, and call me a cab" has to be real.

During the Thirties Berkeley designed elaborate, ridiculous, masterpieces of cinematic "kitsh" for Warner Brothers. He was loaned out to Twentieth Century Fox for this film and that studio's excellent technicolor crew matched effect-for-effect with Berkeley. The results showcase a disarming, imaginative artist working at the peak of his creative powers. The ending of the film, a huge ballet featuring women carrying neon hoops, is packed with a multitude of neat, technical effects that agment this particularly bizarre finale Berkeley has fashioned. Some critics have compared the effect of this section as being a visual equivalent of Huxley's experiences under mescalin, although, like the sexual references, Berkeley probably didn't intend them in such a way. They came without trying, as does the joy this film can bring an audience. It's revival today points to the acceptance of Berkeley as true magician of dynamic effect, and audiences are ritualistic about the picture in a light, carefree way. It's a film definitely worth seeing once and very well may be one of the most enjoyable times you'll have at a movie musical since the last time you saw Singing In The Rain, the greatest musical of all times, directed by Stanley Donen and Gene Kelly, which owes much of its irresistable charm and foot loose spunk to the talents of one man: Busby Berkeley.

THE MONTH YOU MISSED — January was the month when the snow came. Needless to say things were prettier at UMass a week ago. Back then even the paved walk across the Campus Pond bridge was like a country path.

Emergency Energy Bill Sent Back To House

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate voted yesterday to send emergency energy legislation back to conference with the House to resolve a controversy over windfall profits by the oil industry.

The action, which had been urged by the White House, delays and possibly kills the bill that would have given President Nixon authority to order gasoline rationing and other mandatory energy conservation measures. Before the 57 to 37 vote, Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., chief architect of the bill, warned that if the measure were sent back to conference, "it's going to die."

In a letter to Senate Republican Leader Hugh Scott, Nixon said, "We have been able to make do without emergency energy legislation thus far, and I urge you and your colleagues to take the additional time required for developing a truly responsible product."

House Commerce Committee Chairman Harley O. Staggers, D-W. Va., head of the House conferees, agreed that the recommittal vote probably would kill the bill. "Isn't that something?" he added.

The motion to recommit was sponsored by Sen. Gaylord Nelson, D-Wis., who claimed the windfall profits provision was "unworkable, unenforceable and most probably unconstitutional." The controversial provision would go into effect next year and allow consumers to apply retroactively for refunds on fuel prices which could be proved to have resulted in excess profits. The President would be authorized to set prices on petroleum products in order to prevent oil companies from earning excess profits.

Jackson acknowledged that the provision was "far from perfect" but he had insisted on keeping it in the bill as a spur to Congress to enact a more comprehensive windfall tax law.

In other energy developments yesterday.

—Energy officials unveiled new gasoline rationing coupons they have been printing under authority of a different law. Federal energy sources said gasoline rationing is likely to be needed this summer if the Arab oil embargo is neither lifted nor eased.

—Energy Director William E. Simon said "it is important that the American people realize that the current shortage is not a temporary aberration." In a speech, Simon said "scarce high-cost energy will be the rule for many years if not indefinitely."

Sen. Jackson and other supporters of the emergency energy bill had anticipated an effort by Republicans and oil-state senators to send the bill back to conference.

A similar coalition had organized a filibuster that prevented passage of the bill before Christmas. Jackson blamed efforts to block the bill on what he called intensive lobbying by the oil industry and the White House. But he apparently was taken by surprise when it was announced that the motion to recommit would be offered by

Sewer Tie Possible For Arts Center

By BILL DENSMORE

The door was opened yesterday for a possible solution to an environmental problem that had threatened to block the opening of the new $16 million Fine Arts Center next month.

The asst. dir. of the state Division of Water Pollution Control (DWPC) recommended yesterday that the center, be considered for exemptions from a ban on tie-ins to the town sewer system.

The DWPC imposed the ban last February, after an environmental group claimed the system was overloaded during peak periods--sometimes to twice its capacity.

Five other UMass buildings, along with new construction by eighteen private developers in Amherst, had been prohibiting from connecting with the system by the ban.

The developers petitioned the division for exemptions during hearings July 26 conducted by asst. dir. William Slagle.

Yesterday's recommendation by Slagle, which must be approved after a ten-day review period by DWPC director Thomas C. McMahon appears to allow the UMass buildings to tie-in because they are not residential and will not result in a net increase of sewerage flowing into the system. Developers may file comments during the renew period.

The ruling said connection applications will be considered, "where the town and the proposed user of the connection can demonstrate conclusively that no additional flow of sewage to the municipal collection system will result from such connection."

"Basically, there is too much sewage for the existing Amherst treatment plant and the existing Amherst sewage system treatment system," Slagle said from his Boston office yesterday.

"If, as UMass alleges, they are getting out of cramped buildings and using a larger one in the same area - that could be a reason why the buildings could be allowed to tie-in," he added.

By that rationale, the Fine Arts Center could tie-in because it will contain academic departments and facilities relocated from other buildings on campus, rather than a newly created department. However, some developers have suggested that UMass was being treated favorably because it is a state agency.

Duncan Bremer, an Amherst spokesman for developer Papparazzo, called Slagle's recommendation "outrageous."

"If it's safe and sanitary for the University to hook in I don't see why it isn't for anyone else," he said.

The Papparazzo development will not be initially affected, because the firm sought and obtained permission from the state to build its own sewage treatment plant. The firm was not one of the 18 which intervened in the hearings which resulted in yesterday's action.

Amherst Atty. Paul Ford, who represents a number of the intervening developers, said yesterday he could not comment on the ruling because he hadn't read it yet.

Jonathan Souwaine, a Mass. Public Interest Research Group (Mass PIRG) lawyer in Amherst said he couldn't yet comment on the ramifications of yesterday's ruling, saying: "An additional tie-in that didn't increase the original amount of sewage ought to be OK."

Souwaine said the University has presented a "fairly convincing case" that the Fine Arts Center would fit that category.

A UMass spokesman was unavailable for comment.

(Staff Photo - Al Chapman)

IT'S FINISHED, BUT WILL THE TOILETS FLUSH? — $16 million Fine Arts Center was in danger of not opening next fall because its sewer pipes were prohibited from hooking into the town system. But a ruling yesterday almost guarantees that it will — and on schedule — including the second-floor gallery area shown in this photo.

That Was the Month That Was —

Sewer Problems

The inadequate Amherst town sewer system continues to be a subject of controversy ever since the state Division of Water Pollution Control (WPC) told the town February 26, 1973 no one could connect to the system until it is brought up to standards.

Donald Grant, a Northampton developer who is building "Eastwood Estates" on Grantwood Drive in North Amherst, obtained a temporary restraining order against the sewer tie-in ban January 2 in probate court.

Another direct result of the ban was the announcement January 10 by Town Manager Allan Torrey of plans to build a $9 million biological secondary waste treatment plant west of the UMass athletic fields.

The new plant would complement the existing primary plant at the same site which has only removed 35 per cent of the raw sewage from the system before it flows into the Connecticut River. It would have a 7 million gallons per minute (GPM) capacity and remove 90 per cent of the raw sewage. The town averaged 4 million GPM of sewage in 1973.

Busses or Bust

A controversy is brewing in Amherst over the way to spend $199,000 in state funds -- whether for a mass transportation system or road and highway construction.

The Committee on Public Transportation which has been studying the possibility of a mass transportation system, suggested it could be implemented.

Members of the committee say the system would be based initially on the existing bus routes of UMass. The town, they say, could add routes to the UMass system and fund additional buses to overloaded routes. They will present their findings to the public in February.

Town Manager Allen Torrey said the funds should be used for road and highway construction because the money was not allocated for mass transportation use and the Selectmen haven't developed a policy on it.

Also, the Amherst Selectmen have formed a Special Committee on Amherst on Resources Conservation and Energy (SCARCE). Its duties include: reviewing availability distribution and allocation of energy sources, e.g. heating oil and gas; proposing measures to conserve energy for business and private citizens; considering guidelines policies and staff requirements for possible rationing on natural resources.

Cheap Water

An item asking for a uniform water rate for all users will be included in a special town meeting on March 4. UMass currently gets a small discount and its costing the town money.

The current rate is 34 cents per 1,000 cubic feet of water used. But UMass gets a reduced rate as an institutional user -- 24 cents per 1,000 cubic feet. Since the University uses 48.7 per cent of the town's water supply, it pays only 41.7 of the cost. The break went into effect in 1969.

Infirmary Move

As interior construction on the new wing at the infirmary nears completion, workers will begin moving the medical records area, information desk, and waiting room into the addition on Thursday.

According to Mrs. Emily Sears, Supervisor of Medical Records, an automated filing system will be installed, enabling employees to locate a patient's file in a matter of seconds, thus cutting down on waiting time.

The appointments desk will also be moved from the second floor of the infirmary to the first floor in the new wing.

The vacated space on the first floor will undergo extensive remodeling as doctors' offices are installed and labs are enlarged.

Nuclear Reactor Near

A $1.3 billion, double-reactor nuclear power plant may be built in Montague, ten miles north of Amherst by Northeast Utilities, a conglomorate of the major New England electric companies based in Hartford.

The firm announced on December 28 plans for starting construction in 1976 of the two reactors on the Montague plains pending Atomic Energy Commission hearings and approval.

Each unit would be capable of generating 850,000 kilowatts of power, considerably more than either of the two others in the New England area.

The twin plants would be boiling reactors with large cooling towers. Water from the Connecticut River would be used for cooling. The first reactor would go into use around 1981.

The company's next step is to seek approval from the AEC and from state and federal authorities. The hearing process will take two years. If a license is issued, construction is expected to take at least four years.

A number of local and regional groups are opposing or questioning the safety and environmental suitability of the utilities proposal.

One, the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group, (Mass PIRG), has serious reservations about nuclear power in general and called on Governor Sargent to declare a statewide moratorium on plant construction in mid-January.

The Hampshire Geological Society informed Montague Selectman that the scheduled site lies within a mile of the major border fault of the Connecticut River Valley and construction will cause several engineering problems.

WMPIRG Is Mass

The Western Mass. Public Interest Research Group (WMPIRG) is dead in name, but alive otherwise.

The Ralph Nader-inspired, two-year old consumer and environmental advocacy group funded through college semester bills is now hooked up with its eastern Mass. counterpart to become Mass PIRG. The organization has an eight person staff, offices in Boston and Amherst, and can now deal with legislative as well as environmental issues, says director Ronald E. Bogard.

Chief focus now is promoting a nuclear power plant construction moratorium in Massachusetts. The group announced January 10 it has filed state legislation to do just that. Mass PIRG considers them unsafe and envrionmentally unsound.

The utilities feel otherwise, needless to say. The main reason for the Mass PIRG moratorium push is Northeast Utilities' decision to build a nuclear power plant in Montague, 10 miles north of Amherst.

Archie in Amherst

Former Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox and Senate Watergate committee-member Lowell P. Weicker, Jr. (R-Conn.) were among speakers at the second annual week-long Copeland Colloquium run by Amherst College.

Cox drew 2,500 to his speech in the college's cage last Tuesday - the largest crowd since defeated vice-presidential hopeful and Amherst alumnus Sen. Thomas Eagleton (D.-Missouri) spoke a year ago.

He skirted direct Watergate disclosures, but urged Americans to define impeachible offenses not in terms of illegal acts but rather as acceptable standards of Presidential conduct.

Cox said he didn't know if there was sufficient Watergate evidence to impeach Nixon but saw no legal barriers to supoenaing Nixon to testify before the Watergate grand jury.

He praised the work of the current special prosecutor Leon Jaworrski and criticized White House aides who placed their loyalty to the president above all else.

Weicker's speech to 1,500 was simple and direct, focusing on the ills the beset America and urging reverence for the Constitution.

He limited Watergate discussion to a pre-speech press conference Friday saying he did not want new public hearings by the Senate Committee and revealing that he is preparing a minority report on the scandal for delivery to the Senate February 28.

He called on Vice President Ford and Senate Republican leader Hugh Scott to give the evidence under oath they say will exonerate Nixon in Watergate.

Yes They Could

Everywoman's Center, the continuing education and counselling service for Connecticut Valley women funded by UMass and located in Goodell Hall, received an award in mid-January.

The citation came at the end of a day-long fair at Boston's Prudential Center auditorium celebrating the achievements of women in Massachusetts. The fair, called "Yes We Can" was organized by the Governors' Commission on the Status of Women", and was broadcast live, channel 4.

Unlike the other citations, no single person received the Everywoman award. Rather, it was given for the achievements of the center as a collective force working to upgrade the status of women in western Massachusetts.

Grad Has Gripe

A dispute between a 32-year-old UMass grad student and the linguistics department went unresolved at a first hearing in Boston's Federal District court last Friday.

Thomas Manwell, a former teaching assistant in the linquistics dept. and rhetoric graduate student claims he was not fairly treated when the linguistics department failed to rehire him last fall. A sixteen-page brief filed by Manwell's lawyer says he was unable to resume his graduate studies because he ran out of funds after he lost the teaching job.

More Truckers Protest

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

More violence was reported Tuesday in connection with the continuing protest by independent truckers. West Virginia State Police said that one truck was hit by gunfire and another by rocks or bricks in the early morning hours.

The police said the protests seemed to be the "most plausible cause" of the two incidents, one at 1 a.m. and one at 3 a.m.

They also said they assumed that a bomb threat Monday which resulted in the closing of two bridges was connected with the demonstrations.

Independent truckers have been staging demonstrations and work stoppages for eight days to protest high fuel costs and low freight rates. Some driver-owners have urged a nationwide shutdown on Thursday.

Police in Pennsylvania and Ohio reported arrests, gunshots, burned rigs and threats against truckers in their states on Monday and at least two shooting incidents were reported in Ohio overnight.

— Intersession in Amherst

The judge in the case has asked for substantiating papers from Manwell's lawyer, Atty. Brruce Berlin of the Western Mass. Legal Services, Greenfield office.

Eric and Voting

A civil suit against the town of Amherst charging it deprived students of their voting rights in the town's elections last year should be settled in a few days.

Eric Walgren, 34, an unsuccessful candidate for selectman charges the town with violating student's voting rights by deliberatly holding the primary during UMass semester break.

The verdict will be delivered within days by Judge Arthur Garrity of U.S. District Court in Boston. Walgren hopes Garrity will rule the election void and order a special election for the seat now held by Selectman Merle Howes.

Whatever the verdict, Walgren has already won an important goal in bringing the suit. Amherst selectman have voted to ensure that future elections be held when a maximum number of voters will be in the town.

According to Town Clerk Estelle Matusko, 3,000 students were registered voters.

Ed Marathon OK

The School of Education Marathon '74, a combination of educational seminars, lectures, movies, discussions and happenings formerly held each spring and fall, wound up last Friday after two weeks.

Free of the kind of conflict which closed two previous Marathons, the intersession event was run in the rennovated Hills Halls office and classroom complex. Happening titles included "Power to the People", "Alternative Schools", "The Contract System", and Dean Dwight Allen's "The School of Education: Where It Was; What It Is; Where It's Going."

One of the main speakers was Ms. Eleanor Duckworth, the "personal interpreter" in the U.S. of Jean Piaget, a child developmental psychologist. Duckworth conducted a workshop with children to learn about their reasoning process.

One panel featured discussion with officers and inmates of the Berkshire House of Correction and UMass graduate students.

The Center for Theater Techniques in Education offered a full day workshop called "Theater Improvisation for Teachers, Students and Administrators."

The second annual law conference was the other major activity over the Jan. 14-Jan. 26 intersession -- the first week was cancelled to save energy. "Before the Law", sponsored by the Legal Studies Program, was run in four Herter classrooms. Both the marathon and the law conference were open to the public or to UMass students for modular credit.

Top Telescope

The National Science Foundation (NSF) announced last Tuesday an initial one-year grant of $252,000 for construction of a millimeter wave radio telescope for the Five College radio astronomy observatory near Quabbin Reservoir.

"When completed this will be the largest facility of its kind in the country and will make the University of Massachusetts at Amherst one of the most important university radio astronomy centers in the U.S.," according to observatory director Prof. G. Richard Huguenin.

The telescope will be built over three years with a total grant of $750,000 from NSF and additional funds from UMass. It will be used to study inorganic and organic molecules in deep space.

"200th" Meeting

468 delegates from 135 Massachusetts cities and towns came to a two-day conference at the Campus Center last weekend to exchange plans and coordinate ways of celebrating the United State's 200th anniversary next year.

Conferees heard an address by Lt. Gov. Donald D. Dwight at the Massachusetts Bicentennial Commission (MBC) sponsored conference.

Money was a central issue at many of the workshops because the Legislature has yet to appropriate funds for the full-spectrum of transportation and lodging facilities needed for the anticipated millions who will visit historic sites all over the state beginning April 19, 1975.

Oops Sorry

The University has paid a former student $4,000 in an out-of-court settlement resulting from a suit the student brought for false arrest, false imprisonment, and assault and battery.

Edward K. Davidian, now 24, was a senior in Gorman dormitory when arrested in his room May 15, 1972 by UMass police for allegedly breaking windows. He said he was held nine hours in the town jail, and refused bail although it was mandatory for the charges he faced.

Charges were dismissed three days later when UMass police found they had the wrong person. The $4,000 settlement came after the case went to federal district court in Boston last fall. The amount was paid by an insurance policy the police carry for such occasions.

Buildings Bought

Part of the property of the now-defunct Northampton School for Girls has been bought by the state for possible use as a mental health treatment center.

The sale came after weeks of furious negotiations between the school, the state and a number of private individuals. Assistant Secretary of Human Services James Hillard said last Friday the state would buy 14 acres of the 20-acre school for $275,000. A coalition of private owners bought the rest, including twelve buildings, for $700,000.

The site had been suggested as a 100-150 person residential mental health center, a use which would alleviate crowded conditions at Northampton State Hospital.

New Super Soon

The Amherst-Pelham Regional School Committee is planning to choose a new superintendant from among six final candidates by February 1.

The position was vacated last summer when former superintendant Ronald E. Fitzgerald left to take a more prestigous position as director of the state Advisory Council on Education.

Save Mt. Holyoke

The state Dept. of Natural Resources (DNR) is moving ahead with a plan to buy 3,200 acres of privately-owned land above the 450-foot level on the Mt. Holyoke mountain range.

The acquisition, slated to begin after appraisal of the preoperty by DNR, is intended to set aside the east-west running mountains south of UMass as historic and recreational areas free from development.

DNR Commissioner Arthur Brownell outlined the $4 to $5 million purchase plan to 70 area residents last Thursday at Hampshire College. 5,100 acres would eventually be involved, he said.

Murder Sentences

Allen Lee Bilodeau, 24, and Henry Bys, Jr., 23, were convicted last week of murdering a Smith College coed. They were both sentenced to life imprisonment but are expected to appeal the Northampton District Court judgement.

The two picked up Monica B. Tims, a Smith sophomore, as she hitchhiked in Amherst towards the College, then beat her and killed her with a tire-iron, leaving her body beside the Connecticut River in the isolated Ox Box area in Northampton.

Tuition Up

..MEDFORD (AP) — Tufts University will announce today an increase in undergraduate tuition by $100, to $3,300 a year, effective with the 1974 fall term.

In addition, a $325-a-year-increase was announced for room and board charges, bringing that figure to $1,840.

UMass Prof. Pushing Solar

For most Americans, the energy "crisis" began sometime last fall, after the Arab nations nationalized U.S. oil interests and embargoed exports and about the same time President Nixon proclaimed the crisis on network television.

But like most public policy crises, the energy shortage didn't develop overnight. Scientists, engineers and even environmentalists preached its coming for years, although they didn't expect it as soon as 1973.

Among the prophets of an energy shortage who decided to do something about the crunch between energy supply and energy demand is Dr. William E. Heronemus, 53, associate head of civil engineering department in Marston Hall.

The engineering professor, who serves on a solar energy panel advising President Nixon, is head of a 25-man team that has a one-year $250,000 National Science Foundation (NSF) grant to study alternative energy sources.

"Why do we continue to ignore solar energy, including the winds?" asks Heronemus. out of lack of knowledge: scarcely anyone yet knows that solar energy could solve our problems".

In addition to the NSF grant, which is for research and development of "ocean thermal differences" power plants, Heronemus is working in two other areas, both presently unfunded.

--Promoting giant 40-story windmills to capture the moving energy contained in wind and convert it to electrical energy. Heronemus feels such structures are technically feasible, but would be expensive.

The windmill project would involve 14 professors in several different research areas if funded, he said, predicting that 15,000 three-unit windmills could supply all the power New England will need in 1990.

--Construction of a 20 thousand-watt solar thermal heater for a house which would use the suns rays to heat water, then circulate the water around a house to warm it.

The home solar heater will be tested on campus as early as next fall and is being built "slowly but surely" in Marston, according to Heronemus.

The NSF-funded ocean power plants would work with turbines and hot gases in a manner almost indentical to present steam turbine electric power plants, Heronemus said.

Ray Contests Plea

CINCINNATI, Ohio (AP) — James Earl Ray was given a chance Tuesday to contest his guilty plea in the murder of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. because of allegations his attorneys compromised his interests to fatten their pocketbooks.

The 6th U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that Ray, 41, who received a 99-year sentence for the 1968 murder of the civil rights leader, is entitled to a hearing to contest his 1969 guilty plea.

Ray argued that he was not given proper legal advice. He said his lawyers failed to properly investigate his case and that their only interest was to collect royalties on materials written about him.

In a 2-1 decision, the circuit court sent Ray's petition back to the U.S. District Court in Nashville for review.

Ray alleged he was poorly advised by attorney Arthur Hanes, and by Percy Foreman after he fired Hanes. He alleged both were more interested in funds that would accrue from articles and books planned by Alabama author William Bradford Huie than in his defense.

Ray said the lawyers considered his guilty plea paramount to the financial success of the articles and a possible movie on the case.

The court cited two letters written to Ray by Foreman. The first letter said Ray had signed all royalties to Foreman and that Foreman would keep all monies up to $165,000. It also said Ray would get all royalties above that figure if he pleaded guilty and caused no embarrassing circumstances in the courtroom.

The second said Foreman would give $500 to Ray's brother Jerry, "contingent upon the plea of guilty and sentence going through on March 10, 1969 without any unseemly conduct on your part in court."

The court said only by giving Ray a hearing on his contentions "may it be determined whether the plea was intelligent or voluntary or entered as the result of coercion, threats and promises.

"The alllegations...if true, would support a finding that Ray's attorneys deliberately compromised their client's interests in order to further the financial success of Huie's works in which they themselves had a substantial interest.

"Such conduct would constitute an outrageous abrogation of the standards which the legal profession for itself and upon which its clients have a right to rely..."

King was shot April 4, 1968, on a motel balcony in Memphis, Tenn., where he had gone to support a strike by garbage collectors. Ray was later arrested in London, and extradited to this country.

Nixon Prepares Congressional Address

By GAYLORD SHAW
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon goes before Congress Wednesday night with a State of the Union address which aides said would solicit bipartisan cooperation on domestic and foreign issues.

Sources said they expect Nixon to make at least brief reference to the Watergate controversy. But they would not disclose whether the President would squarely confront the question of impeachment or requests by some congressmen that he resign.

The half-hour speech, to be broadcast live by all national radio and TV networks at 9 p.m. EDT, will be Nixon's first address to a joint session since his June 1972 report on his Moscow summit talks.

In addition to the address, Nixon is sending Congress a longer State of the Union message. As this document faced final editing, it was about 100 pages long and ranged over Nixon's domestic and foreign policy including what he considers the administration's accomplishments.

One offficial said the theme of the message is cooperation with the Democratic-controlled Congress. Another said it will suggest that the administration "sit and reason together" in coping with the nation's problems.

Deputy Press Secretary Gerald L. Warren said the President plans "to discuss programs to solve and deal with important issues which are vital to the American people in the fields of foreign and domestic policy."

He would not elaborate on content of Nixon's address or message. Neither would White House counsel or Melvin R. Laird, who told newsmen "I think you will be very pleased by content of the message."

Other sources suggested that Nixon would use the forum for a fresh effort to "put Watergate into perspective."

White House aides and other sources said the Wednesday night address will probably contain these other elements:

Domestic: An outline for his national health insurance plan as well as details of new programs for such areas as transportation and education.

Foreign: A report on U.S.-sponsored negotiations to solve the Middle East crisis, plus at least brief mention of how the administration seeks to overcome the international energy shortage.

Defense: Plans for a record defense budget exceeding $85 billion and a renewed plea to keep America strong militarily as it conducts arms limitation talks with the Soviet Union.

Strikes Hit Israel

By ARTHUR MAX
Associated Press Writer

TEL AVIV (AP)-Prices for basic commodities are climbing rapidly and strikes are once again in vogue in Israel, casting gloom over the joy brought by news that the troops are coming home.

The government, looking for ways to pay cost of the October war, announced Sunday that it would reduce government price subsidies, increasing the cost of such staples as milk, eggs, sugar and flour by an average of 50 per cent.

Restaurant owners are demanding permission to raise prices 25 per cent. Hotel owners want to charge more. Bus companies complain that a planned 50 per cent increase in fares is not enough.

Government economists say the increase in prices for basic commodities will drive up the cost of nearly all food.

Finance Minister Pinhas Sapir says the reduction of subsidies will save the government $238 million next year, only a fraction of what's needed to pay for the war.

He told parliament that the average Israeli must lower his standare of living. "Economically speaking, we are still in a state of war," he said.

"I'm fed up. I'm going to sell this lousy store," said Sheike Grossman, owner of a small grocery. "All day these crazy women complain to me about the prices. It's not my decision. I'm not making any more profit out of it. If I have to throw out unsold milk at the end of the day it costs me more. So who needs this aggravation?"

Labor Hits Reds For Using Crisis

By ARTHUR L. GAVSHON
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP)-Opposition Laborites joined the British government Tuesday in denouncing Communists who, they charge, are trying to exploit the nation's industrial crisis to knock down the elected government.

The move by former Prime Minister Harold Wilson's party came amid persisting reports of secret backstage efforts for a compromise that would head off an all-out strike threatened by the country's 280,000 coal miners.

In the House of Commons, Wilson and Prime Minister Edward Heath traded verbal punches anew, with each blaming the other for imflaming the crisis.

But a Labor party statement said: "We utterly repudiate any attempt by Communists or others to use the miners as a political battering ram to bring about a general strike, or to call on troops to disobey lawful orders in the event of a strike. That is silly and dangerous nonsense."

Judge Orders Nixon To Appear In Court

LOS ANGELES (AP) — John D. Ehrlichman asked Tuesday to have President Nixon subpoenaed as a material witness in Ehrlichman's burglary and conspiracy trial. The judge agreed to issue the unprecedented order.

Superior Court Judge Gordon Ringer ruled that President Nixon is a material witness in the California case against Ehrlichman and two other former White House aides, Watergate burglar G. Gordon Liddy and David Young.

Ringer said he would authorize a subpoena commanding Nixon to appear at a Feb. 25 pretrial hearing and at the April 15 trial.

The White House declined comment until it received the order, but a defense attorney said one of Nixon's attorneys had declined to have the President appear voluntarily and had told him he would advise Nixon against testifying.

Later White House sources indicated the president would decline to appear personally as a witness.

"This will be the first time in history," Ringer said, "that a state court, exclusive of the federal court, has issued this kind of process directly to a president of the United States."

"The court is persuaded that the honorable Richard M. Nixon is a material witness for the defense...The court will sign and issue a properly prepared certificate...commanding the President, the honorable Richard M. Nixon, to testify before this court."

Nixon is sought by the defense to testify about the establishment of the secret White House investigations unit known as the plumbers and as to what instructions he gave it in regard to an investigation of Pentagon papers figure Daniel Ellsberg.

Ringer also ordered former White House aide Egil Krogh to testify. Krogh is to begin serving a six-month federal prison sentence next week in connection with the 1971 break-in.

Women To Blame?

Incredible: Outrageous: Ludicrous:

That's how women responded to a suggestion that the feminist movement is partly to blame for the energy crisis.

John C. Fisher, manager of General Electric Co.'s energy systems planning, made the suggestion Tuesday in a speech in Washington.

The initial reaction from most women was laughter.

"It's an incredible distortion," said Ellen Zawell, head of the National Consumer Congress, as she tried to catch her breath in between giggles. "It's convulsive."

In a more serious vein, Mrs. Zawell said, "We are becoming energy gluttons not because women are out working, but because companies like General Electric are pushing energy-consuming appliances down our throats."

The way Fisher explained it, the liberation movement has meant more women in the working force. And, he added:

"Since most energy consumption is associated with factory and office work and since the rest of energy consumption is accelerated by the affluence that comes from two jobs per family, we find that the changing life-style of Americans with liberated women entering the labor force in the same manner as men, approximately doubles our per capita energy consumption."

The Rationing Debate:

EPA Head: It's Time

BOSTON (AP) — The regional head of the Environmental Protection Agency said Monday he thinks it's time for state-by-state gasoline rationing in New England.

EPA regional administrator John McGlennon said he will recommend that New England governors seriously consider implementing rationing plans in their states.

A spokesman for the EPA, Paul Keough, said New England now faces a 20 per cent shortage of gasoline, compared to 5 per cent nationwide.

"The situation is deteriorating and will be much worse in April or May," he said.

Keough said McGlennon has concluded that voluntary measures, lower speed limits and Sunday gasoline sales bans will not be enough to cope with the gasoline shortage, particularly during spring and summer driving, "even though people are cooperating."

(AP Wirephoto)

VALDOSTA, GA. — With fuel and energy on everyone's mind these days, Donnie Hoffman and Mrs. Lenora Davis team up to conserve energy and enjoy it, too. Donnie found it an easy task to get Mrs. Davis from here to there, but the tough task was putting on the brakes when he got there.

Thomson: No

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — Gov. Meldrim Thomson said today he is opposed to a proposal by the regional administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency that New England states prepare gasoline rationing systems.

Thomson said rationing "would present but one more tier of bureaucratic interference."

John A. S. McGlennon, regional EPA administrator, said Monday he would propose rationing to the New England governors when they meet in Boston Friday.

Thomson said "there is no question that the New England States are being hit the hardest by the gasoline shortage," but he said that "it would behoove those who are screaming for New England regional gasoline rationing to redict their efforts to the end that a more equitable distribution be realized.

"I am one governor who respects the constant grasping for more state powers by bureaucrats who should have the knuckles on their cotton pickin' hands rapped," Thomson said.

Vt.: Unfeasible

MONTPELIER, Vt. (AP) - Vermont's top energy official, Forrest Orr, said Monday a full-fledged gasoline rationing system for the state would not be feasible this year.

Orr said he was surprised at remarks Monday by John McGlennon who heads the regional office of the Environmental Protection Agency. Orr said McGlennon's call for a regional system of gasoline rationing was outside of his area of expertise.

Orr said it appeared that everyone was jumping on the energy bandwagon.

Orr said Vermont does not have the money for a rationing program, and he said rationing must be imposed from the federal level if it is to work.

Springfield Water Spills

BOSTON (AP) — The U.S. Attorney's office says it has charged two Springfield-area companies with violating federal water pollution control statutes.

U.S. Attorney James N. Gabriel said the charges followed an investigation by the federal Environmental Protection Agency.

Gabriel said the Mackin Construction Co. of Greenfield was charged with discharging oil into the Mill River at Northampton and with failure to report the spill. Mackin faces up to $12,500 in fines, Gabriel said.

Also charged was the Hampden Color and Chemical Co. of Springfield, Gabriel said the firm discharged some 3,000 gallons of Sodium hydroxide into the Farmington River at New Boston last August. It faces a $2,500 maximum penalty.

Rationing If Embargo Continues

By BILL NEIKIRK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Gasoline rationing is a strong likelihood this summer if the Arab oil embargo is neither lifted nor eased, federal energy sources said Tuesday.

"If the embargo is not lifted, we'd have a very tough time staying away from rationing," one high source said.

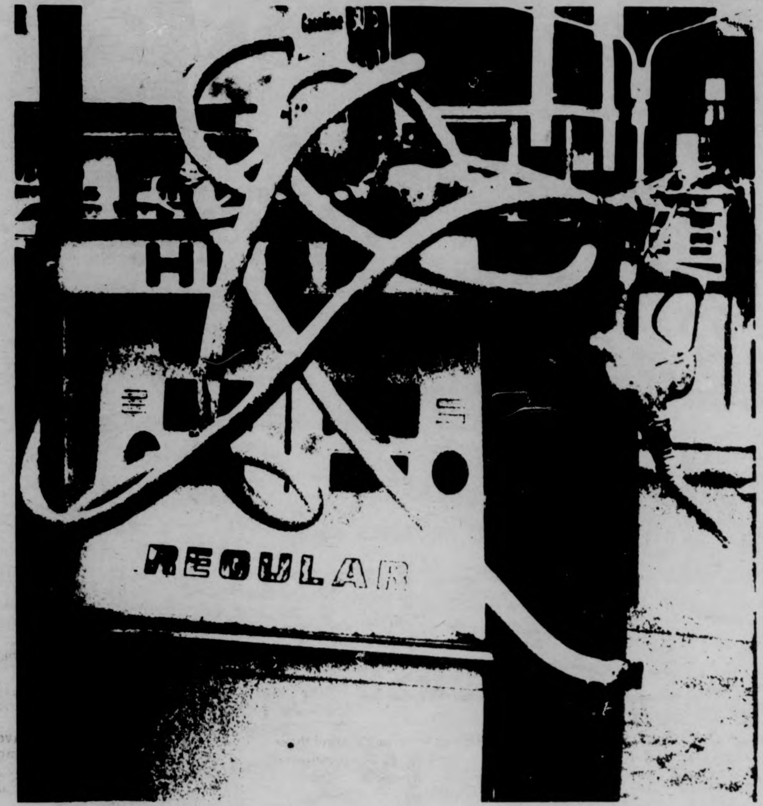
The energy office is concerned that predictions of an early end to the embargo may have been too optimistic, the source said.

Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger predicted that the embargo would be dropped before the Israeli-Arab disengagement is completed this spring.

"We're moving ahead with our standby rationing program," an energy source said. "A lot depends on the embargo. If it isn't lifted, the gasoline situation later this spring and early summer is going to be critical."

Federal Energy Chief William E. Simon ordered the standby rationing program prepared by March 1 just in case it proves necessary.

John A. Sawhill, deputy director of the energy office, remained optimistic that rationing could be avoided.



NEW YORK — One Manhattan service station operator found this solution to show motorists that he's out of gas.

Nelson also objected to some of the environmental provisions suspending clean air guidelines in order to permit power plants to burn high-sulfur oil and coal.

The administration has said it needs the rationing and other powers contained in the bill but wants the measure stripped of the windfall profits provision and others it considers unworkable.

The administration favors its own tax measure which it says would channel any excess profits back into further exploration and development. Besides giving the President the legal authority to impose gasoline rationing, the bill also would:

AEC To Fight Proposed N-Plant

MANCHESTER, N.H. — Public Service Co. of New Hampshire, which wants to build an oceanfront nuclear power plant, confirmed yesterday that the Atomic Energy Commission plans to delay its license.

Frank Shants, a spokesman for the utility, said the company had been advised by the federal agency that it has found the nuclear reactor's cooling system unacceptable.

The federal agency, according to Walter Tingle of the Seacoast Anti-Pollution League, told the utility the cooling tunnels proposed for the Seabrook facility have not been proven safe in case of an earth tremer.

Tingle said the company will have to provide more data showing that the tunnels are safe in case of tremers or provide an auxiliary method of cooling in addition to the tunnels, such as a pond or cooling towers.

State agencies have agreed to license the plant without cooling towers on the condition that any environmental damage would be corrected by the company.

Shants said, "We will get our heads together and get in touch with the AEC to find an acceptable method," adding that a pond and cooling towers "might have to be brought up."

Shants said, "I want to stress that the AEC did not find the tunnels unacceptable for normal operation, but rather unacceptable in case of a severe earthquake."

Acid Blamed For Jet Inferno

BOSTON (AP) - A Pan American 707 cargo jet that crashed in flames last fall was carrying combustile acid packed in sawdust, a federal investigator said Tuesday.

Rudolf Kapustin told a hearing of the National Transportation Safety Board that investigators looked into the possibility that the cargo could have caused the crash after the weather and aircraft failure were ruled out.

Three men died Nov. 3 when the plane crashed at Logan International Airport after the pilot reported smoke billowing from one of the cargo compartments.

The cargo included 16,000 pounds of chemicals. Among them were 160 jugs of nitric acid that "had been packed in combustile sawdust instead of the noncombustile material required for inner and outer packing of nitric acid," said Kapustin, chief investigator for the board.

After the hearings are finished, the board will use its findings to propose uniform standards for handling dangerous materials aboard airplanes, a spokesman said. Those responsibilities are now divided among eight or more agencies.

"This is the first time there's been a major crash the cause of which was probably hazardous cargo," said Edward E. Slattery, a board spokesman.

"So the board will have to face this problem and meet it head on for the first time. There's a real hodgepodge of rules right now covering hazardous materials."

Before the crash, the airplane crew complained of smoke in the cockpit.

Frank Taylor, chief of the board's investigative branch, said the ventilation system in the compartment where the blaze broke out should have kept smoke and fire from circulating through the airplane.

"We question the certification of the cargo ventilation system," he said. "We can't find anything at Boeing the manufacturer of the plane to show this system was over flight tested to show where smoke goes if there's a fire."

Kaputstin said a spill test showed that dense smoke and eventual fire would occur if the nitric acid escaped from the glass bottles into the sawdust.

He added that some of the containers may have been loaded on their sides.

A Navy physicist testified that the nitric acid was the only chemical on the plane that could have started a fire by itself.

The Desire To Succeed

By TOM BRINE

Probably one of the most important qualities I admire in a person is the true desire to be successful. What I mean by being successful is the ability to perform many different jobs with at least a basic understanding. How many of us can fix an electric outlet, repair a broken shelf, unclog a stuffed up drainpipe, build machines, drive a truck, at any given moment. I would venture to say not many of us fall into this category.

Many of you might be saying to yourselves, I desire to be successful yet I am not successful as your definition of success implies. My answer to this statement is that if you truly desire to be successful, you will find the neccessary steps to become successful.

Many people say they have this kind of success, but they dislike the steps neccessary to succeed. Again, let me reiterate a point. Only those who truly desire to be successful, will take the neccessary steps to succeed.

To further understand my points, I will tell you of a true person's desire to be successful. It all started when he was a very small boy. He was given a go-cart as a gift. In time, he not only learned to ride the go-cart, but he learned how to repair it, break it down to its simple parts, and rebuild it again. His desire to learn, helped him to appreciate the other mechanisms at his home such as lawn mowers. Coupled with his desire to work and his knowledge of lawn mowers, he obtained a job as a lawn mower repairer. Once he obtained the job, he did not stop and vegetate as a repairman. He looked around at the different type of jobs that existed. He asked questions of the different workers who had these different jobs. By this continual process, he not only knew his job, but he knew many of the other jobs as well. By his desire, the knowledge he gained, and a never ending inquisitive mind, he possesses a quality few of us have. The true desire to be successful. This is a quality that education alone cannot hope to obtain. It is a quality that the individual must bring about himself.

Much Further

And so, it was on this day that Showdin was crowned king of the Bartans, and thus, the ruler of the known world. His long hard battle against the Rouggins had paid off and it was with this victory that Showdin found his greatest triumph and the realization of a united Bartan nation. The war, which had begun decades before, was now to come to an end, and all were to live in peace.

In the village of Kwang, Wislan leaned back and told stories to the children — stories of before the Great Burst, when the citizens of Barta worked long and hard building an underground civilization that would withstand a blow as powerful as that which could be expected from the Namoids. It was the Bartan civilization that had made the best preparations for this catastrophe and it was now the Bartans that shared the fruits of domination. A child looked to Wislan, who was by now old and quite ailing, and asked, "What ever became of the Namoids?". Wislan paused, and only after much deliberation, looked back to the child with a gaze that only experience can mold, turned away again and mumbled the word, "power".

But all was merry in the capital city of Bencroff, for it was here that Showdin was about to make his victory speech — a speech he'd been waiting so long to make. As he got up on the platform, shouts and cheers could be heard for miles, and with a power unmatched since the Great Burst, Showdin raised his head and all was quiet. It was all his show from here.

But there was little exuberance in Rouggia tonight as the nation lay dormant in defeat. The Rouggins had been the most powerful of the underworld cultures before the Great Burst, but because they had failed to provide adequate escape channels, millions of their population had perished. Although they were still much physically stronger than the Bartans, they were no match in numbers and now found themselves to be a conquered, vanquished civilization.

In Pinca, the capital city of Rouggia, a beggar walked through the channels in hopes of finding a meal. In doing so, he passed through the ruins of what had been the most advanced civilization in history, but because of a thoughtless lack of planning on the part of its leaders, this civilization was now destroyed. The beggar, who had formerly been a great warrior, thought back to the days before the Great Burst, when Rouggian conquest had been a way of life and Rouggian strength and power was unmatched. But those days were over now.

And in Bencroff, Showdin began to speak. He spoke of how it had been a long hard struggle. He praised the great minds who had designed the enormous escape routes that had saved the Bartan civilization. He spoke of the bravery of those who had fought and died to make the world safe for Bartanism. And he ended his historic speech by calling for a new age of peace and freedom, and with a gesture that will go down in the annals of history, he looked to the sky and said, "Our people have come a long way since the Great Burst. Let us proceed to go much further!"

And as the thunderous roar of applause continued, Wislan sat on a stone in Kwang and wondered if it all seemed familiar. And a lowly beggar walks the channels of Pinca.

Success Is....Pumpin' Gas

Perhaps Johnny Carson summed it up best when he remarked "Since the energy crisis less people have been killed on the highways...but more have been killed at the gas stations." While the energy crisis has brought hardships, it has also brought irony as well.

My mind drifts back to two years ago..the gas wars were going on, and few would think of paying more than 34 or 35 cents a gallon. With the purchase, your gas station adventure would begin: your tires checked, your windows washed ("If we fail to wash your windows voluntarily, you get two free gallons" some stations signs would quip), throw in some plaid stamps and a glass or two and you're off.

Yes, those good old days of "car cruising" and "rat races" (group of cars filled with bored teens chasing each other throughout the town) are over. Their ambitions uncovered, their dreams unfolded in a web of hope. We were in the college web at the time. Programmed for college, many of us felt that it was our natural destiny. Why did everyone want to go to College? If you didn't go you were "nothing"...a failure. Please note: failure is the key word..at 17, none of us wanted to be "failures." Some wanted to be doctors, others lawyers, a few were interested in journalism or engineering, several were looking into settling down with a family and no particular career. That last year was a year of dreams, when college rejections had not yet arrived, and the defeat of aspirations was minimal. While goals were varied one thing was certain...NOBODY wanted to be a failure. To most of those who graduated from Park Ridge High School becoming a gas station attendant was the epitome of becoming a failure.

Oh sure, working for a few extra bucks during school was O.K. That could be rationalized, and wasn't considered part of the final process...the movement towards success. But to work at a gas station...there were bad jokes, and condescending grins, and all sorts of things which in retrospective seem to have been very elitist. To those who weren't interested in going to college at Park Ridge there was very little vocational training. It was as if those who controlled the School Board also felt that these students were "deviants from destiny". For them, there would be no training..there would be gas station jobs.

Now everything has changed. The gas sation attendant might be the most important individual within a community. Conditioned by Detroit, and the Big Oil Media Machine Americans have become dependant on cars. To say that we consider gasoline our "fix", and that to a large extent our country consists of a majority of automobile "junkies" is not an unrealistic statement at all.

Automobile "junkies" need their gas! They'll pay through the nose. They might not like it but they will pay! They'll wait in lines. They don't like it but they do it. Gas station attendants now just pump that gas. No stamps. No windows washed and don't even ask for a glass. Some attendants only pump gas by appointment (putting them on a level with various professionals usually revered in the country club scene). Who can blame the classmate who meets you at the "pumps" with a confident grin, and fondles the pump handle with a mixture of affection and power.

Commercial Shortage

By MIKE KNEELAND

Some good comes from every crisis, and we have gained much from the energy shortage.

Consider the television. Before the gasoline shortage we were forced to watch such commercials as Exxon telling us why their gas gets more mileage, or Mobil saying their gas is clean, or Sunoco telling us why their men can be "very friendly".

But no more. The big oil companies don't want to sell us their gas. It's not profitable. So before long I fully expect Exxon to be saying something like: "You know how we used to say that our gas was the best...and that our gas got your car the most mileage? Well it was hogwash! You should really be trusting you car to the man who wears the star. Exxon wants you to know."

There is, of course, much that the Exxon Tiger doesn't want us to know. That's why their commercials on television now are directed towards taking the heat off their company. They tell us how energy demands have surpassed energy production. They tell us how they're doing their best to work out solutions with the public, all because they want us "to know". But at least we're not being subject ot their low-lead commercials.

In some countries the energy shortage has nearly led to severe toilet paper shortages. Unfortunately, this has not yet happened in America. If a toilet paper crisis should develop here, then the companies would natually stop their foolish advertisements.

And with that, the insipid Mr. Whipple would no longer be prancing about on our television screens squeezing Charmin Toilet Paper as if he were carressing whatever he prefers carressing.

As a matter of fact, we'd probably be better off if there were shortages in everything.

Think of it. No little kid stomping mud that the "Johnny Come Latelies" can't clean. No Stanley Steamer. No Kate Winters. And no naked man lying in bed bragging that he hasn't used his underarm deodorant in two days (which is probably why there is no one else in the room with him).

There is, however, one advertisement many of us would miss: John Quill ad-libbing a Big-Y commercial.

French-Canadians

To The Editor:

Many of us who live in the Northeastern United States tend to think of French Canada—when we think of it at all—as a sort of quiet, friendly neighbor with a faintly European flavor and lots of good ski slopes. Some of us look back to it as the area where our ancestors came from or our relatives still live, and a few of us may remember with pleasure the lavish World's Fair, Expo '67, held in Montreal to celebrate the centennial of Canadian Confederation.

Despite our proximity to the area, however, most of us are only now beginning to realize that the French-Canadians--descendants of one of the earliest European groups to colonize North America--today represent one of the most dynamic, rapidly evolving, politically and sociologically fascinating civilizations in the Western Hemisphere. In their four centuries on this continent the French-Canadians have gradually developed a unique culture, shaped by a blend of their Gallioc origins, their rugged geography, their former status as first French and then British subjects, and their present situation as a minority surrounded by over 200,000,000 Anglo-Saxons or people who have accepted a predominantly Anglo-Saxon culture. Out of this crucible the French-Canadians have forged an identity so strong and so self-confident that the second most powerful political party in Quebec province has as its platform the establishment of an autonomous Francophone state, with only the barest ties to the rest of the Canadian Confederation. Although the majority of French-Canadians have so far rejected to extreme a step, the very fact that it is being realistically considered is indicative of the dynamism of present-day French Canada.

This evolution of a conquered and outnumbered people, struggling for its bare survival, into a proud, sophisticated "nation", is dramatically reflected in the widely varied works in all genres that make up French-Canadian literature, perhaps the richest corps of literature written in French outside that of France itself. Some of the most important French-Canadian literary works of the twentieth century form the syllabus of French 374, an advanced course offered this semester by the Department of French and Italian. Anyone seeking further information about the course, in which there are still openings, may inquire at the French and Italian Office or see the instructor, Professor Fitzpatrick, in Herter Hall.

Open Up Them Pearly Gates

By KAREN A. MONACO

> "Boys are bad
> Beds are worse
> Sleep alone
> Safety first."
> —Sister Katherine

Somehow parochial schools just don't seem to make it in preparing their good Christian girls for a life of blissful celibacy at a university whose only statue, Metawampee, is supposed to fall over the day a virgin graduates from it. This of course unless the young woman happens to be working towards a BDIC in Trappist jelly-making techniques.

The quote above is taken directly from a kind old nun who was my parochial school's expert-in-residence with matters of our moral conduct. I was at the tender age of seven and in the third grade the first time I heard it. I remember vividly the ritual that would precede it on an average day. Incidently, she didn't say it every day. She would enter the classroom at which point we would remain seated (you only have to stand if the priest comes visiting) and say, "Good morning, Sister Katherine." She would then continue walking a straight path; destination desk — seemingly oblivious to what we had just said, and then after an awkward silence that always disturbed me Sister Katherine would make a sharp about-face turn and say in an almost inaudible tone, "Good morning." Shortly after her saying that was the time that she would let loose with her heavy rhyme regarding our preadolescent sleeping habits. I don't actually believe any of us really knew what meaning it was intended to hold in our young lives while we were currently approaching our homosexual period of psychosexual development. And besides, she said it so quickly and in the same sing song whenever she did say it that I think we just stopped thinking it was some sort of religious anathema and began to believe that saying it was simply the polite way of finishing a "good morning," although I never tried it myself, or like the jumble of meaningless words in the pledge of allegiance. So the first few times she said it we just kind of glanced at each other, shrugged our shoulders and merely accepted the fact that she was saying "that" again. It's amazing though that I still remember her morning recitation and I'm curious if anyone else does. That sort of thing may sound a little odd to anyone who was never doubly fortunate to have been born a Roman Catholic and to have attended parochial schools. I, in fact only spent four years under the wings of those mysterious women in black. Nevertheless, those four years have exhibited something like a primacy effect when I try to recall my past education. Those particular years were filled with the most rediculous levels of antediluvian thinking imaginable. These peculiar women were no less than pundits of our assumed perversity. Take for example the implications of one action that we were asked to perform. At rest time instead of laying down on our desks or actually laying our whole sinful bodies on the floor as our public school peers did, we had to sit upright at the top of the desk with hands remaining squashed between ones' posterior and the seat. The proper placement of hands depended on what anatomical endowments you happened to possess, with the Christian etiquette of the 60's assuming that little boys hands would better be served in full view of the nun, God, and everyone else.

So what does one do if she-he has been raised in a system like this, not only courtesy of religious dogma practice but in other institutions as well and finds themself in a school that has prophylactic machines in a couple of the bathrooms? (And while on the subject of those machines, I'll just say that I would like to see the one in the women's bathroom removed.) I haven't come up with a reasonable answer to this dilemma yet other than maybe just trying to make use of some needed repression. And I suppose that if a man or woman wants to incorporate a little social and political rationalization, he or she might just dismiss Sister Katherine's chant regarding the advantages of sleeping solo on the grounds that it is an unwise choice in light of the current energy crisis. Either way you look at it, I have a feeling that my late teacher would be rather disappointed in us all.

Cutting Down Crime

By BOB FOSTER

Law and order. Simple words superficially, yet words that until carefully defined, may affect every person in the country. These two words create many of our major legal and ethical paradoxes today. As long as there is more than one person on the earth, these words shall continue to create massive double binds in the collective subconscious of our nation.

If only crimes were as simple as those of our experiences in traditionally (medieval might be a more apt adjective) oriented secondary schools. Yell at a teacher using the language he might use with you, you're suspended. Caught in the bathroom with a butt in your hand, you're suspended. Late for class without a pass, you're issued a detention. Life was so simplistic, yet truly dictatorial.

Thus may be the case in contemporary America. As laws become more simplistic, (simplism defined as pragmatic for the enforcers), life indeed becomes better defined, yet totalitarianistic. Right and wrong are clearly divided in the pages of the criminal code. Yet, can we make such a distinction in the "real" world?

I cite an example that becomes more and more prevalent in our modern society. In one of the last three or four issues of the Daily Collegian of Fall semester, 1973, there appeared a rather detailed, factual article on the treatment of convicted child molesters. Using a systematic desensitization technique of electric shock to the groin of the "criminal", the psychology researchers reported consistent and successful results. I disagree with neither the need, nor the technique utilized. I use this example only to illustrate a further expansion of the point.

On a recently aired "Star Trek" program, Captain Kirk did battle with a psychiatrist and his evil "Neural Neutralizer". The plot was amazingly simple and remarkably contemporary, not futuristic. This machine had the capacity to erase any desired part of an individual's memory and replace it with the instructions, indeed the thought, of the machine's controller. Naturally, Kirk survived and the machine, which was being used for egoistic ends, was destroyed. Yet, it was perfect example of what can happen when power falls into the wrong hands.

Finally, the best portrayal of this point is the plight of Alex and his droogies in the brilliant novel, A Clockwork Orange, by Anthony Burgess. In this instance, drugs and desensitization were used to "change the mind" of the novel's protagonist. The reasons for such treatment were best described by Dr. Brodsky, the creative intelligence behind the process. "We are not concerned with motive, but with higher ethics. We are concerned only with cutting down crime...".

Several points may now be drawn together. Firstly, note the increasing trend toward elimination of individual rights in our present laws. It is much more "simple" to be arrested and searched today than it was just a few years ago. Secondly, if convicted of crimes involving psychological imbalance (which could be stretched to cover virtually any crime), the tendency in rehabilitation is toward treatment techniques such as those previously mentioned. Presently, no problem exists. Yet, if these two trends continue, if arrest powers become broader and rehabilitation is expanded to more and more cases, individual rights may fall into extreme jeopardy.

It is further paradoxical that the administration that was the foremost promoter of law and order now steeps in its own political sabotage stew. Perhaps what is needed is the systematic desensitization of top officials from their egotistical, power-filled motives to honest, efficient governmental motives. Perhaps the Nixon court and the President himself need a taste of their own psychological medicine.

Around New England

Amherst Wins

BOSTON (AP) — Amherst was among eighteen New England cities and towns named winners in the 28th annual New England Municipal Report Awards Contest, the New England Council for Economic Development said yesterday.

The awards are based on the reporting of municipal activities to increase citizen understanding of local government.

Awards were given for outstanding merit, commendation and honorable mention.

Class I, population under 500 Sugar Hill, N.H., outstanding merit; Creydon, N.H., commendation; Fayston, Vt., honorable mention.

Class II, population 500 to 1,000 Sutton, N.H., outstanding merit; Marlboro, Vt., commendation; New Castle, N.H., honorable mention.

Class III, population 1,000 to 2,500 Wilmington, Vt., outstanding merit; Tisbury, Mass., commendation; Edgartown, Mass., honorable mention.

Class IV, population 2,500 to 10,000; Wenham, Mass., outstanding merit; Mansfield, Mass., commendation;; Essex Conn., honorable mention.

Class V, population 10,000 to 25,000: Wilbraham, Mass., outstanding merit; AMHERST, MASS., commendation; Berlin, N.H., honorable mention.

Class VI, population over 25,000: Greenwich, Conn., outstanding merit; Lexington, Mass., commendation; Danvers, Mass., honorable mention.

Gays Lose Round

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — U.S. Dist. Court Judge Hugh Bownes yesterday rejected a mention by Gov. Meldrim Thomson that the Gay Students Organization at the state university by declared illegal.

Bownes thus reaffirmed his earlier decision that the homosexual students have a right to form a club at the University of New Hampshire.

Thomson had asked that the decision be set aside because some of the UNH trustrees, including the governor, were not served formally with notices of the suit until after the decision was handed down.

The dismissal cleared the way for appeals by Thomson and the trustees, who earlier this month voted to appeal the ruling.

Harrington Runs

BOSTON (AP) — Edward F. Harrington, former head of the Department of Justice's "strike force" in New England, announced his candidacy for state attorney general yesterday.

The 40-year-old Fall River native, now a resident of Needham and a Boston attorney, promised an all-out drive against crime and corruption with "no deals."

Harrington is the third candidate to bid officially for the Democratic nomination for attorney general. Others already in the race are Rep. George L. Sacce Jr., Medford, and Norfolk Register of Deed Barry T. Hannon, Braintree.

Harrington is a graduate of Holy Cross College and the Boston College Law School.

Medeiros Trip

BOSTON — Humberto Cardinal Medeiros will travel to Ireland in July his first trip there since he became cardinal, the Archdiocese of Boston announced yesterday.

Cardinal Medeiros — accompanied by a group of pilgrims— will leave for the two-week tour on July 14 and will stop at Galway Cathedral, dedicates by the cardinal's predecessor, the late Richard Cardinal Cushing.

Dump Nixon?

BOSTON (AP) — "We the People," a group of about 20 persons who got together last June to protest the 1972 presidential election, went into U.S. District Court Monday to have President Nixon and Vice President Gerald R. Ford removed from office.

The President and the vice president are the only defendants in the civil suit, which contends that "because of the illegal acts committed during the campaign, the people's right to a free and honest vote was abridged," a spokesman for the group said.

Alan C. White, an 18-year-old Harvard College freshman, said Ford — who was nominated by Nixon and approved by Congress — was named in the complaint because the group contends Nixon is serving illegally and Ford was therefore appointed illegally.

Court officials said the case has been assigned to Judge Frank F. edman, but no date has been set for a hearing.

Hitching Probe

BOSTON (AP) — House Speaker David M. Bartley (D-Holyoke) appointed Rep. Arthur J. McKanna, D-Springfield, to chair a special legislative comminssion on hitchhiking yesterday.

McKenna said the panel, created under legislation signed last year by Gov. Francis W. Sargent, will examine the needs for regulating hitchhiking.

Rents and Renters Hearing Subjects

Two bills to strengthen tenants rights are before the Legislature this sessions just as a special commission empowered by last year's Amherst town meeting gets set to hold public hearings on whether to institute rent control here.

More than 60 members of activist groups turned out to argue for the two bills Monday at a hearing in Boston. One bill would permit tenants to make repairs for health and safety reasons and deduct the cost from rent. The other would permit tenants to bill their landlords for measures they had to take on their own to get adequate heat.

In Amherst, a ten-member Commission on the Control of Rents is meeting weekly to discuss the pros and cons of implementing rent control in Amherst, according to director David Bloodsworth.

The commission, which has been working for a year, includes three tenants, three landlords, three at-large members and one other. It is planning to allow public testimony at a series of dates next month, but Bloodsworth isn't sure of the exact dates or locations.

Rather than outright rent control, the Boston hearings Monday focused on ways in which a tenant can exert more influence on his landlord.

Arthur Mason, an attorney for Cambridge-Somerville Legal Services Inc., said some such legislation was urgently needed for places like Somerville, where more than 90 per cent of the housing was built before 1940. Many tenants have trouble getting prompt inspections and many landlords respond only under great pressure, he said.

Sen. Irving Fishman, D-Newton, asked whether the District Court was a remedy for dealing with recalcitrant landlords "Too time-consuming," Mason replied.

Mark Goldowitz, a community organizer from Cambridge, said the measures were "the most direct and effective means available to the tenant" to correct deficiencies his landlord would not.

The Senate chairman of the Committee, Joseph F. Timilty, D-Boston, had to recess the hearing briefly in the face of shouts from the crowd when he refused to recognize one young man who, Timilty said, had used up his opportunity to speak through interruptions.

Timilty said the committee would report on the bills later in the week.

UMass-Boston

BOSTON -- The hopes and fears of a whole bunch of years were realized Monday when the $132 million UMass Columbia Point campus opened to 5,700 of an eventual 6,100 students.

The school, begun in 1965 in the Park Square area, is the fast growing little sister of the Amherst campus. The six-building new campus includes space for a library, science center, service and administration building and Colleges I and II, academic areas.

Actually only 3,000 students came to Columbia Point Monday, travelling mostly by bus and subway. The MBTA attendant at the Columbia Point station even ran out of quarters. Another 3,000-odd students remain behind at the old 11-building downtown campus until the new one is totally complete.

"I'm very very pleased. Everything is moving smoothly," campus chancellor Carlo L. Golino said Monday.

Community groups and some officials had feared massive traffic jams when the UMass-Boston students, 80 per cent commuters, started classes at the Columbia campus.

Arica Workshop at Jeff

The Arica Institute is offering a weekend workshop this Saturday and Sunday at the Lord Jeffery Inn.

The workshop is an introduction to Arica training -- a blend of Western techniques and ancient Eastern practices for human development. Like all Arica offerings, the Open Path weekend seems suited to Westerners, since it claims to require no belief or faith. "Each of the exercises is approached as a hypothesis to be tested by the participants," said Marian Chapman, a resident of Commington and one of the Arica staff.

"There is no guru, no dogma in this work," Ms. Chapman continued, the reason for the tremendous enthusiasm that Arica has generated is simply that the process works. Graduates of our Forty-day training programs almost unanimously report permanent changes for the better: more positive basic attitudes, more energy, less useless mental chatter. The group dynamic is important in making the process very rapid. A lot of energy builds in these groups. "And," she said with a smile, "a lot of love."

The Institute teaches systems of meditation, movement exercises, mantram, and techniques for integrating past negative experiences. The tuition being asked for the workshop is $25.00. Arica can be contacted at 634-5504 (collect), or P.O. Box 174, Amherst.

Thanks and a T-shirt to everyone who entered The Schaefer Write-Your-Own-Punchline Contest. As we suspected, the entries were real snappers, featuring such clever literary devices as malapropism, obscenity and dullness. Gee whiz, it must be a lot of fun being in college nowadays.

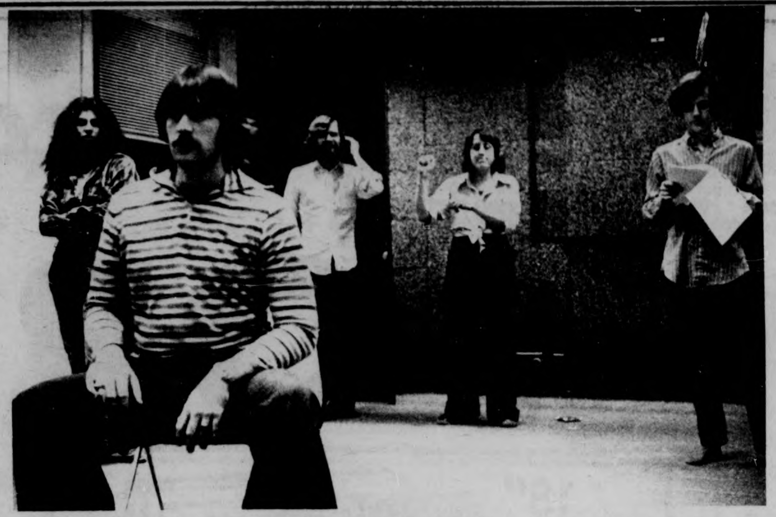
5-Way Overlay On Tonight

Roister Doisters, a UMass student theatre organization, will present Five-Way Overlay, an evening of five modern American one-act plays, tomorrow night and Feb. 1, 2, and 3, at 8:00 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. The evening, directed and produced by students and community members from the five-college area, includes the plays Almost Like Being and I'm Really Here by Jean-Claude van Itallie, Chicago by Sam Shepard, Muzeeka by John Guare, and Waiting for the Electrician or Someone Like Him by the Firesign Theatre.

All of the plays presented in Five-Way Overlay, while basically comic, deal with questions of American lifestyles and identities. Almost Like Being and I'm Really Here explore the idea of fixed social roles and their destruction, through the medium of satire on popular film cliches. Muzeeka concerns ambition, and the effects of the War on Jack Argue, a musician. Waiting for the Electrician deals with the rise and fall of power and popularity during social revolution, while Chicago explores loneliness and isolation in a bathtub.

Tickets are $1.50 for University undergraduates with ID, and $2.00 for the general public.



This "Beat the Reaper" sequence from the Firesign Theatre's Waiting For The Electrician Or Someone Like Him. A part of the Roister Doisters' Five-Way Overlay. (L to R — Devra Novak, John McGee, Tom Lynn, Judy Leamon, Roy Hansfor).

Credit For Veterans

"Veterans who attend the UMass as regular undergraduate students may now, in most cases, receive some academic credit for their service experience.

Veterans who are applying for credit must submit a legible copy of their DD 214 separation paper with their student number written on the top to the Registrar's Office.

Students who have other than dishonorable active military service of six months to one full year, including the completion of basic or recruit training, may be accepted as meeting the requirements in ROTC at the freshman level (two "military science" credits) and no waiver of the physical education requirement. Military service over one year will be accepted as meeting the requirements in ROTC at the freshman and sophomore levels (four "military science" credits) and the veteran will be waived from the physical education requirements.

A veteran who has been commissioned as an officer by completion of a program such as OCS is eligible for eight "advanced military science" credits and waiver of the physical education requirements. In addition, credit may be given to veterans who have attended certain military schools while in the service. If the veteran wishes to pursue this he must bring to the Registrar's Office a legible copy of this DD 214 and Diplomas of Certificates of training for courses completed as proof of completion of such training. The veteran who wished to pursue this credit must also be present when the forms are turned in at the Registrar's Office so that he can interpret any unclear abbreviations or numerical codes and provide a course description if necessary.

Credit may also be given for on the job training received in the service. However, the veteran must request the related academic department to examine — evaluate his knowledge or skills in that area."

Any student who has completed Spanish 140 is eligible to register for Spanish 302 — Tutoring Spanish-Speaking Students (formerly Holyoke Tutorial) (3 credits). It is not necessary to be a Spanish major. Each semester about half of the students enrolled in the course are majoring in other areas, yet have found this an exciting and meaningful way to use their language skills and to have direct contact with Hispanic minority groups.

Traditionally the U. Mass. students have gone to Holyoke on Monday and Wednesday mornings to tutor Puerto Rican schoolchildren in bilingual classrooms of the public schools. Tutors work at all levels—grades 1-12—generally with the teachers in the classrooms at the elementary level, and on a one-to-one basis with the older students.

Some tutors also work with Puerto-Rican mothers in their homes, and the course has now been expanded to tutor some of the Puerto Rican inmates of the Hampshire County House of Correction in Northampton. In the spring the bus to Northampton and Holyoke will leave the campus at 8:30 and return about 11:45 a.m., so that students who wish to participate in the program must have these mornings completely free of classes. Tutors generally meet on Friday mornings to discuss their progress or to hear occasional speakers. Students are asked to keep an experimental journal which serves as the basis for a final paper..

Any students who are interested in this course should contact Prof. Nina Scott (5-0613) or Prof. John Staczek (5-0535) in the Spanish Department, or attend an initial orientation meeting on Friday, February 1, at 9:30 a.m. in the third floor lounge in Herter Hall.

UMass, together with the Five College Program, offers a major in Near Eastern Studies under the auspices of the Classics Department. It is an excellent interdisciplinary major which comprises courses from a wide range of disciplines. This major presents an opportunity for the serious student to relate diverse bodies of knowledge into a comprehensive whole.

The Near Eastern Studies program is flexible in its emphasis. The advisors, representative of numerous departments in the University, are able to help a student create a program which fits his or her specific interests, either in an area of the Near East or a field of study relative to the Near East. Overseas study is recommended and encouraged through programs sponsored by various organizations in the U.S. and abroad. The Ford Foundation, for example, provides a scholarship fund for Afro-American students who wish to study at the American University in Cairo.

For more detailed information stop by the Classics Department office, Room 537 Herter Hall, or call 545-0512.

Dept. of Classics — Archaeology

Professor Niki P. Stavrolakes will be teaching two new archaeology courses through the Department of Classical Humanities at the University and a professional archaeologist, specializing in Marine Archaeology.

Ms. Stavrolakes will be teaching a course in Underwater Archaeology (Classics 390B-700B) which will meet on Tuesdays from 4:00 to 6:00 p.m. (Room to be announced.) Through an interdisciplinary approach, the course will cover the history of marine archaeology, shipping in antiquity, techniques of underwater search, surveys, and excavation.

In addition, Ms. Stavrolakes will be offering a course in Bronze-Age Archaeology (Classics 290A), which will be held from 4:00-6:00 p.m. on Wednesdays in 216 Dickinson Hall (ROTC Building). The course will begin with events leading to the Bronze Age, and focus on the Cycladic, Minoan and Mycenaean cultures. Students will study the art of Bronze Age Greece, and learn how the Aegean cultures were discovered, uncovered, and preserved.

Students who are interested in enrolling in either Classics 290A or 390B-700B should contact Ms. Stavrolakes at the Classics Department (545-0512).

Student Interest Research Seminar

A new credit course is being offered by the Student Center for Educational Research in conjunction with the Orchard Hill and Project 10 Academic Programs.

The Student Interest Research Seminar will take a critical look at various university programs and policies while engaging students in team research. The general sessions will be taught by the Center's coordinator Lawrence J. Magid and will meet on Thursday evenings at 7:00 (place to be announced). General sessions will cover research methodology, the theory of educational change oriented research, inviestigative journalism and other areas necessary for students to engage in action oriented educational research. The general sessions will also serve as a meeting ground and coordination period for the students from the various research teams — the second phase of the course.

Students interested in enrolling in the Seminar should first contact the instructor. His office hours are Monday through Friday, 1-3 in 166 Campus Center. A descriptive brochure about the Center is available from the Information desk on the Concourse level of the Campus Center, the Student Activities Office on the 4th floor of the S.U. and from the Academic offices of Orchard Hill and Project 10. The course is open to all students at the University, but consent of the instructor is necessary. The Student Center for Educational Research is located in 166 Campus Center, phone 545-2892.

Summer Study In Greece

Students or faculty from UMass will have the opportunity this coming summer to study in Greece in an ideal environment. Professor Niki Stavrolakes, Visiting Associate Professor in the Classics Department, is inviting participants to accompany her to the Aegean Institute, Poros, Greece, from June 23, to August 4, 1974. Professor Stavrolakes, who is teaching courses at UMass this semester in Greek Underwater Archaeology and Bronze-Age Land Archaeology, is the Director of the Aegean Institute.

The Institute offers, for credit, courses in Underwater Archaeology, Art History, Theater Performance, Political History and Topography of Ancient Greece, Ancient and Modern Greek Language, and Ceramics.

Students or faculty who are interested in obtaining more information are invited to attend a Poros Evening, February 13, 1974, in Herter 201, 8:00 p.m. Professor Stavrolakes and other members of the Aegean-Institute faculty will show slides of Poros and the Institute, answer questions, and provide informational literature. Refreshments will be served. Persons who cannot attend the Poros Evening may obtain more information by visiting the Classics Department office in Herter 537, or calling 545-0512.

National Student Exchange

"Applications for the National Student Exchange Program are available until February 15, 1974 in the Admissions Office, Whitmore, for undergraduate students interested in going on exchange either semester next year.

The student applying for an exchange should be a sophomore. The exchange would be during his junior year. The student must have at least a 2.5 cumulative grade point average. Poor Richard's

Album Classics of the Decade

BY DOUGLAS SHEPHARDSON
Poor Richard's Contributor

Nothing is new under the sun, and that includes music. Chances are the music you like and listen to today sounds an awful lot like something that was recorded 5 or 10 years ago, only it was probably better then. Records these days are produced and sold with a lot of hype and promotion, but their musical content is usually just about ziltch. So how does one go about digging through the past to find those gems of musical history, those unknown treasures of rock? The list here is of 10 such records, records I feel are classics, records you may have heard of but never bothered to buy for one reason or another. If you are interested in hearing where the rock of today comes from, or in experiencing the essence of rock in a purer form, these are some of the records you should consider adding to your collection.

ENGLAND'S NEWEST HITMAKERS by the Rolling Stones (London) Keith Richards was playing the same riffs 10 years ago that you hear on the commercial pap the Stones put out now: they sounded better then. Their first, most complete, and in many ways most exciting album. Scornful and driving, the music captures the essence of just about every rock and blues style worth noting at the time. Gene Pitney plays piano, Phil Spector helps out on maracas.

LAMBERT HENDRICKS AND ROLL (Columbia) An old one, but if you like Dan Hicks and Bette Midler, you might try picking up on the original stuff. Tight vocal harmonies, neurotic gibberish lyrics and classic jazz instrumental solos. The ultimate in early 50's jive.

STRANGE DAYS by the Doors (Electra) Yeah, I know, the Doors, but their overly-long decline into boredom was preceded by two fine albums, The Doors, and Strange Days, the latter being the more powerful and cohesive of the two. It's all here; strange nights, strange women, black magic and mythical imagery, all wrapped up in some amazingly clean powerful rock and roll. The 11-minute rock-theatre piece "When the Music's Over" puts Alice Cooper and his Mickey Mouse antics to shame.

THE YARDBIRD'S GREATEST HITS (Epic) Jimmy Page, Jeff Beck and all of that. Heavy rock a la Led Zeppelin was often better in it's nascency during the mid-60's; "Heart Full of Soul", "Shapes of Things", and "Happenings Ten Years Time Ago" are still fresh seven years later. This album is full of the fresh, punky vitality that later becomes so much boring redundancy as rock stars grow older and richer. The essence of an era of British rock.

OGDEN'S NUT GONE FLAKE by the Small Faces (Immediate) Another British rocker, this was the Faces before they joined Rod Stewart and vocalist Steve Marriot left for Humble Pie. In England this was voted the "Album of the Year" in the 1967 Melody Maker Poll. St. Pepper came in second. It comes in a funny round cover and is available only as an import for 5.69, but worth every hard-rockin cent of it.

RAY CHARLES GREATEST HITS (ABC-Paramont) The promo men used to hype Ray as "The Genius", and the only line that could come close to topping that would have to be "The greatest rock and roll band in the world". Like Playboy magazine and Macdonalds hamburgers, the voice of Ray Charles is an American institution. Recorded mostly during the late 50's, each song on this album is a timeless gem, from the lush-stringed "Georgia" to the original, guttural, "I Got News For You".

REFUGEE by the Savage Rose (Gregar RCA) Any one of their three albums would have done as well, but this one almost produced a hit with "Revival Day". Wish it had, and then I wouldn't have to try and describe the ineffably strange vamp-like voice of female vocalist Anisette. An astonishing assimilation of rock and blues combined with the classical elements, this is an album that sounds like nothing else in the world.

THE WHO SELL OUT by the Who (Decca) Not many people bought this one back in 1966 because there was no information on the cover, no blurb telling you what a great record it was, no list of songs — nothing. People weren't used to such things then; they had to be told. The picture of Roger Daltry sitting in a bathtub full of Heinz baked beans should have been enough, but it wasn't. Fun-poking and irreverent, this album was about ten years ahead of its time. Should be played every Sunday.

B.B. KING LIVE AT THE REGAL (ABC) B.B.King paid his dues doing one-nighters for 20 years in small clubs mostly in the South and Mid-west. This album captures the excitment of one of those performances, and in many ways is a perfect record; the crowd is responsive, the back-up band is incredible, and B.B. is flawless on the lead guitar and vocals. A favorate of everyone's from Eric Clapton to Robbie Robertson, this is the definitive electric blues album.

SWISS MOVEMENT by Les McCann and Eddie Harris (Atlantic) I saved this one for last because the music here, like that on Spirit's first album, shows the direction that rock should be moving in, but unfortunately seldom does. Les McCann lets it all out on "Compared To What", a classic that by itself is worth the price of the album. The rest is more great music, sometimes serene, sometimes powerful, always fluid and joyfully intense. If you're tired of crap from the Mothers and Jethro Tull, but aren't ready for John McLaughlin, this could be the album for you.

Continuing Ed For Teachers

Among evening courses for teachers offered by the Division of Continuing Education this coming semester are two in aesthetics and one in teacher evaluation.

The Aesthetics and Humanities Program at the UMass School of Education is offering two courses on the integration of multi-arts into curriculum and the use of specific creative activities to explore personal growth.

Lynda McIntyre and Peller Marion will conduct "The Arts in the Classroom," in which participants will learn to use art as a tool for creative expression in humanistic education.

"Movement and Personal Growth," taught by Myra Capy, will use movement techniques to explore areas of personal growth and as a tool in curriculum development, preventative therapy, and therapy. "Introduction to Evaluation for the Classroom Teacher" utilizes an organic approach that focuses on individual student learning as a developmental process.

Spring semester classes begin Jan. 31. Full information is available from the Division of Continuing Education, 920 Campus.

Winter can be one of the most beautiful seasons of the year. This year, though, winter has been very hard to find.

Olver Asks NoDeposits

BOSTON — Senator John W. Olver has filed legislation to give the Department of Public Utilities authority to abolish or limit security deposits for public utility services.

In November of 1972 a DPU order abolishing security deposits for gas and electric utilities took effect. While many utilities voluntarily complied with the order, other utilities have challenged the administrative order in court and the matter is now pending on appeal to the Supreme Judicial Court.

The legislation sponsored by Senator Olver would codify and reinforce the authority of the DPU to regulate security deposits of gas, electric, water, and telephone companies.

Senator Olver noted "Public utility customers have complained about the arbitrary and unreasonable security deposit policies of some utilities. Security deposits vary according to where a customer lives; they may be unevenly applied; and frequently such policies are confusing to the public."

"I realize" Senator Olver said "that not all utilities have pursued unreasonable security deposit policies, and I recognize that one policy may not be suitable for all kinds of utilities." The legislation filed by Senator Olver would give the DPU the flexibility to either abolish security deposits outright, or establish security deposits that are "uniform, fair and reasonable" for each category of utility, or for each corporation.

Fuel Reserves Down Utility Says

HARTFORD — Residual fuel inventories dropped 8.3 percent last week over the Northeast Utilities electric power system, but there is enough fuel to supply power demands over the next four-weeks, the utility said Friday.

The coal-fired plant at Mt. Tom, near I-91 in Holyoke has a six-week stockpile, according to Northeast, the service firm for utilities throughout New England, including Western Mass. Electric Company (WMECO), which serves Amherst.

"The combined effects of an increase in coal supplies, nuclear power generation and continued conservation efforts by consumers have reduced dependence on oil for electric generation by approximately 9 percent since last November." the firm said in its fuel report for the four-week period January 23 to Feb. 20.

NU's 600,000 kilowatt Connecticut Yankee nuclear power station in Haddam came up to full power for the first time in several months Sunday after a series of generator problems.

X-RATED COURSE offered at Rensselaer Polytech kept winter term students warm. Titled "Focus on the Flesh Film", the course consisted of viewing a number of x-rated flicks at local theaters.

FROSH ARE EASIER ON NIXON, according to a poll of American Government students at UMissouri, according to a report in The Maneater.

Only five per cent of the sample of more than 425 students said "Nixon planned the Watergate bugging from the beginning." Prof. Roger Durand says this indicates the frosh are more sympathetic to the President's predicament than was the American public in a Gallup poll using the same questions, last August.

ADD PICTUREQUE SPEECH: a headline in the Connecticut Daily Campus reads, "Tape erasure foreknown."

ATTENTION WOMEN'S LIBBERS: a litter campaign at the University of Hawaii backfired when dozens of coeds condemned a university-sponsored poster that advertised the campus cleanup drive.

The poster showed a cartoon of a bare-breasted woman dropping her bikini top onto a littered lawn. The caption read, "Come help pick up things other people throw away."

Attorney For Students

Old Spring Woes

By RICHARD M. HOWLAND

The promise of Spring is all around as the semester begins. As a time of reawakening the season heralds a new variety of legal problems which have bothered students in the past. This column will continue to try and report and assist on these problems. As usual specific legal counselling is available between 10 and 4, Monday through Thursday in the Attorney for Students Office, 432 Student Union. Where specific representation is required, students may be referred to local attornies at their expense. There is no charge for any of the services of the Attorney for Students office.

The following kinds of legal problems can be avoided by thoughtful and wary students:

1. Shoplifting. Enforcement of laws against larceny from stores may be expected to increase. With all other costs rising stores in the area are trying to reduce the real inflation caused artifically by shoplifters. Discount and grocery stores employ store detectives and they seem to be good at their jobs. Remember that concealing any item from view in a store constitutes the crime of shoplifting even if you never go near an exit or check-out counter. Penalties include high fines and possible jail.

2. Drugs. Drugs of every description remain illegal even though some penalties have been reduced.

3. Alcohol. Persons using alcohol to the point of drunkeness may be placed in jail in "protective custody" without being arrested. They are released from 4 to 12 hours later usually and no record results.

4. Spring Travel. Every Spring vacation Florida and other resorts dominate student preferences. Before laying out vast sums of money try to insure that you are going to get where you expect to go and that you will also return. Deal with straightforward, established travel services; demand all the details in writing and read the contracts closely before signing.

5. Contracts. Persons over 18 may lawfully bind themselves by contracts. Before signing any written agreement, read it carefully, be sure you understand its terms. If you need help get it first. Any contract that can't wait to be signed shouldn't be. Your name and credit is valuable. Don't give it away without a fight.

6. Tenancies. If you have a lease, read it over and be sure that your planned departure is permitted or that you have made suitable arrangements. If you don't have a lease remember that you must give thirty days notice from a rent payment date before you can leave without owing more money.

7. Arrests. If you or a friend are arrested, do exactly as the arresting officer instructs-don't make a bad situation worse. Don't talk about the situation, however, but call the Attorney for Students or any Attorney before talking to police. Cool it until help and bail can get to you.

Enjoy the Spring and try to avoid legal problems by thinking before acting.

Whatever you want to use the money for it will sure beat just letting them lie around collecting dust. So bring your books over to the professional book-buyers at the bookstore now, while your book is worth the most it will ever be.

PROBE ACTION — Searchers use 10-foot poles to probe for two young Seattle-area girls buried by an avalanche roaring down 6,200-foot Chair Peak. Authorities said the two girls and seven other persons in a snowshoeing party were building an igloo in the snow at Source Lake when the avalanche came down. The lake is about 50 miles east of Seattle and about three miles from the Cascade Mountain Alpental ski resort.

Bus Schedule Remains Same As Last Semester

The UMass Shuttle Bus System will run the same as last semester, 10 minute intervals during peak times and 20 minutes during midday for the following routes: Southwest, Orchard Hill, North Amherst - Stadium, Campus Shuttle, Sunderland and Belchertown Road.

Because of the shortage of equipment during peak, times outreach service to South Deerfield, Belchertown Center and South Amherst will be provided at off peak times.

Where Notices Hang...

Do you have a poster to post and don't know where to post it? Do you look before you post? Because many people don't, spaces specified for important internal notices are frequently covered by unauthorized postings. As a result, the Five College Secretaries request that all individuals or groups who wish to post notices on any of the five campuses report first to the following offices where a list of authorized posting locations is available. In addition, the offices will also agree in some cases to post the items themselves. Amherst College: Office of the Secretary, 306 Converse; Hampshire College: Mount Holyoke College: Rita A. Byrne, Coord. of Student Activities, 105 Mary Lyon Hall; Smith College: Office of the Secretary, 26 College Hall University: Anne Scudder, Student Activities Office, Campus Center.

Wood... ...It Heats Well Too

(AP Wirephoto)

HOPKINTON, MASS.--GATHERING WOOD TO CONSERVE ENERGY--Bill, left, and Rick Diamond, right, watch as Bill Norton uses chain saw to cut wood Saturday in Hopkinton State Park. All from Framingham, they were gathering wood from fallen trees to use either in wood burning stoves or fireplaces. Massachusetts in order to conserve energy as announced that residents may gather fire wood in state parks with a permit.

Roughly speaking, a cord of mixed hardwood, well seasoned, weighs about two tons and has the equivalent fuel value of a ton of coal or about 160 to 170 gallons of No. 2 fuel oil, according to John H. Noyes of the UMass forestry department.

The fuel value of wood, how to cut, season and measure it, how to burn it safely and other facts about wood are in a new UMass Cooperative Extension Service publication "Wood for Fuel" written by Noyes.

He lists well-seasoned shagbark hickory at the top of the fuel value list, a cord being equal to 1.36 tons of coal or 191 gallons of fuel oil. In descending order are white oak, beech, yellow birch, sugar maple, red oak, white ash and so on down to pine, a cord of which is equivalent to .67 tons of coal or 94 gallons of fuel oil.

Although Massachusetts has some 3.25 million acres of woodland, one of the worst things that could happen would be indiscriminate cutting of trees for fuel in the current energy crisis, according to Noyes. He advises the woodlot owner to cut the following kinds of trees for fuel: the crooked and the dead, diseased and fire-scarred trees, large-crowned "wolf trees," those of low value as saw timber and those whose removal thins the stand and lets remaining trees grow.

Wood seasoned properly for 12 months delivers 100 per cent of fuel value, according to the UMass forester, but greenwood delivers only 63 per cent. A half-year seasoning results in about 90 per cent of fuel value delivered. To season properly, wood should have good air circulation and be covered. Wood seasons well in May and June and in the fall but can absorb moisture from summer wetness.

Noyes concludes his bulletin with safety rules for cutting trees in the woods and burning wood in stoves and fireplaces, including the warning that greenwood burned in a stove can cause creosote and soot formation in chimneys which can be a source of chimney fires.

Agency May Run Out Of Payroll Funds

BOSTON (AP) - The state may run out of money in April to pay its employees who process and distribute unemployment checks the director of the Division of Employment Security said.

The director, Richard C. Gilliland, said, "It's a definite possibility that our division's employes will be facing payless paydays and we may have to mothball some offices."

About 1,200 employes would be affected. Gilliland declined to say how many or which offices would be closed. The federal government pays the salaries of these division workers. About $3 million would be needed to carry the division to the end of the fiscal year.

"We were cut 18 per cent in this fiscal year at the same time we had a 15 per cent increase in our workload," the director said. "I've taken all the economy measures I can. We have cut down by 500 jobs in 18 months through a stringent hiring freeze."

The 18 per cent cut was a cut from about $28 million to $25 million, Gilliland said.

Gilliland said he had discussed the shortfall with legislative leaders "but not to any great extent. I don't want to cross the bridge of asking the legislature for funds until I have to."

Transportation Sub-Committee Meets Tonight In Amherst

AMHERST — The publicity subcommittee of the Amherst Committee on Public Transportation will meet tonight at 7:30 in the Board Room of Town Hall.

The main item on the subcommittee's agenda tonight will be the drafting of a letter to Amherst's 260 Town Meeting members, inviting their participation at the open meeting on public transportation scheduled for February 14th.

The sub-committee has already invited more than a dozen transportation experts and representatives of 35 local college and civic groups to take part in next month's meeting, which will be braodcast live on Channel 8 and radio station WMUA.

Everywoman's Center Offers Weekends For Everywoman

Everywoman's Center is offering a new program for women of all ages to begin in February. Called WEEKENDS FOR EVERYWOMAN, the program brings together twenty-five women from all over New England each weekend for facilitated consciousness-raising. The first three weekends are scheduled for Feb. 8-10 at Woolman Hill, Deerfield; March 15 - 17 Smith College, Northampton; and April 19-21 Shadowbrook, Lenox.

Weekends for Everywoman attempt to provide a time and place for women to begin, through informal discussions and group activities, to understand themselves and what they share with other women. The weekends will focus on discussing life experiences, receiving and offering support, and exploring the relationship between changing times and the changes in participants' lives.

The Weekends for Everywoman are facilitated by experienced women counselors. Program fees range from $40.00 to $70.00 per weekend, depending on locale, and limited financial aid is available. More information and registration forms are available from Everywoman's Center, 506 Goodell.

Solzhenitsyn Backed

BOSTON (AP) — The board of trustees of the Unitarian Universalist Association has unanimously voted to support Russian Nobel Prize winning author Alexander Solzhenitsyn and has expressed concern for his "safety and well being."

The Boston-based association is a religious organization of more than 1,000 congregations in North America.

The board of trustees said it cannot speak for every Unitarian Universalist Society or individual but that it wants to reaffirm Solzhenitsyn's right of free speech.

A resolution approved by the trustees said: "We call upon peoples and governments, public officials and religious leaders, all concerned for the preservation of the human spirit, to speak out on his behalf.

... Missile Power ...

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon says the Soviet Union apparently is more than half-way along in its efforts to deploy separately targetable multiple warheads in intercontinental ballistic missiles.

The Pentagon announced this week that over the weekend the Soviet Union conducted its first long-range test firings of SS19 missiles equipped with multiple warheads.

The missiles were launched Friday and Saturday from a site deep within the Soviet Union, the Pentagon said. A spokesman said the missiles landed some 4,500 miles away in a test range about 850 miles north of Midway Island in the Pacific.

The tests apparently were the first launchings at distances comparable to requirements for actual use.

Pentagon spokesman Jerry W. Freidheim said the tests indicate that the Soviet Union is more than halfway toward possible deployment of the multiple warheads in SS19 missiles.

The United States deployed its first multiple, separately targetable warheads, also known as MIRV's in June 1970.

Freidheim said the Pentagon is sticking by earlier estimates that the Soviet Union will be able to deploy such warheads in late 1975 or early 1976.

No More Wheat Deals

NEW YORK (AP) — A Soviet trade official says his nation is on the way to growing enough wheat for its needs.

Asked this week at a news conference whether the record 1973 Russian wheat crop indicates that the Soviet Union is achieving self-sufficiency in wheat, Vladimir S. Alkhimov, a deputy minister of foreign trade, said "Yes."

The 1973 Soviet wheat crop totaled 215 million tons, compared with the 1972 total of 168 million tons that led the Soviets to purchase wheat from the United States.

Improved wheat conditions in the Soviet Union apparently were a factor in a Soviet agreement earlier this month to delay shipment of 18.4 million bushels of U.S. wheat that had been scheduled this month. In all, 125 million bushels of U.S. wheat are scheduled for export to the Soviet Union as part of the 1972 grain purchases by the Soviet Union.

Asked whether the Soviet Union might be willing to forego taking the 18.4 million bushels at all, Alkhimov said the question wasn't even mentioned, but that any such request by the United States "would be considered, I think."

Educational Policy Studies

LEX No. 2005 Education, Racism and the Future

This course will deal with the following: 1) institute an awareness of the black past, 2) identify consistent trends from past to present, 3) develop a knowledge of the present black situation in this country, 4) look at possible future developments for not only blacks but whites also, 5) to develop and assess future orientated strategies that will enable one to reach a better understanding of their own particular situation in relation to the total global perspective, with emphasis on education.

Richardson: Henry, Simon New Leaders

BANGOR, Maine (AP) — Secretary of State Henry Kissenger and William E. Simon, the director of the Federal Energy Office, have moved into the leadership vacuum in the Nixon administration that was created by the Watergate disclosures, former Atty. Gen. Elliot Richardson said Tuesday.

At a press conference here, Richardson said that Simon and Kissenger are two men who have assumed leadership roles after President Nixon's capacity to lead became impaired by Watergate.

He said he feels the American people are withholding judgment on the President and the Watergate affair "with a tremendous spirit of fairness and remarkable patience." A verdict hasn't been reached, he said, because there isn't enough information available, although the evidence exists.

In Boston Monday night, Richardson said he "wouldn't be surprised" if Vice President Gerald R. Ford becomes President before the 1976 election. But at Bangor, he told newsmen: "I don't think the President, under present circumstances, is likely to resign." Later, in a question and answer session after last night's speech at the University of Maine, Richardson declined to speculate on whether Nixon would be impeached.

"I'm not in the handicapping business," Richardson said. He added that like members of the House Judiciary Committee, he would wait until the evidence had been compiled and "sifted."

Asked about Ford, Richardson said he felt the former Michigan congressman is "decent, honorable and fair-minded." The former attorney general said that if Ford became president, "he would do a solid and responsible job."

Richardson said Cox's efforts have aided the new Special Prosecutor, Leon Jaworski.

"What he's done has been on solid ground," Richardson said of Jaworski. And Jaworski's success in obtaining necessary documents and tapes, he feels, is a by-product of the firing of Cox and the resignations.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Pisces eyes are big, inviting. Pisces feet are graceful or they hurt—little or no in-between. Pisces is sensitive, psychic, sympathetic and capable of producing music, poetry and writing that is forceful and creative. Pisces also possesses a sense of humor but is not always willing to laugh at own foibles. Change of residence will be featured for many of these natives in 1974. May and September are indicated as outstanding months.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Accent is on what you need as opposed to desire. Key now is to be practical rather than visionary. Get materials that can be used to build on solid base. Capricorn, Cancer persons can figure prominently. You are due for assignment which tests innate skills.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Cycle is such that you make inroads, impressions. What you do is remembered. You appeal—popularity rating soars. Take initiative. New contacts prove productive. Highlight personality, personal appearances. You will find better means of distribution.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): What you fear is finally articulated. This in itself can help free you. Face facts as they are, not as you wish, imagine or presume them to be. Leo, Aquarius persons seem to be involved. Finish tasks. Don't promise more than you can deliver—applies to both personal and professional areas.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your hunch pays off—you have access to added information. You teach and learn. You share and gain. You are faced with dilemma but given strength to overcome it. One who seems erratic can actually become valuable ally.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Some obstacles are apparent—but there also is greater freedom of choice. Sagittarius, Gemini persons could be involved. You are given choice between responsibility and wanderlust. Goal is in sight. You can move toward it or sideways—what you decide depends on what you learned.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Good moon aspect now coincides with journeys, reading, writing, publishing. Your ability to communicate is put to test. Your sources are running into obstacles. Friends could scuffle among themselves. Crystallize your own philosophical concepts.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Money, mystery, special relationship—these are likely to be spotlighted. Gemini, Virgo persons figure in prominent ways. Be ready for change, variety of experiences and travel opportunity. Check budget, savings account.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Emphasis is on partnership, joint efforts and marriage. You are able to face opposition and win—through diplomacy. If you are too forceful, you actually lose valuable allies. Know it and use your powers of persuasion.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Guard health and protect job. Element of deception is present. Be sure you are not quoted out of context. Someone is trying to make hay at your expense. Know it and refuse to fall victim to schemes.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Vitality makes a comeback. You feel more alive. Your ideas are fresh as creativity surges to forefront. This can be a power day and you deal from position of strength. Know it and approach those who pull strings of authority.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Emphasis is on home, property, security, relationship with parent or authority figure. Utilize lessons learned in recent past. Be frank—say what you mean. You will be seeing more persons, setting up contacts for future "assault" on success.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Accent is on new start due to recent contact, call or message. Some of your ideas are utilized. You receive news which is encouraging and points to profit. Accept invitation to discuss manuscript, campaign or concept.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have delightful sense of humor. Many persons adore you—others find you outrageous—but very few can ignore you. October will be a most significant month. More travel indicated for you this year.

Minutewomen Defeat All-Star Gymnasts

By CANDY GROSS

Although the Trenton State women's gymnastics team had to cancel due to injuries, this past Saturday's meet turned out to be quite exciting for the standing room only crowd. In fact the three clubs composing the Massachusetts All Star team proved to be a good challenge for UMass' first meet of the season. The girls, all junior and senior high school age compete for either Kathy Corrigan's School of Gymnastics in South Weymouth, coached by James Corrigan; Mr. Robert Hanscomb's North Shore School of Gymnastics in Salem, or the Pioneer Gymnastics School in Springfield coached by Leo Leger. These gymnasts showed particular skill in balance beam and vaulting, taking the two events, with UMass capturing uneven bars and floor exercise. But never were the two teams more than 1.15 points apart, making the outcome a battle from the start.

The result was a fine score of UMass 100.65, All Stars 99.85. In gymnastics, scoring 100 points and better for four events is one mark of a good team, particularly in the beginning of the season. As coach Virginia Evans put it, "It was a good solid start for the season."

The meet was a close one from the start with the All Stars surpassing UMass in vaulting by a score of 26.15 to 25.80. The outstanding vault for UMass was all-around gymnast, Jeanine Burger's yamashita, scoring 8.95, tying for first with Jane Joyce of the All-Stars. UMass' next two highest vaults were Margie Comb's handspring half twist earning 8.5 followed by Marion Kulick's 8.35 handspring. Completing the line-up were Linda Nelligan, Carol Rogers, and Heidi Armstrong.

The uneven bars event found the women taking the lead in one of UMass's stronger events. Solid first and second place performances were given by co-captain Anne Vexler, 8.65 and Jeanine Burger, 8.55. Bar specialist Betsy East turned in a nice 8.3 to bring the event score to 25.50 topping the All Stars' 24.35. Rounding out the bar squad were Linda Nelligan, Heidi Armstrong and Carol Rogers. So at the half way mark the score stood, UMass 51.30 to All-Stars 50.50.

The next event, balance beam, has been perhaps UMass's one real weak point, and this was the case for their first meet. Steady performances were given by Heidi Armstrong, 7.7 and Jodi Hitt, 7.35, but the rest of the squad was plagued by falls. Despite her falls though, Anne Vexler's dazzling routine earned her a second place score of 8.3. Jeanine Burger and Marion Kulick completed the line-up. The young All Stars superior tumbling moves on beam, including such things as aerial front walkovers and back handsprings, were particularly crowd pleasing and challenging to the UMass women. Their event score came to 24.45 over UMass' 23.35, and at this point they had UMass by .3.

The final event of the evening, floor exercise, would be the deciding factor and the outcome was uncertain right to the final routine. Anne Vexler danced her way to an amazing 9.25, the highest for the evening, and captured first place. Jeanine Burger displayed some fine high level tumbling and new dance to score an 8.75 for second place. Third place went to Cindy Moran of the All-Stars with a score of 8.65, but Alicia Goode's strong performance earned an 8.0 and gave UMass the needed edge to take the event 26.00 to 24.90, and win the meet.

It had been mentioned earlier that promising performances were to be expected from Diane Cantwell. Last week she sustained a severe back injury which will keep her out of competition this year. It will also be noticed that co-captain Thanne Poth is missing from the line-up due to a reoccurring back injury. Both gymnast will certainly be missed.

This coming Saturday the women will travel to Towson, Maryland to meet Towson State College. The next home meet is Wednesday, February 20 against Boston State.

Wrestlers Ready To Improve

By JOHN BOCK

The wrestling world took a dim view of the UMass wrestling teams efforts in the first half of the 1973-1974 season. They finished with a 3-4 slate losing to URI, MIT, Harvard, and Hofstra. Wins over Yale, UConn and Wesleyan did little to erase the pasting received by Rhody (37-3) and Hofstra (42-2).

Excuse? Nobody likes to hear them and the Minutemen aren't in the habit of making them. There are a few reasons that the showing was so poor, however. Inexperience is one reason. The Minutemen were wrestling teams largely composed of veterans and having a little experience (so called mat savvy) often is the edge in a tight bout. Injuries were also a big factor. Russ Chateauneuf missed all matches after Rhode Island. Defending New England Champ, George Ireland never donned a uniform the first semester. 158 pounder Cliff Blom recieved a separated shoulder at the end of the semester and was out for Harvard and Hofstra.

Instead of sitting back and nursing wounds over the intersession Coach Barr and the Minutemen embarked on a grueling road trip that took them to Long Island, New Jersey and Pennsylvania. On Long Island they wrestled Farmingdale and Nassau Junior Colleges, Union College of New Jersey, Montclair State of New Jersey. There were a few workouts at exceptional high schools in the areas also. It was all to get UMass in shape for their first meeting with the third ranked team in the East — the Engineers of Lehigh University. The Minutemen found out quickly that there is no other sport on the Bethlehem, Pa. campus but wrestling. The Engineers had just returned from a trip out West where they wrestled some of the nation's best collegiate teams. Outstanding wrestler for Lehigh that participated in workout with UMass were Mike Frick (last years 118 pound Eastern Champ, undefeated at 126 this season including a 2-0 win over Michigan State's 1972 NCAA Champ Pat Milkovich), Terry DeStito sixth at 167 last year and twice EIWA Runnerup.

Coach Barr said of the trip "It made us a lot harder nosed and we got a better work out than we would have if we had practiced among ourselves for the whole semester break.") The team members enjoyed wrestling some big names and were treated exceptionally well at Lehigh as executives of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation took them on a tour of the plant and out to lunch.

The trip did show results as last Saturday UMass went 2-1 at the Central Connecticut State College Quadrangular. UMass beat CCSC 23-14, and Seton Hall 36-9 while dropping a match to CW Post 22-12. Taking home a 3-0 record on the day Captain Steve Benson as he had a pin and two wins while wrestling up at 177. The whole middle weight team wrestled up a weight class and did not fair that badly. 134 pounder Dick Muri had the toughest weight class of the day as he wrestled Central's NEIWA Runner-up John Hamilton, and CW Post's Rocky Davey. Davey is about as close to being an All American as he can get without being one. He has been a member of the All East team twice, has won the CW Post Tourney three times and has been one of the top seeds in the small College Nationals. But it took a reversal in the last fiteen seconds of his bout in order for him to pick up the win over Muri. Seton Hall's 134 pounder was Percy Martin the toughest competition that Davey had seen all year and runner-up to him in the Post tourney. Muri dropped the match to him but still did well.

UMass' two heavyweights went home undefeated with George Ireland beating Seton Hall's heavy and pinning CCSC's heavy, while Dennis Fenton beat Post's Unlimited wrestler.

Icemen Lose A Few

By BILL BALLOU

If you don't get the Amherst Record delivered to your home then you may not know what happened as far as UMass hockey is concerned over intersession.

As they say, ignorance is bliss.

For the Minutemen, it was not a pleasant vacation, hockeywise. They won just two of the six games they played, and lost four, including three in a row.

The game by game:

--Won the opening game of the Merrimack Tournament, beating St. Anselm's 7-2. Highlight was a seven goal second period. Win was their fifth in a row

--Lost the championship game of the Tournament 7-0 to Merrimack. Things were as bad as the score indicates, although Chick Rheault wasn't. The defense was politely, shoddy.

--Lost to Division I Providence College 7-3 at PC's new rink. Game was much closer, as the Minutemen trailed just 4-3 with about five minutes left, then fell apart. The loss was no disgrace, as PC is the hottest team in Div. I right now.

--Lost 5-3 to Boston State, a devastating loss since State is one of the teams UMass has to beat out for a good seed in the playoff tournament. Boston State jumped out to a quick 3-0 lead in the Arena, and UMass controlled after that. Jim Lynch's first career hat trick accounted for all the UMass goals.

--Beat Hamilton 10-2 in crucial victory in New York. Hamilton will most likely be a playoff team, so UMass couldn't afford to lose. Only thing one-sided was the score, as Chick Rheault had 43 saves in two-and-one-half periods. John Binkoski finished up.

--Lost to a not very strong Colgate team 11-2. Rheault had bruised his knee against Hamilton, so Jeff McReynolds started but had a hard time and was lifted after giving up four goals in the first period. Binkoski finished up again.

UMass entered intersession with a 4-2 record, all Division II. They come back to our peaceful little community with 6-6 record overall, 6-4 in Division II. The two losses to Div. I teams make it nine games in a row UMass has lost to Div. I, the last win coming almost two years ago.

Other occurrences of note that you might have missed:

--Mike Merchant had to sit out the Providence game because of a kicking penalty he was assessed against Merrimack.

--Brian Mulcahy returned to action, and although playing on a gimpy knee, stepped in and played his usual brand of excellent defense.

--Freshman defenseman Tim Howes was named to the aal-tournament team for the Merrimack Tourney.

While last night's BU game was a big one because the Terriers are playing at little Orr Rink, the next really important game for UMass is Friday night at Orr Rink when the Minutemen play Boston State. UMass just can't lose it and hope for a top seed.

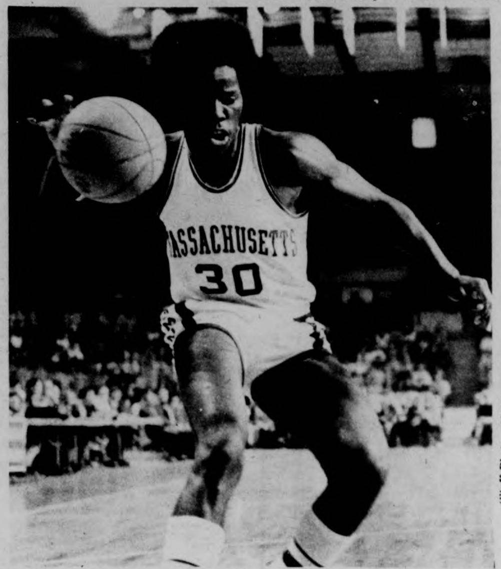
Hoopsters Desire Recognition

By STEVE DeCOSTA

But for a lack of poise and a margin of one point, the Minutemen are still the number two team in New England.

And for a mighty rebound margin and a spread of 16, UMass probably won't make any noise outside of New England, or at least the northeast.

I speak, of course, of losses to Providence (76-77) and Syracuse (60-76), the only two black marks on the record of the Minutemen who now stand at 11-2.



(Staff Photo - Al Chapman)

Al Skinner leads the Minutemen into action Thursday night at Curry Hicks Cage against the New Hampshire Wildcats. Game time is 8:00. JV vs. St. Thomas More at six.

The defeats marred an otherwise successful intersession for the cagers. Champions of the Hall of Fame Tournament, the Minutemen rolled over St. Peter's to qualify and nudged DePaul by three to take the title. Since then UMass has to its credit victories over BU, Maine, and Vermont, all on the road and all by healthy margins. The game scheduled for January 8 at New Hampshire was shifted to March 6 as the result of the school's closing down for the entire month due to the energy shortage.

But losses to Providence and Syracuse are what stick in one's mind when looking back at January. They were the two games the Minutemen needed to win in order to fulfill their dreams of recognition outside the tiny circle of New England. Fate has run its course and now the record stands.

The Providence game was a heartbreaker. The Minutemen outplayed the nation's seventh ranked team for 30 of the 40 minutes played but it was not enough. UMass held a ten-point lead with just under three minutes to play but a series of bad passes and missed free throws allowed Providence to whittle away at the lead. Kevin Stacom settled the issue for the Friars when, with three seconds left, he hit on a fifteen foot straightaway jumper that sent UMass back to Amherst with heads shaking in wonder of what had happened.

The story was different at Syracuse. Playing without Dennis and DuVal, their leading scorer, the Orangemen utilized superior board power in turning back the Minutemen. UMass coach Jack Leaman said, "I never had a team beaten so convincingly off the boards as at Syracuse."

Al Skinner still leads the team in almost every category. His field goal percentage of .656 is among the best in the country. His 18.9 points and 12.0 rebounds per game place Skinner above John Murphy for the team lead in both categories.

Other double figure scorers for UMass are Murphy and Bill Endicott who have been hitting at clips of 16.6 and 16.0 respectively. Below them, however, the drop is steep as the next best averages are 6.0 for Greg Duarte and 5.8 for Peter Trow.

The Minutemen have not played in the friendly confines of the Cage since December 15. Bus rides of up to six or seven hours to such places as Syracuse and Maine are bound to take their toll.

"I'm tired," Leaman says. "The whole team is tired. Everybody's struggling a little bit but that's the time of year it is."

But, tired or not, the Minutemen have a tough schedule ahead of them. They face Niagara at home Saturday then take to the road once again to play Boston College and Connecticut. BC recently took Providence to the wire before falling to the Friars by two in overtime while UConn has been playing its best ball of late and has a one-point upset win over Syracuse to its credit. You can bet that both teams will be sky-high for the Minutemen. While the number one ranking in New England is probably a foregone conclusion, the second spot is still up for grabs and those two games will go a long way in determining who will occupy that slot when the season ends.

Patriots Choose Two No-Names After Acquiring Dick Gordon

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) - The New England Patriots, with no first round choice in Tuesday's NFL draft, used their two second round picks to select an offensive lineman and a linebacker.

The Patriots first chose Boston College center and offensive guard Steve Corbett, 6-3, 248-pounds from Dover, N. H., and then picked Steve Nelson, a 6-2 230-pound linebacker from North Dakota State College.

Patriots Coach Chuck Fairbanks said "the two players we wanted were the ones we selected. We took our full 15 minutes on the first selection because we were trying to decide which one to take first."

Corbett was a sixth round draft choice last week of the Boston Bulls of the new World Football League.

On a WBZ radio interview, Corbett said he was happy to have been drafted by both leagues.

Nelson was not drafted by the WFL but told the Patriots he had been offered a contract by [illegible] league's Chicago team. However, he said he is "95 per cent sure" that he will sign with the Patriots.

Fairbanks described Corbett as a versatile lineman with speed.

"We think Steve has all the attributes to be an outstanding offensive lineman," Fairbanks said. "We think his best position is offensive guard but he has played a lot of center."

Of Nelson, Fairbanks said: "We don't think he'll set the world on fire but we expect everyone to be pleased with him."

The coach said he expects both draftees to be starters although Corbett is likely to "come along faster than Nelson due to his (Corbett's) level of college competition."

Hoopsters Halt High Huskies, 71-64

By STEVE DECOSTA

It could have easily been another nightmare.

The Minutemen looked ready to be had last night, but some clutch defensive plays and key turnovers by the opposition made the difference as UMass limped to its twelfth victory against two defeats with a 71-64 win over Northeastern.

"We let down a little after the Syracuse game," remarked Coach Jack Leaman. It was a combination of that letdown and a tenacous man-to-man defense by the Huskies that kept the game tight right down to the wire.

The Minutemen actually led by eleven with five minutes left but went on a streak of turnovers and missed free throws that allowed the Huskies to creep back into the contest.

But while the Northeastern defense was doing its job the offense simply folded. They committed some costly turnovers themselves and missed shots they simply couldn't afford to.

Bill Endicott carried the offensive load for UMass as he hit for eighteen points on a 9 for 13 from the field. John Murphy was the only other Minuteman in double figures as he clicked for seventeen points, eight of which came after he was called for his fourth personal.

John Clark and Jim Conners led the Huskies with eighteen points apiece, but the key to the good showing by the Huskies was their defense.

Shuffling players in and out regularly, Northeastern kept the pressure on with a tight man-to-man defense. A special note was the job done by John Barros who successfully turned Al Skinner away from the hoop, forcing him to be content with assists, passes, or medium range jumpers.

Although Skinner was held to only eight points on the night, he did manage to pick up his one-thousandth career point. It came with no time remaining as Skinner was fouled as the clock ran out and was awarded a one-and-one. The senior forward hit on both and now has 1001 career points which makes him the ninth leading scorer in UMass history.

It was obvious that the Minutemen are not the team they were a month ago. They simply looked tired. Some of the zip that characterized early season games was gone. The team played in streaks, hitting with gusto one minute and going scoreless the next.

The Minutemen have not played in the Cage since December 15, and the home court could be just the spark the team needs. We'll all find out tomorrow night as New Hampshire, 4-1 and second place in the Yankee Conference, try their fortunes at Curry Hicks.

Icemen Annihilated By Boston University

By BILL BALLOU

What do you say about a 15-1 game?

Most is not printable, even in a college newspaper, but last night's loss to Boston University was one of the most humiliating moments in UMass hockey history.

Nothing went right all evening for the Minutemen, and a courageous sellout crowd of 1500 was reduced to cheering body checks and saves before freshman Jon Archer scored UMass' only goal late in the game. At that time is was 14-1.

The Terriers, perrennial national powers, had been expected to handle UMass easily. They had been averaging nine goals a game in weeks preceding last night, and had only recently come off an 11-2 drubbing of Boston College.

The Minutemen helped their stats immensely. With the 15-1 horror on the books BU has now scored 42 goals in their last four games while giving up just four.

The game, something Satan would have been proud of, went like this:

BU got an early goal from Rick Meagher, and with the Minutemen skating well, things didn't look so bad. Then, in the final ten minutes of the period, normally steady Chick Rheault fell apart in goal and the Terriers scored five more.

Meagher got one more, Vic Stanfield (Fred's brother) two, Pete Marzo one, and Mike Eruzione another.

The second period was somewhat better. Rheault tightened up and BU got only three goals. Jim Lowell, Bill Robbins, and Chris Bannerman were the scorers and after two it was 9-0.

The third period saw John Binkoski take over from Rheault, and Binkoski's play was about the only thing UMass fans could cheer about. He permitted six goals, but made several spectacular saves. Archer got the UMass goal, but BU got goals from Gary Fay, Bill Burlington, Jim Glover, Ron Kuzyk, Pete Marzo, and Kuzyk again. That was all the BU scoring.

It was the second humiliating loss in a row to a Division I team for the UMies. Last Friday they lost to Colgate 11-2, and this gave them a combined two game score of 26-3. The loss made it ten straight over a span of three seasons that UMass has lost to Div. I teams.

While the defeat was not surprising, the margin was. So was Rheault's play. The big senior had played brilliantly against BU last year in Boston, but last night turned in perhaps his worst performance as a UMass goalie. Still, in a 15-1 defeat it's ridiculous to fault the goaltending.

The Minutemen weren't all that bad on offense. They fired shots at BU goalie Pat Devlin, a second-stringer, and Devlin made several sparking saves. Archer's goal came on a rebound off a power play shot by Mike Ellis. The Terriers totalled 59 shots on Rheault and Binkoski, including 25 in the third period when the sparse intersession schedule took it's toll on the Minutemen.

INCIDENTALLY: BU improved their record to 13 and 5 while UMass slipped below .500 at 6-7. They're still 6-4 in Div. II. Archer, the UMass goal scorer, is an Amherst native....Vermont, UMass' opponent next Wednesday, beat BU earlier in the season by 7-6...UMass hockey fans deserve a lot of credit for sticking around most of the night while not getting discouraged....Next opponent is Boston State Friday night, the game time for that one has been moved up an hour from 8 p.m. to 7 p.m.

ECAC Tourney

The ECAC has gone into the tournament business.

Beginning in 1975, the Eastern College Athletic Association will conduct four regional basketball tournaments for Division I independents with the winners automatically qualifying for the first round of the NCAA eastern regional tournament.

In order to regionalize, the ECAC has divided itself into four geographic zones: New England, New York-Connecticut, Metropolitan New York-New Jersey, and Southern.

Each season, the ECAC will select four teams to participate in a single elimination tournament in each region with the winner moving on to the prestigious NCAA tourney. The losers in each bracket will still be eligible to accept a bid to the NIT. The ECAC will not send a team to the conference runners-up tournament which is being sponsored by the Conference Coaches Association (CCA) for the first time this year.

The four additional qualifiers brings to six the number of ECAC teams that will automatically qualify for the NCAA tournament. The Ivy League and Middle Atlantic Conference, which are members of the ECAC, annually send their champions to the NCAA playoffs.

In announcing the new tournament set-up, Scott Whitelaw, commissioner of the ECAC, said, "We are hopeful that the tournament concept will provide the impetus for greater and sustained interest in Eastern basketball throughout the season, as well as insuring the continued representation of our Eastern independents in the NCAA tournament. Also, the tournaments will provide a new area of revenue to help support other Conference activities."

The preliminary alignment of ECAC teams is as follows:

NEW ENGLAND: Boston College, Boston University, Connecticut, Holy Cross, Maine, MASSACHUSETTS, New Hampshire, Northeastern, Providence, Rhode Island, Vermont.

NEW YORK-CONNECTICUT: Army, Buffalo, Canisius, Colgate, Fairfield, Niagara, St. Bonaventure, Syracuse.

METROPOLITAN NEW YORK-NEW JERSEY: Fairleigh Dickinson (Teaneck), Fordham, Iona, Long Island University, Manhattan, Rutgers, St. Francis (NY), St. John's, St. Peter's, Seton Hall.

SOUTHERN: Duquesne, Georgetown, George Washington, Morgan State, Navy, Penn State, Pittsburgh, St. Francis (Pa.), Villanova, West Virginia.

Springfield Tops UMass Wrestlers

By JOHN BOCH

SPRINGFIELD -- Defending NEIWA champs Springfield College bested NEUWA champs UMass 24-13 in a match last night at Springfield College.

The Minutemen jumped off to a big start with a 15-4 superior decision by Peter Sachon. The chiefs came back with a win at 126 as Vic Buehler beat Larry Reynolds, 8-3.

The 134-pound dout saw SC's Buddy Fenton beating UMass's Dick Muri 8-4. The 142 pound bout saw Minuteman Eric Ruth drop a 3-2 decision to the Chief's Larry Way. It was close all the way and the final point came via a final escape.

The 150-pound bout, All-American Rich Munroe punished UMass's Steve Jabaut with legs on the way to a 4-0 decision.

The 158 pound bout saw UMass's Cliff Blom fight back from a 4-0 deficit to pound Sean Bilodeau 9-5. Bilodeau was a head lock specialist, put Blom on his back with one of his best and almost chocked him unconscious. Blom rallied and managed to ward off his attacker, outlasting him to the end.

167-pounders scored the bout of the evening as Massachusetts captain run in other All-American, Doug LeRoy. Benson had him in legs for most of the eight minutes and showed his superiority in take downs as he picked up a 4-3 victory.

In the last three bouts, Springfield picked up two pins, and UMass came back and the end with a win but it was too late.

New England champ Peter Kop from Springfield pinned UMass's Bob Spaulding in 4.15. At 190, SC's Jay Mulligan pinned Robin Osborne in 3.43 after gaining the upper hand in a bizarre fight.

At heavyweight, UMass freshman Dennis Fenton beat New England Champ Tim Smith 4-1 in a bout that was marked by Fenton's aggressiveness on his feet and excellent riding ability.

The Springfield Chief's are riding high on one of their best seasons in the last few years. They've had impressive wins over established themselves as the divisional iron in the small college race.

The Chiefs and the Minutemen were about even all the way around, but experience and a possible home mat advantage proved to be the edge. Springfield will meet it's toughest test of the year Saturday when they host the RI Rams, New England's number one matmen.

There's an important meeting tonight of the entire WUMV-TV basketball crew in room 167 of the Campus Center at 8 p.m. WUMV will return to the Bluewall on Sunday, February 3, with complete coverage of Saturday night's confrontation between UMass and Niagara at the Cage. for people who walk on this earth...

If you've walked barefoot on sand or soil you know how great it is. Your heels sink low and your feet embrace the earth. Then you put on your shoes, return to the city, and become another concrete fighter... but the concrete always wins. You yearn for the earth that lies buried beneath the city.

The Earth Shoe is the first shoe in history with the heel lower than the sole... this helps return you to nature though you are forced to live in a cement-coated world. The Earth Shoe's patented design gently guides you to a more erect and graceful walk, and reduces fatigue and the aches and pains caused by our hard-surfaced city.

For men and women in shoes, sandals and sabots.

HOW DO YOU THINK MOST PEOPLE YOUR AGE DIE?

It's not drugs.
It's not suicide.
And it's not cancer.

It's automobile crashes.

More American people between the ages of 15 and 25 die in automobile crashes than in any other way.

At least half of those deaths are alcohol related. And the drunk drivers who cause most of them are under 25. Sometimes, many times, they kill themselves.

One of the most dangerous things you can do is get drunk and drive home.

You can change it. You have to.

You march against the war. You fight for clean air and clean water. You eat natural foods. You practice yoga. You are so much for life. And you are so much against killing.

It would be unthinkable for you to wittingly kill another human being.

So then, why is this happening?

Nixon Addresses The Union

By GAYLORD SHAW
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon urged last night an end to the year of Watergate, vowed he will never resign, and presented the Democratic Congress with proposals he said can bring the nation "a year of unprocedented progress."

He spoke of Watergate in a dramatic finale to his 44-minute State of the Union address.

"One year of Watergate is enough," he told Congress, the leaders of American government, the diplomatic corps and a nation watching and listening on television and radio.

His talk of the scandals shadowing the administration came almost as a footnote -- some in the audience already had left their seats and prepared to leave the House chamber.

But Nixon had more to say - a personal word. The applause quieted, the audience hushed.

He said he wanted to speak of an issue of great concern to all Americans. "I refer, of course, to the investigations of the so-called Watergate affair."

Nixon said it is time to end them. He said he already has turned over to the Watergate special prosecutor all the information and material needed to prosecute the guilty and clear the innocent.

Then came his statement that one year is enough, and more applause, this time from the Republican side of the House chamber.

Nixon then pledged to cooperate with the House Judiciary Committee, which is conducting a preliminary investigation into possible impeachment proceedings against him.

But he said that cooperation must be "consistent with my responsibilities" to preserve all the prerogatives of the presidency.

He said he will never do anything that would weaken the office of the president.

Nor, he said, will he ever leave that office voluntarily.

"I have no intention whatever of walking away from the job the people elected me to do," he said.

There was a standing ovation, concentrated on the Republican side of the chamber, when Nixon repeated his vow that he will not resign.

Nixon urged that "our national goal" should be his Project Independence in the energy area - that by 1980 the country will not be dependent on any other nation for its energy needs.

He said the country will spend $10 billion in research on energy in the next five years, but that private industry would spend $100 billion.

"America performs best when called to its biggest task," he said. "Only in America could a task so tremendous be achieved so quickly, a task not by regimentation" but by people working in a free system.

Nixon, saying the time is at hand to bring comprehensive health care within the reach of every American, proposed a health insurance plan to provide protection against the costs of catastrophic illness.

The Crunch And The Colleges

Along with the rest of the nation, the five college's have been tightening their fuel and electricity consumption over intersession. But the resulting savings -- 20 per cent in some cases -- may be as much due to warm weather as Spartan economy.

Officials at UMass, Smith, Amherst, Hampshire and Mt. Holyoke Colleges told The Collegian this week of a variety of conservation efforts underway -- from lowered thermostats to urging students to avoid elevators.

Four institutions postponed their intersession activities for a week to mid-January, showing decreased fuel figures as a result. Mt. Holyoke College delayed a single day to Tuesday, January 8 so participants wouldn't have to travel on a gasless Sunday.

Each campus reported thermostats lowered to 68 degrees, consistent with President Richard M. Nixon's voluntary conservation recommendations. At UMass, unused buildings over intersession were reduced even further, according to spokesperson Diana D'India. Mt. Holyoke buildings go to 58 degrees each night at midnight, spokesperson Irma Rabbino said.

Lighting reductions and incentive plans to cut electricity usage are among measures underway at the institutions.

--UMass used 25 per cent less steam during the six week intersession period than last year at the same time, according to D'India. She said the campus gets steam heat from coal and oil, using an equivalent 11.5 million gallons of fuel oil each fiscal year.

Electric consumption for this January was 15 per cent below January 1973, she said. During December, the savings from year to year was about 7½ per cent on an average 5.5 kilowatt hours per month used.

D'India said the total electrical savings for the six week intersession period was down 22.5 per cent from last year, at a time when new buildings are being added to the system regularly.

--Smith College spokesperson Diana Fetter said conservation measures began in November at the Northampton campus. She said oil use was down 10 per cent and electric savings down 12.28 per cent in November 1973 compared to November 1972.

From January 1 to January 12 of this year, the College burned 43,733 gallons of fuel oil for heating, down 28.69 per cent from last year, she said. Even so, fuel oil costs will go up $1,000 - $3,000 this year over last because of interational oil price rises.

On campus residence house reduced electricity use by 55 per cent when Smith buildings and grounds sponsored a contest in December, she reported.

--Amherst College saved 70,000 gallons of no. 6 residual heating oil from December 1 through January 15 of this year over last, according to physical plant director William Mueller. He said no. 2 residual deliveries by truck to off campus fraternities and houses were off 23 per cent from last year over an equivalent period.

Mueller said Amherst saved 182,400 kilowatt-hours of electricity over the six-week period, a savings of 21 per cent over last year.

A kilowatt-hour is a standard measure of electric consumption. Ten 100-watt light bulbs burning for one hour consume a single kilowatt of electricity.

--Diana Fetter, spokesperson at Mt. Holyoke in South Hadley said January 1974 saw only 121,117 gallons of fuel oil used by the college, compared with 157,234 last year.

She said a conservation committee of faculty and students is operating on campus, and her office is publishing a "weekly energy report".

"We've given it the classy name of E - MHC to the 68th degree," she said.

Killowatt-hour consumption at Mt. Holyoke was 655,900 in December 1972, or $12,944 worth of electricity. Figures for December 1973 were 541,000 and $11,350, a 19.4 per cent decrease in use and 14.1 per cent increase in cost, she said.

--Economics professor Stanley Warner said Hampshire College in Amherst has turned down thermostats -- which are mostly electric heat -- and reduced unnecessary hall lighting by one third. Many administrative services were closed and buildings cooled during the January break, he said.

But Warner, who is on a campus-wide energy conservation committee, couldn't say how much electricity was saved because the weather throws off comparable-period calculations. He estimated Hampshire pays a $370,000 electric bill yearly, since 80 per cent of it's energy use is electric.

Two Hurt In Bluewall Fracas

By MDC STAFF

Two UMass students from New York state sustained minor injury last night when a disturbance over a vacant seat erupted at the Bluewall cafeteria and bar.

The incident took place about 9 p.m., according to Bluewall manager Tony Tartaglia.

Injured were: James J. Jordan, 20, of Garden City, N.Y., a sophomore business major from Kappa Sigma fraternity, 70 Butterfield Terrace. Jordan was treated and released from Cooley Dickinson Hospital, Northampton with lacerations of the right shoulder. Paul R. Rodriquez, 20, of Valley Stream, N.Y., also a sophomore business major from Kappa Sigma fraternity. He was treated and released from the University infirmary with facial cuts.

UMass police declined to supply names of the injured. Officer Richard Guilmette investigated.

Tartaglia said the fight was stopped within five minutes by bouncers maintaining security at the Bluewall entrance. He said all the participants "were taken outside and questioned promptly."

Eyewitnesses said the disturbance resulted when a chair marked by a newspaper and a book was taken as a seat by one of a group of three girls. The seated girl exchanged remarks with one of a group of three men, then the two struck at each other.

A second girl seated in an adjacent chair took the beer pitcher and held it near the two fighters. It broke, sending glass fragments toward Rodriguez's eyeglasses, shattering them. Fragments also entered Jordan's right shoulder.

Tartaglia said no charges would be brought by the Bluewall.

A New Beginning

By JOAN FASSNACHT

Sunday, and despite the gasoline shortage, all routes for returning UMies lead to Amherst. Sunday, and the campus slowly comes alive as students take advantage of the mock-spring weather to inspect their campus after a month's absence. And the changes are evident; the fine arts building will open soon, followed by the new addition to the infirmary. An antiseptically clean campus attests to the vigilance of the workers and custodians in our absence.

Monday, and the accompanying suspense, thrills and chills and excitement of UMass' favorite Russian roulette entertainment, "Change that Course" captivates students by the thousands. It's S.R.O. at the Cage as students tensely offer prayers, bribes, and promises to Hal the Computer for his open sesame into Food Science 101 and Bartending for Beginners. Monday, and as you pass through the campus center, the pace picks up as more and more familiar faces appear on the horizon.

Tuesday, and the last stragglers amble into Amherst. By the end of the afternoon, it's just like old time as the familiar traffic and pedestrian clashes jam up North Pleasant Street. Tuesday night and, hail, hail, the gang's all here as an overflow crowd from the Blue Wall transforms the Concourse level into a concrete reunion party.

Wednesday, and as the lines queue up in front of Curry Hicks for registration, the question of the day echoes, "Whadja get?". Either Umies are getting smarter or more deceitful as cries of 3.2 and 3.8 echo off the Cage's walls. All of UMass made the Dean's List! Wednesday, and thank God the Collegian came out a day early, now we'll have something to hide our faces in as we reestablish territories and alliances in the Hatch.

Thursday, and reality sets in with the arrival of 9:05's, or God forbid, 8:00's; Dining Commons meals; the waits in line at the bus stops and the bookstores, classes, papers, exams, the Bluewall, the basketball and baseball teams, finals, and we are on our way down the final home stretch of another college year.

Well, at least someone is having a good time in the dining commons...

What's Cookin' In The D.C.?

By SUE ADLEY

Many changes were made during intercession in the Food Services. Students have seen some being implemented in the dining commons, others are not as obvious.

"During the vacation, committee meetings were held with the production chefs, administration and management personnel of all the dining commons buildings participating," said Marie Cappadona. She is assisting Kenneth Dean as the acting director of the University Food Service while Arthur Warren is in the hospital. "Fifteen committees discussed specific areas where changes might be made. Other areas were evaluated where the Food Service's approach to them might be altered. Menus were evaluated and recipes were re-tested to see if a better product might be the result."

"The report of the ARA consultants that evaluated the entire University Food Service last month was used at the meetings," Ms. Cappadona said. "Parts of the survey were used as 'jumping off points' for improvements."

White sheets were distributed Monday and Tuesday in all dining commons, listing additions to the dining services of last semester. The first of these eight additions is the serving of meat at breakfast occasionally, and second, unlimited servings on all non-meat breakfast items. Ms. Cappadona said that bacon, ham, and sausage would be the meats served. "No seconds will be given on the breakfast meats, but seconds will be available on the other items, such as eggs or pancakes. The meats will be offered about twice a week," she said.

Third on the list is the extension of the Red Letter Menu Item trial to all commons. 'Red Letter' items are the main course selections that will be served with unlimited seconds. Because of this, tickets for seconds are no longer sold. Ken Somers, Chairperson of the Food Services Governor's Board, explained this. "This addition originated from a successful experiment conducted last semester in Southwest," he said. "Students were given as many servings as they wished of the so-called 'Red Letter Item'. The students cooperated well with this, and it was found that two cents per meal could be saved by this. This doesn't sound like much, but multiplied by thousands of meals, it's a lot of money." Ms. Cappadona added that if the students wanted a lot of food, they were sensible to take the Red Letter choice.

Another addition listed was the salad bar. "The ARA wanted this put in the menu at all dinners, and it seems to be working well," Ms. Cappadona said. Also new is the smoker-non smoker option, where parts of each dining area have been designated for each. "This idea originated from the students," Ms. Cappadona said. "It's experimental now, and later on we hope to be getting feedback from students as to how it can be improved." Other additions to service were more special nights (such as meals with roast turkey or roast beef), ice for soda, and peanut butter, cottage cheese, or yogurt at every lunch.

Will there be any new ideas tried out during the rest of the semester? "An experimental sandwich line will be set up on a trial basis later on at Worcester," she said. "We don't want to do it now because there are too many new things being presented at the moment. We plan on letting the semester get a little older first, then see how it works."

She also said that they would try out the idea of not having three dinner choices all of the time. "We thought this was the best thing to do in certain cases, such as when we serve turkey. Since 98 per cent of the students choose that item, we only need one other choice."

Another change will be in the coffee served. "We've had quite a few complaints about the taste of our coffee," Ms. Cappadona said. "Many people even think that it doesn't have any caffein, even though it does. What we plan to do is run an experimental machine at Berkshire commons. This is a new machine made by the Maxwell House Company. It makes coffee using powdered instant instead of the frozen concentrate we now use. If, after tasting both, the students like the new kind, we'll use it. It's just a way of getting better coffee dispensed."

Aside from menu changes, the Food Services also made some alterations in their staffing. "Our goal is to be more efficient," Ms. Cappadona said, "and one problem we always had with our employees was teaching them how to cook." "We've never had a cooking training program, but now we do. It's run by Mrs. Keeley who used to manage Franklin Commons. So far, it's been working quite well. The trainees are enjoying it, and now they're learning to use a lot of the equipment in our kitchens that they didn't know how to run before."

Some of the employees have been moved from their positions they held last semester. Mr. Michael Netto, the former manager of the Worcester commons, is now manager of the Central Bake Shop. Mr. Robert Blanchard has replaced him at Worcester. Franklin has a new manager, Mr. Bongiovanni, and a few of the production chefs have been switched.

As far as student employees for this semester are concerned, Ms. Cappadona said that "there have been no drastic cuts in student help — some of the unreliable workers from last semester were not rehired for obvious reasons." Ms. Cappadona also spoke of new student supervisors who will be hired in the future. "There will be one student supervisor in each building. This person would be in charge of hiring and firing student help, and he or she would work with the manager in managing the student budget, checking time cards, and scheduling workers," she said.

Something else new this semester is the change in the Food Service comment cards. Matt Burns, Vice Chairperson of the Food Service Governor's Board, said that the board now handles all of the cards. "They used to be sent to Ms. Cappadona, who then worked on them with a student employee. Now we read them, and follow up on the complaints and positive remarks. We changed the form of the card slightly, too, which will make it better all around," he said.

"We hope to see success with these new programs, resulting in better food and quality control. Our employees like what has happened, and they are optimistic and hopeful," Ms. Cappadona said.

Near-Fatal Accident Mars Mexican Climb

By BILL DENSMORE

"For 48 hours we weren't sure she was going to live."

Simon Bunyard, 24, president of the Outing Club was dead serious as he sat Monday retelling details of a freak accident that injured one of eight club members in Mexico and resulted in a three day ordeal for the others.

At 2 p.m. Wednesday January 17, Nancy Jacobs, 21 a senior from Mary Lyons dorm, slipped on the 18,700 Mt. Orizaba 200 miles east of Mexico.

Falling on her own ice axe, the Westwood native couldn't stop herself from rolling and falling nearly a mile down a 35-degree slope of ice and snow. The axe punctured her abdomen, seriously injuring her and making it impossible for her to dig into the snow to stop.

Stuck on the mountain for three days with her UMass friends until helped arrived, Jacobs flew back to Boston Saturday after a week-and-a half in a Mexico City hospital. She will return to Amherst this week for registration.

"We could almost see the Carribean from the top," student leader Bunyard said. "We were almost coming down from the crater ridge at 18,000 feet when she slipped and fell.

"She lost a crampon (spikes attached to shoes for good grip) and as far as we can tell she fell on her ice axe.

"She slid about a mile down the glacier -- at least 2,000 yards -- and came to rest in some soft snow which stopped her from going down. The snow was harder up above," he said.

Miss Jacobs, a mechanical and aerospace engineering major wants to be the first woman astronaut according to Bunyard. She was the most experienced climber in the group from UMass, which left the day after Christmas by car for the Mexican peak, returning a few days ago.

"This is the first accident the Outing Club has had at any time," Bunyard said. "To my knowledge there has never been anything more than a blister or a broken toe."

The club president said he is sure the accident was unavoidable, because even if the group had taken every other precaustion, the brand-new crampon still might have broken.

"It's very possible one of the adjusting nuts came off and the thing let go," he said, adding, "every time I tell someone they say 'Well, you should have been roped together,' and I say in retrospect of course we should have."

Bunyard says the gropp included eight UMass students, and a faculty sponsor, chemistry professor Thomas R. Stengle, who is also advisor to the Outing Club.

The trip is the most ambitious the group has undertaken in recent years, according to Bunyard. Most have been to U.S. mountains. And probably for that reason, it took two days, from Wednesday to Friday to get Jacobs off the mountain.

"There are a lot of people down there that worked like hell to help us, but getting a helicopter was a real pain," Bunyard said.

At first a rescue team got bogged down trying to reach the point at 15,000 feet where the woman lay injured. Later a first rescue helicopter couldn't land because of the topography of the area. Finally, a chopper from the nationalized telephone company was able to make the pick-up, taking Jacobs to a Mexico City hospital for an operation and recovery.

"I'd really like you to put in a plug there for the Seguro Alpino, (mountain rescue team) who really did a wonderful job." Bunyard said.

Besides Bunyard and Stengle, seven other UMass students were on the trip. One, Danielle Jeanloz, 19, of Newton and Puffton Village, was able to get help for her injured friend because she was the only member of the group who spoke Spanish.

The other students, all Outing Club members, were: --Thomas L. Prunier, 21, a junior in wood technology. A native of Oxford, he lives in Johnson House and is trips vice president for the Outing Club;

--Sylvan E. Menezes, 23, a senior education major living off campus in Brittany Manor; native of New Bedford;

--David Gedraitis, 21, a senior; in geology from Worcester who lives in Johnson;

--Sean Lyons, 18, of Webster House, a freshman non-major from Westwood;

--Jack Iwanik, 21, of Gardner, a senior English major.

UMass Police Station Moves To Dickinson

The Department of Public Safety has moved from the Security Station at the corner of Massachusetts Avenue and University Drive, to the Basement and first floor of Dickinson Hall. ROTC has moved to the old police station, however Air Force ROTC is still located in Dickinson.

Dave Johnston, Director of Public Safety, said the reason for the move was that the facilities of the old building could not adequately meet the needs of the Department's growing staff. The number of personnel in the department has grown to 89, and the old station had room for only about 20 persons.

The telephone numbers for the respective departments are still the same. So if you have any questions or complaints don't go to the Security Station — go to Dickinson Hall, located in back of Goodell. The phone number is 545-2121.

This Tree Is Saved!

It took 350 pounds of fertilizer, a rope fence and a bold sign to save the oldest Japanese Elm tree in the country.

The tree, which is also the first of its kind to grow in the United States, is located in front of South College. It's life was jeopardized when construction of the new library caused the water table in the area to drop. Also, the tree was further endangered by soil compaction caused by people continuously walking over the tree's century old roots.

Acccording to Gordon King, professor of landscape architecture, the Elm was brought to UMass by Dr. Clark, president of the university during the 1870s. Clark received the tree as a gift from the Emperor of Japan along with other Japanese plants.

Believe it or not the tree is pretty famous.

"Nurserymen from this country and Europe often visit the tree," said King.

Students from Stockbridge and the Park Administration Department first observed the tree's decay and held a contest to create the sign now in front of the Elm. The students fertilized the area and the Grounds Department erected the very casual looking fence.

"The fence has to be replaced once a week," said King. "It's always being torn down," he said.

Builder Suspects Selectmen Of Conflict Of Interest

By MICHAEL UGOLINI

Local building contractor Donald Grant has asked his attorney, Paul Ford, to investigate three of the five Amherst Selectmen to determine if they are in violation of the state conflict of interest law.

Sel. Nancy Eddy, Merle Howes, and Michael Sullivan are serving as sewer commissioners and two of them, Sullivan and Howes are employed by UMass. Nancy Eddy's connection is that her husband, Phillip Eddy, is an assistant professor at the UMass School of Education.

The conflict of interest law states: "No officer or employee of a state, county or municipal agency shall accept other employment which will impair his independence of judgement in the exercise of his official duties."

Grants contends that since these selectmen are employed by the University, their judgement will be slanted in deciding questions relating to the campus. Especially, in the fight over the recent ban on new sewer connections.

Grant has built homes in the area that were denied sewerage permits by the Board of Selectmen. Now Grant, through his attorney, is seeking a restraining order that would prohibit the majority of selectmen from dealing with town business, at least until a full hearing can be scheduled.

There is a question of whether or not the University's new Fine Arts Center will be allowed to tie into the sewer system of Amherst. The Massachusetts Division of Water Pollution Control has prohibited the introduction of additional sewage into the town's disposal system until major overhauls are completed. One overhaul is the Connecticut River outfall line and pumping facility slated to be completed by October 1, 1974. All wastes must flow through a new secondary sewage treatment facility by November 1, 1976.

DWPC assistant director William Slagle said he recommended the University Fine Arts Center be allowed to tie in. He said the tie-in will create a reshuffling of people from other buildings on campus. So the increase in sewerage flow will be negligible. His report and recommendation has gone to director Thomas McMahon, who will make a final decision within ten days.

The University News Bureau said the reshuffling will affect much of the art department, mostly classrooms and studios. The Fine Arts Building is scheduled to open next fall.

Selectwomen Nancy Eddy says that if the Board give Grant the permits, they will have to answer to the DWPC for violating laws pertaining to additional sewerage flow. The DWPC can impose fines for as much as $25,000 a day, if the town does not comply.

Students Like Their "Guts"

By MIKE KNEELAND

Ever since college became a good alternative to the working world, students have been constantly searching for one thing: gut courses.

For those of you who have been taking 19 credits per semester in such courses as Microwave Engineering and Applied Nonlinear Analysis, a definition is in order. A gut is a credit course which guarantees a high grade with little or no work.

Most students, however, do not freely admit they are taking a course because of its gut reputation. "I've been into sandboxes and mudpies since I was a little kid," one student said. "This is a real learning experience, something I can relate to."

When a gut course has been discovered, it's more cherished than a good fishing spot. Gut courses are only discussed between close friends for if there's one thing an enterprising student hates to see, it's a gut course over-enrolled. Getting bumped from a good gut, the students would say, is the supreme college bummer.

Then there are the professors who teach the gut courses. Most label themselves "non-institutional". The slightest criticism of their course prompts a carefully rehearsed response: "To much emphasis in education today is placed on marks. Education should be more than a grade; it should enable a student to develop himself within his own confines."

The needs of college students, as prescribed by core requirements, force students to seek guts outside of their major. Besides the Blue Wall, some liberal arts students say Food Science is the best thing that has happened at UMass in recent years.

The science majors say they are treated unfairly because no such gut course can be found in the liberal arts area. "If non-science majors can take Food Science," they say, "then there should be Humpty Dumpty 101 for us."

But everyone knows that Humpty Dumpty had a great fall, which is just what students looking for gut courses often do. There are many pitfalls to be avoided when searching for guts.

For example, one college's course catalog listed the following course description: 101 SURFING - - - An introduction to concepts of surfing. Films, guest lecturers. One paper. Final exam optional.

What the unfortunate students who enrolled in the course found was hardly expected. The paper had to be 30 pages long on the molecular theory of wave motion as exemplified in the Pipeline. The guest speakers were not surfers, but scientists and kinesiologists who mathematically described body motion in surfing. The final exam was, indeed, optional, but only for students with an A on the paper.

The only sure way to find a gut is to enroll in as many courses as possible. After two weeks, drop the courses which will demand work from you.

As for myself, I like 'em tough. Assign me a 30-page paper on chemical theory or tell me to read an exciting Russian novel and I'd be happy. But as it is, I'm into sandboxes and mudpies...101 that is.

UMass Buses: To Run Or Not To Run?

The student Senate Transit Service may have trouble getting gas this semester due to cutbacks in allocations from fuel suppliers. Bob Godding, operations manager of the transit service, is working on the problem with the Federal Energy Commission. There should be enough fuel to run the buses said Godding, because the Commission has assigned priority status to public transportation

"Yeah, these Student Senate buses are a weird boogie."

Bus service will continue on the same schedule as last semester with the exception of a new South Amherst route which will run during off-peak hours. The new route will cover the Brittany Manor and Riverglade Apartment complexes. The Belchertown and South Deerfield routes will continue the same off-peak service introduced last semester.

The Transit Service is negotiating a new federal grant which would allow them to buy buses owned by the Federal Government and to add buses to the system. The Transit Service operating costs have been taken over by the University, the Student Senate and the Commuter Assembly.

Utilities Raise Rates

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

The energy crisis that prompted you to turn down your lights has prompted utilities to ask permission to charge you more for using less.

An Associated Press survey showed that utilities are seeking or have been granted rate increases that many say are needed to offset declining profits caused by energy conservation efforts.

Some of the increases are called conservation surcharges and most of them would tack an extra 10 per cent on the average consumer's monthly electricity bill.

In addition, Americans are finding their bills going up because of fuel price increases that companies are allowed to pass on to their customers automatically.

The AP survey showed that virtually every area of the country was feeling the pinch and state commissions responsible for reviewing electricity rates said they were swamped with requests for increases.

"We're facing the largest workload in our history," said Robert Lenaghen of the Idaho Public Service Commission. "Every utility within this commission's jurisdiction has a rate increase pending."

The Washington Gas & Light Co., which serves 546,000 customers in the capital and Maryland and Virginia suburbs, has asked for permission to raise rates an average of 6.7 per cent, primarily to make up for a 6 per cent drop in demand.

Paul E. Reichardt, the company president, said that although 1973 revenues were up $3 million over 1972, they fell $16.6 million short of expectations. He said $7.6 million of the loss was due to lower consumption because of warm weather and $9 million was due to conservation efforts. He also said labor costs will increase $3 million this year.

Consolidated Edison Co. of New York added $1.46 to the January bill of the average customer to reflect fuel cost hikes. Now the company is seeking rate increases that would yield an additional $315 million a year.

The company said it needs the money because of higher costs for taxes, interest, labor and materials. Normally, Con Ed said, a rate increase of 22.6 per cent would yield the needed revenue. The company argued, however, that because consumption has dropped, it will need an additional increase, probably 6.7 per cent, to make up the difference.

Some consumers find their electricity bills have jumped as much as 30 per cent in the last year and a half with much of the increase coming in th last month or so.

A spokesman for Southern California Edison Co. said that on May 1, 1972, a typical residential customer paid $21.79 every two months for 1,000 kilowatt hours of electricity.

By Aug. 1, 1973, $3.08 was added to reflect rising fuel costs. On Oct. 10, a general rate increase was approved and this, plus another fuel-cost boost, brought the total up $5.11 more.

A Nov. 1 fuel adjustment brought the base price up to $28.59 - a jump of 31 per cent since May 1972. This week, the Public Utility Commission granted the company a fuel adjustment totaling $232 million annually. The company said that would boost the average customer's bill another $2.10 per month.

Gov't Promises Trucker Fuel

By JAY PERKINS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The federal government Wednesday moved to head off protests by truck drivers by announcing it will guarantee them enough fuel to operate and by proposing that truck drivers be allowed to pass on their increased fuel costs.

Special presidential assistant W. J. Usery Jr. expressed hope the actions would bring to an end the current protests by independent truck drivers in Ohio and would persuade other drivers to forego the nationwide protest some had called for midnight Thursday.

Usery said he had been in contact with several of the groups which claim to represent independent truckers and added "We have commitments from many of them."

The administration action came as the House and Senate continued to grapple with emergency energy legislation.

Leaders of House conferees indicated they were willing to go back into conference to discuss the bill rejected by the Senate Tuesday. The Senate voted to recommit the bill to conference in an effort to remove a controversial provision designed to limit oil industry profits.

The energy crisis also resulted in a price hike in petrochemical products Wednesday. The Cost of Living Council announced it will lift most controls from food stocks used mainly in the plastics, fiber and rubber industries.

The council said the action was taken to head off growing shortages of those raw materials derived from petroleum and to avert mounting job layoffs throughout the petrochemical industry.

Usery said the new administration proposal to the truckers calls for the Federal Energy Office to take action under the mandatory allocation program that "will guarantee that the fuel due the trucking industry for its operations is delivered." The industry will receive 110 per cent of the fuel it used in 1972, he said.

In addition, he said, the Interstate Commerce Commission has taken the first step in a process that would let drivers passon to trucking firms with which they have contracts any difference in the cost of diesel fuel from what they paid on May 15, 1973.

The trucking firms, in turn would recoup the additional expense by filing for rate increases with the ICC. The consumer eventually would pay the added cost through increased prices on truck-delivered items.

The ICC rule cannot become effective until 30 days after all interested parties are given a chance to comment. An ICC spokesman estimated the rule could go into effect no earlier than two months.

Nixon Won't Testify For Erlichman

By MARGARET GENTRY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon will refuse to testify personally in the California trial of his former aide, John D. Ehrlichman, despite a court order won by the defense, the White House said Wednesday.

A Nixon spokesman left open the possibility that the President might answer written questions in the state court trial.

Earlier Wednesday, Atty. Gen. William B. Saxbe criticized the court order as unrealistic "because the President of the United States can't appear in every justice of the peace court all over this country at the whim of that justice of the peace."

Saxbe told reporters he has ordered a Justice Department study to determine whether the subpoena sets a precedent for summoning the President to testify in a broad range of legal proceedings involving the government.

California Superior Court Judge Gordon Ringer said Tuesday he would, at the request of Ehrlichman's attorneys, sign a subpoena ordering Nixon to appear as a material witness in the trial of Ehrlichman and two other former White House aides who are defendants in the White House plumbers' burglary case. However, the subpoena has not yet been prepared or signed.

Nixon's refusal to appear could, in the long run benefit Ehrlichman's case by giving him a basis for arguing that testimony vital to his defense was being withheld.

Ehrlichman and the other defendants, former White House aides David Young and G. Gordon Liddy, have contended that they should not be prosecuted for activities conducted in good faith as part of their official duties.

The three have been charged with conspiracy and burglary for the break-in at the Beverly Hills office of Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist.

Deputy White House Press Secretary Gerald L. Warren said Nixon's attorneys "will recommend to the President that he respectfully decline to appear....on constitutional grounds" and that Nixon will heed their advice.

He said, however, that Ehrlichman's lawyers have discussed with Nixon's chief Watergate lawyer James D. St.Clair, the possibility that Nixon might respond to written questions.

In Los Angeles, however, Ehrlichman's attorney Douglas Dalton said: "We're going to continue in our efforts to have the subpoena issued out of the court in Washington. He added:

"We have no present plans to confer with White House counsel prior to a hearing."

At any rate, Saxbe said the issue probably is headed for higher courts for a decision on the extent of presidential immunity from subpoenas. He said Assistant Atty. Gen. Robert G. Dixon is studying the case "as it's going to apply to about a thousand others that we have."

Ehrlichman apparently sought Nixon's testimony to buttress his contention that his Plumbers' activities were conducted in compliance with a presidential directive. Ehrlichman has denied knowledge of the actual break-in until after it was carried out.

Nixon ordered the Plumbers unit established to investigate leaks of secret information, including the Pentagon papers.

China, USSR Get 167m Bushels Of US Wheat

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - A record 714 million bushels of wheat was exported during the first six months of the fiscal year which began last July 1, new figures by the Agriculture Department showed Wednesday.

The shipments included large deliveries to China and Russia. The exports are expected to rise to at least 1.2 billion bushels-equal to 70 per cent of the 1973 U.S. harvest - by the end of the season on June 30.

According to figures soon to be published by USDA, the People's Republic of China emerged as the largest single country recipient of U.S. wheat during July-December.

Further, soaring wheat prices the past year pushed the six-month export value of wheat to a record $2.62 billion, more than triple the July-December 1972 value of $849 million.

The report is a monthly issue of Foreign Agricultural Trade of the United States scheduled for publication in about two weeks.

Meantime, in another view of the wheat situation Wednesday the department's Outlook and Situation Board said exports last July-December totaled 737 million bushels.

A spokesman said the higher figure was not a discrepancy since it included flour and other wheat products equivalent to about 23 million bushels.

Agriculture Secretary Earl L. Butz earlier this week hailed farm export increases as the major factor in a U.S. trade surplus in 1973, the first in three years.

But the super exports also have helped drive up costs of farm commodities and, in the case of wheat, have nearly drained reserves. By July 1, the department says, the reserve will be 178 million bushels, the lowest since 1947.

The latest export calculations added further evidence of the grain drain, a situation that prompted President Nixon last Friday to lift import quotas on wheat and flour.

During the six months period, China was shipped 95 million bushels of wheat worth $272.4 million at U.S. ports, compared with 20.8 million bushels valued at $35.3 million in July-December 1972.

Russia, which triggered the wheat export surge 18 months ago with orders which eventually exceeded 400 million bushels for the 1972-73 season, was shipped 72.2 million bushels valued at $149.4 million in July-December. A year earlier shipments were 97.6 million bushels worth $154.8 million.

One USDA export said the average export value of wheat shipped in July-December was $3.68 per bushel, compared with a six-month average of $1.79 a year earlier.

The averages do not reflect more recent wheat prices which have climbed even higher. By mid-January, wheat for export delivered to Houston was about $5.80 per bushel, compared with $2.78 a year ago.

Based on the six-month calculations and reports from exporters filed with USDA as of Dec. 30, more than 500 million bushels of wheat remained to be shipped to foreign buyers through the last half of the current marketing year.

In all, China may buy nearly 150 million bushels of U.S. wheat for delivery this season, and Russia around 107 million, based upon recent export reports.

Bolivian President Fears Overthrow

By HAROLD OLMOS
Associated Press Writer

LA PAZ, Bolivia (AP)-President Hugo Banzer, who put Bolivia under a state of siege to counter food-price protests contends there is a plot to overthrow him, the army commander said Wednesday.

Gen. Carlos Alcoreza said Banzer told the armed forces that both civilians and military men, including a former top general were involved in the alleged conspiracy.

Alcereza made no reference to any connection between the civilian protests and the alleged plot. Unconfirmed reports by a Cochabamba newspaper said six persons were killed and three wounded Tuesday night when soldiers and civilians clashed near the central Bolivia city of Cochabamba.

The soldiers were trying to clear highways blocked by peasants protesting against government-ordered price increases that doubled the cost of six staple foods.

Bolivian air force planes swept over the Cochabamba highways Wednesday in an apparent effort to impress upon the civilians that the protests were challenging the armed forces. Air force sources said the planes would be used only for "purposes of disuasion." The planes did not fire on the estimated 12,000 peasants, the sources said.

Soldiers freed a general who had been taken hostage by the peasants. The officer, Gen. Juan Perez Tapia, was not harmed. He had been dispatched by Banzer to talk with the peasants.

Banzer, himself a general, has said several times since coming to power in a 1971 coup that leftists were plotting against him. There was no clear indication if the announcement Wednesday of the alleged conspiracy might be followed up with martial law, which would free the military of any constitutional restraints in running the country and handing out punishment.

Anrig: New Public School Funding Needed

FRAMINGHAM, Mass. (AP)- The method of funding public school systems by the sales and property taxes fails to distinguish between wealthy and poor communities and aggravates disparities among school systems, the state commissioner of education said Wednesday.

Commissioner Gregory Anrig told a conference of city and town officials here that state government school funding with sales tax revenues penalizes poor communities, as does the local reliance on property taxes for school funding.

He proposed four ways to improve school financing:

—A ceiling on property tax rates and state assumption of school costs that rise above local tax receipts.

—Distribution of state aid during, instead of after, the school year.

—Improvement of property tax administration in the communities.

—Permitting communities to levy special taxes to fund extra school programs not covered by available funds.

The Framingham conference was sponsored by the University of Massachusetts.

Ski Areas Bemoan Snow Shortage

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

New England ski area operators are being hit by a January thaw, a lack of snow and by the gasoline shortage and they are worried by a sharp falling off of business.

Phil Camp of Woodstock, Vt., director of the Eastern Aki Areas Association, says business at ski lift lines is off 27 per cent this season compared to last winter.

Hotels, motels and lodges are estimating business has dropped "from 20 to 70 per cent," according to Donald Webster, Vermont secretary of development and community affairs.

Camp said Tuesday the ski operators and hotels are hoping a good Washington's Birthday weekend will pull them out of their troubles.

"It's certainly too early to talk about a disaster," Camp said. "Washington's Birthday will tell the story. Until then, eveyone will be sweating out mortgage payments."

There were indications this week that Mother Nature might be helping.

Camp said temperatures in the 20s this week have enabled ski areas to start using snowmaking machines. This was coupled, he said, with snow that fell Monday.

In addition, the National Weather Service in Boston said that temperatures in northern New England are expected to be below normal and precipitation above normal next month.

"That's all the industry really needs," Camp said. Camp said there have been "rumors of bankruptcies," but said they are unsubstantiated. "I know of no one who is planning to pull the plug," he said.

He said "a couple of small operators who may not be efficient businessmen or who lack creative marketing programs could go under, just the way the occasional corner store fails in Boston."

But the industry as a whole "is hardy and will survive," he said.

Webster said two or three small ski areas "may be in serious financial difficulty." He said he was "obviously concerned by the dismal season."

Camp said the industry is "getting a little worried" and Leo Jorgenson of Mount Snow in Dover, Vt., said "Weatherwise and economically, it's been a lousy season."

Charles Purinton, manager of the smaal Maple Valley area in southern Vermont, called this winter "the worst season in several years."

Industry officials said weather has been a bigger problem than gasoline. Motorists facing fuel shortages in southern New England can get all the gas they want to the north, said Harry Baxter, owner of Maine's Sugarloaf Mountain area.

Camp said many stations are remaining open on Sundays and said some areas have installed their own pumps.

Camp said it's too early to tell what lasting effect this year's slowdown will have on the ski industry.

Stations Plagued By Gas Shortage

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Many service stations were running out of gas Wednesday as their monthly allocations fell short of demand, and customers faced long lines and limited sales in stations that had gas.

Station operators said the situation this month was worse than last because: January allotments were smaller than those for December; many stations preserved gas in December because of holiday closings; and the first day of February is a Friday, meaning many stations won't get next month's allotment until the following Monday.

In addition, some stations which haven't used all of their January allotment have not been able to get the rest because the oil companies tell them it's too expensive to ship in partial loads.

Some station operators say they're expecting substantial cuts in February allotments.

"They're going to drop us 12,000 to 13,000 gallons next month," said on station spokesman in an Albany, N.Y., suburb. He said he hasn't enough gas now to keep his pumps open for longer than an hour and a half each morning.

In Chicago, the Illinois Gasoline Dealers Association urged area stations to refuse gas to customers who have a quarter tankful.

"We're asking our attendants to check the gas gauges," said Robert Jacobs, secretary treasurer of the group which urged an end to what it called panic buying in Chicago. "If they've got more than a quarter of a tank-hit the road, buddy."

John O'Donnell, Pennsylvania Service Stations Dealers Association comptroller, said "By the end of this week, roughly 50 per cent of Pennsylvania's service stations should be out of gas."

The American Automobile Association checked 5,094 stations in every state but Alaska this week and reported the situation generally stable. It said 22 per cent were limiting sales, up from 19 per cent last week, and 5 per cent were out of gas, compared with last week's 3 per cent.

However, the figures in certain areas were far higher than the nationwide average. The AAA in Boston said approximately 60 per cent of the service stations in New England are limiting sales. By comparison, it said, only 4 per cent of the stations in the Rocky Mountains are doing so. It also said 10 per cent of the stations in the New England-New York-New Jersey area have closed temporarily, while only 1 per cent of Midewestern stations have closed.

White House Mourns Death Of Nixon Aide

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-Nearly three decades ago, Murray M. Chotiner taught young Navy veteran Richard M. Nixon the value of a slashing attack in a political campaign.

But in recent years, the bare-knuckles Chotiner campaign tactics had fallen from favor and their architect had shifted to private law practice and a relatively obscure role among Nixon political advisers.

However, it was symbolic of the enduring nature of the long relationship between the two men, that first news of Chotiner's death early Wednesday came from the White House.

A spokesman at Washington Hospital Center said cause of death was believed to be a blood clot in the lungs. Chotiner, 64, had suffered a broken leg and a concussion in an automobile accident last week near his suburban McLean, Va., home, but had been reported recovering from the injuries.

President Nixon was described as "deeply saddened" by Chotiner's death.

A native of Pittsburgh, Pa., who moved to Southern California in 1922 and became a politically active lawyer, Chotiner had a reputation as a skilled campaign strategist when he joined the first Nixon campaign as a publicist in 1946.

He already had played key roles in California campaigns of Earl Warren and William F. Knowland.

But it was Nixon who adopted most enthusiastically the Chotiner theory that "if you do not deflate the opposition candidate before your own candidate gets started, the odds are that you are going to be doomed to defeat."

Bankbook Error Results In Larceny

BOSTON (AP) — Mrs. Gail Cradle, 28, is on one-year probation after detailing how she spent almost $14,000 that appeared on her bankbook due to an error.

Mrs. Cradle, a mother of two and a welfare recipient, was convicted of larceny Jan. 11, in a Suffolk Superior Court non-jury trial.

Judge James P. Lynch Jr. said he would put the woman on probation for a year if she accounted for the $13,976.82.

Mrs. Cradle complied with the ruling Tuesday, telling the court she spent $6,000 to furnish her four-room apartment, gave an unidentified male friend $2,000 and spent $1,250 more for trips and vacations.

Mrs. Cradle, who receives $278.80 a month in welfare payments, also said she spent several hundred dollars on clothes, parties and school supplies for her children. Mrs. Cradle also gave a $50 gift to the Salvation Army.

A total of $2,500 was unaccounted for.

The woman opened an account in June, 1972 with $100 at the National Shawmut Bank of Boston. But the bank gave her the old number of an active account held by Mrs. Mary Boyle, 70, of Boston.

Between November, 1972 and March, 1973, Mrs. Boyle mistakenly used her old number to deposit $35,000 and this money went into Mrs. Cradle's account.

Mrs. Cradle later withdrew $13,976.82 and the error wasn't discovered until last May when Mrs. Boyle closed her account and noticed the shortage. Mrs. Cradle told Judge Lynch she didn't question how the money appeared in her bankbook.

"I thought it was from an anonymous donor," she said. However, Judge Lynch said that while it wasn't Mrs. Cradle's fault that the money appeared on her bankbook, it was her responsibility to report the mistake.

He said "it became abundantly clear" that Mrs. Cradle knew the money was not hers, but she continued to spend it. Judge Lynch said this constituted larceny, according to his interpretation of the law.

The Energy Crunch

Crisis Turns Political Football

By SETH MYDANS
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP)-The energy shortage has turned into something of a political football to be kicked around in the State House.

No one has come up with an answer yet, but almost everyone has had something to say.

First to seize the issue was Gov. Francis W. Sargent when he called the adjourned legislators back last fall for a special emergency session on energy.

The House and Senate brushed aside most of his bills as political posturing, and pointed out that any meaningful action had to come from Washington.

But then they started in themselves, calling for everything from electric cars to an investigation of the international oil cartel.

Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn, who is expected to be a Democratic candidate for governor, issued news releases on an investigation of accounting practices at Exxon Corp., and a petition against the Federal Energy Office charging fuel discrimination against New England.

He followed these with a brief release for "utilization of Massachusets' greatest resources - brainpower - in combatting the energy crisis."

And he then issued a three-page release wrapping up his "running battle against increased gas and electric rates."

Asked why this last message was sent to the press, a spokesman said "We thought it was about time we showed what a good track record we have."

On the other side of the political seesaw, House Republican whip William G. Robinson of Melrose presented a measure calling for "an in-depth investigation of the price structure, distribution, wholesale and retail levels" of the oil industry by Quinn, and giving him a month to do it.

In helping to defeat that proposal, House Democratic leader Thomas McGee of Lynn argued that Robinson was giving Quinn an impossible task he could later charge him with failing to complete.

But for some legislators, no task seemed too big.

Sen. Jack H. Backman, D-Brookline, urged the state legislators to investigate the international oil cartel, the Central Intelligence Agency and the Arab shiekdoms, which he said were conspiring to create the fuel shortage.

When that resolution died in the House, Backman's rival for a senate seat this fall, Sen. Irving Fishman, D-Newton, pushed through a similar one, and is now chairman of his own Senate Commission investigating the causes of the shortages.

Almost every meeting of the House and Senate has heard an energy proposal.

—Rep. Bruce H. Zeiser, R-Wellesley, advocated a tax break for electric car manufacturers. "Thousands of new jobs! An answer to the energy crisis and air pollution...Why not?" he said.

—Freshman Sen. Michael LoPresti, D-Boston, in one of his first actions in elected office, called for nationalization of U.S. crude oil and petroleum companies.

—Sen. Stephen J. McGrail, D-Wakefield, offered a resolution "memorializing the President of the United States and the Congress of the United States to take immediate action to alleviate the burden imposed upon the American people by the energy crisis."

—Rep. Charles R. Doyle, D-Boston, and several others saw the answer in construction of the Dickey-Lincoln Dam in Maine.

—House Speaker David M. Bartley, D-Holyoke, sent telegrams to President Nixon urging a return to Daylight Saving Time. And later he issued a news release saying "Today I have written President Nixon" asking special aid to independent fuel dealers caught in the energy pinch.

—Rep. Marie Howe, D-Somerville, demanded that Quinn begin "an investigation of all gasoline service stations that are displaying 'out of gas' signs."

—Donald Gurewitz, announced his candidacy for governor on the Socialist Workers Party Ticket, promised "a real program to stop the phony energy shortage."

—Boston City Councillor Albert L. O'Neil called the whole thing hogwash.

"This is nothing but a first class shakedown of the American consumer," he said. "If the Congress will only stop issuing press releases and all kinds of rhetoric, and show them that they mean business, then all of this crap will stop in short order."

Senate Considers Staggered Fueling

BOSTON (AP)-Staggered hours for gasoline stations were proposed Wednesday at a hearing of the Senate commission studying fuel shortages.

Harold Murphy, who represents 750 of the state's 4,000 gasoline retailers in the Bay State Gasoline Retailers Association, said he would urge them to take the action when mandatory federal allocations take effect in February.

Andrew Caraber of the ALA Auto and Travel Club said his organization has made a similar proposal to Gov. Francis W. Sargent.

Hearing chairman Sen. Irving Fishman, D-Newton, proposed a statewide, toll-free energy complaint hot line similar to ones he said are in use in eight other states.

A number of speakers at the hearing also showed interest in an allocation program in effect in Oregon, under which drivers with even-numbered plates and odd-numbered license plates must alternate days at the gasoline pumps.

Gulf Oil Vice President Bernard Markwell predicted that New England will be hurt by federal plans to redistribute fuel supplies among oil dealers.

Federal Energy Office: Crisis Caused By Panic

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) - Long lines and empty pumps at New England service stations are caused more by panic buying than by a gasoline shortage, the Federal Energy Office said Wednesday.

"We haven't any information yet that New England is worse off than anyplace else," said Hugh Saussy, deputy regional administrator of the energy office in Boston.

"Our overall opinion is that if there is a shortage, it's not a great one," he said. "We've got these other factors at work-although there's not much of a shortage, people think there is, and this affects their buying."

The American Automobile Association reported that about 60 per cent of New England stations are limiting sales per customer-almost three times the national average.

About 10 per cent of the region's stations have closed temporarily, compared to 1 per cent in the cental-Midwest states, AAA said.

At night and on Sundays, the situation is even worse, according to the auto club. About 21 per cent of New England's stations are open after 7 p.m., compared to 43 per cent nationwide. On Sundays, 4 per cent are open, less than one-third the national average.

However, Saussy said the figures "don't tell you much. It's quite possible there's some explanation other than the shortage for this."

"The real problem is that people are keeping their tanks full, we think. People go from station to station to station. We know of people who will burn up to two gallons of gas searching for a station so that they can buy three.

"People are afraid that the next taak of gas they buy will be their last one," Saussy said. Adequate supplies of gasoline have been reported in the ski areas of northern New England.

Saussy said this may be an example of how people's changes in habits, prompted by the energy crisis, have created an apparent shortage.

"Where are these people who would have gone skiing? They're riding around Boston and other cities compounding the problem there," he said.

Earlier this week, John McGlennen, regional administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, recommend that the New England states adopt gasoline rationing on their own.

McGlennon's assistant, Paul Keough, said the shortage in New England was 20 per cent, far greater than elsewhere.

Saussy commented "maybe he, McGlennon, knows something we don't."

The AAA survey also said New Englanders are paying an average of 47 cents for regular gasoline and 52 for premium. It said this was below New York and western prices.

At the State House, a spokesman for the ALA Auto and Travel Club proposed a voluntary program of staggered operating hours at gasoline stations.

Andrew Caraber said this plan, administered by either federal or state agencies, would be one way of coordinating distribution of the state's dwindling gasoline supplies.

Oil Co. Cites Gains

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) - Standard Oil Co. of California reported on Wednesday earnings in 1973 of $843.6 million-a 54 per cent gain over 1972. Fourth-quarter 1973 earnings jumped 94 per cent.

Last year, the nation's fifth largest oil firm reported 1972 earnings of $547 million or $3.22 a share compared with 1973's $4.94 per share.

Its fourth quarter earnings last year rose by 94 per cent to $283.1 million or $1.67 a share. The 1972 final quarter produced $145.8 million net income or 86 cents a share.

Standard of California was the last of the four partners in the giant Aramco Mideast petroleum combine, Arabian-American Oil Co., to report 1973 earnings.

Exxon previously reported a 59 per cent earnings gain for 1973, Mobil 47 per cent and Texaco 45 per cent. The average net income gain for the four petroleum giaats was 50 per cent.

Board Chairman O. N. Miller ascribed Standard's 1973 gains primarily to increased sales and to the recovery of oil prices abroad from low levels of 1972.

He said the 1973 returns on Standard's net investment was 15.3 per cent.

"The improved level of earnings experienced by Standard in 1973 is essential to carrying out the large investments in the years ahead," Miller said.

"In no way do they support statements that profits are excessive," he said.

House Approves Commission For Energy Conservation

BOSTON (AP) — The Massachusetts House gave initial approval Wednesday to a bill to create a state Energy Conservation Commission to "evaluate, conserve and develop" the state's energy resources.

As amended on the House floor the three-member commission would serve full time at salaries of $32,000 for the chairman and $28,000 for the other members.

The commission could hire professional and non-professional staff as needed subject to funds to be appropriated in the regular state budget.

The commission would also be asked to look into emergency measures for equitably distributing heating oil and gasoline during the current fuel shortage.

The Senate, by accepting adverse committee reports, killed bills that would require speed governors on automobiles and provide severance pay for employes of the Hampden County Training School closed two years ago.

The upper chamber suspended its rules and gave final approval, after adding an emergency preamble, to a bill to let towns hold town meetings as late as May.

Steel Unions Debate Worker Wage Hikes

By ROBERT A. DOBKIN
AP Labor Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-In perhaps the year's most important labor negotiations, the United Steel Workers began contract talks Wednesday determined to win substantial wage hikes for 380,000 workers employed by the nation's 10 biggest steel producers.

The start of negotiations coincided with industry announcements of record profits, production and sales in 1973, a factor certain not to escape the union's attention.

USW President I.W. Abel and R. Heath Larry, vice chairman of U.S. Steel Corp. and the industry's chief negotiator, indicated that the government's 5.5 per cent pay guidelines were likely to be ignored.

"Inflation has had a terrible impact on our thinking," Abel said at a joint news conference with Larry. Both called for an end to controls.

The Nixon administration, Abel said, "ought to try running the government for a while and let us run our own affairs."

The union is unlikely to settle for less than the 7 percent increase in wages and benefits negotiated in the auto industry last year. And with the steel industry enjoying record profits, rank-and-file pressure for a big settlement is increased.

Larry acknowledged that while profits "look good," they were "not nearly what was needed for the ultimate viability of the steel industry." U.S. Steel, the nation's No. 1 producer, posted its highest earnings since 1957, up 108 per cent last year.

The eventual steel settlement usually sets the pattern for the rest of the industry and is expected to influence negotiations later this year involving nearly 10 million workers in such key industries as railroads, communications and coal.

Under an agreement adopted last March, the union relinquished the right to call a national strike in return for a guaranteed minimum 3 per cent wage increase plus a one-time $150 bonus for every worker. All unresolved issues in the negotiations are to go to binding arbitration by April 15.

Under current contract, which expires Aug. 1, steelworkers average $5.29 an hour, plus 39 cents an hour in cost-of-living benefits.

Meir To Form New Gov't

JERUSALEM (AP)-President Golda Meir was asked officially Wednesday to form a new coalition government, one month after her Labor party won a narrow plurality in national elections.

"I am cognizant of the great responsibility placed on my shoulders," Mrs. Meir said accepting the task from President Ephraim Katzir. She expressed confidence that a new government could be formed within the 21-day time limit.

Congress Revives Energy Bill

By DAVID C. MARTIN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Democratic leaders of Congress Wednesday looked for ways to revive the emergency energy bill and give President Nixon powers he requested to deal with the energy crisis.

The Senate voted Tuesday to send the bill back to conference with the House in an effort to remove a controversial provision designed to limit oil industry profits.

Asked Wednesday if the conferees would reconvene, Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield said, "I think so, but what they'll do in conference, I don't know."

Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., said Tuesday that without the bill the President would have to declare a national emergency before he could order gasoline rationing.

The administration had indicated it would make the current voluntary 10-gallon limit on gasoline sales mandatory as soon as the bill became law. It has also said it needs the bill before it can suspend certain environmental requirements to permit the burning of dirtier fuels.

In urging that the bill be returned to conference, however, the White House had said it had gotten by without emergency legislation and asked that time be taken to develop "a truly responsible product."

Informed sources said Senate-House conferees would meet Thursday and that if attempts at a compromise failed, many of the provisions would be tacked on to a separate energy measure now before the House. That bill, which would create a Federal Emergency Energy Administration, was scheduled for House debate Wednesday; but the leadership has agreed to postpone it for a few days.

House Speaker Carl Albert rejected suggestions that the FEEA bill was being held hostage to the emergency energy measure.

A comment by Mansfield prompted speculation that the FEEA bill might be used as a vehicle for passing some of the provisions in the emergency legislation. Asked if the emergency bill could be revived, Mansfield replied, "I think so — in bits and pieces."

The excess profits provision at issue would set up a renegotiation procedure that would take effect next year and allow consumers to demand retroactive refunds on fuel prices which had resulted in windfall profits.

Sen. Gaylord Nelson, D-Wis., sponsor of the motion to recommit, claimed the provision was unworkable and probably unconstitutional.

Judge Dismisses Howard Hughes Stock Fraud

RENO, Nev. (AP) — Charges of stock fraud against billionaire Howard Hughes in the purchase of a regional airline were dismissed Wednesday by a federal judge who called the indictment one of the worst he had ever seen.

U.S. District Court Judge Bruce Thompson dropped all nine counts in the federal grand jury indictment against Hughes and four other men.

In Washington, the Justice Department immediately said it would seek another indictment against the five persons as soon as possible. Department spokesman Robert Stevenson said government lawyers will seek to rewrite the charges in order to correct defects cited by Thompson in his decision Wednesday.

Charged along with the much-hidden and much-traveled Hughes were Robert Maheau, Chester C. Davis, David B. Charnay and James H. Nall.

The indictment related to charges that Hughes and others conspired to drive down the stock of Airwest, a Western feeder airline, and then pressured directors to sell to Hughes, who subsequently bought the airline and renamed it Hughes Airwest.

"It would be a perversion of justice to require the defendants to go to trial under this indictment, which has to be interpreted in a manner most favorable to the prosecution in order for the indictment to maintain any semblance of properly charging the defense," Thompson said.

In arguing for the motion to dismiss, defense attorneys said the indictment failed to allege a clearly illegal action on the part of Hughes and the four others charged. They said the language of the indictment was so muddled that they could not possibly mount a defense.

Thompson said the government could appeal his ruling or could present the charges again to a grand jury, which is what the Justice Department said it would do.

The judge said the indictment should have been more specific, should not have duplicated allegations in the nine counts included in the document and should not be open to speculation or interpretation.

Around The World

Cambodia

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP) - Cambodian Communists have asked the Viet Cong and North Vietnamese for at least a division of troops to help the Cambodian insurgents keep pressure on Phnom Penh, authoritative Western sources said Wednesday. The sources said the Viet Cong's central office for South Vietnam turned down the request because of friction between the Vietnamese and Cambodian Communists. But the Viet Cong agreed to send a commando unit to help the Cambodian insurgents gathered around Phnom Penh, the sources said.

Dublin

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) - Armed men took over buses and trucks at gunpoint Wednesday and left them at strategic points around central Dublin with simulated bombs inside. At least 15 men, believed by the police to be members of the outlawed Irish Republic Army, took part in the operation. Boxes placed on buses contained stones and oil drums with wires leading from them were found to be empty when the trucks were searched.

Rome

ROME (AP) - Bombs damaged two schools and destroyed a bar in the industrial hub of Milan Wednesday. The police said there were no casualties. Leaflets found at the explosion sites bore the signature of SAM, Mussolini Action Squads. The group, named after World War II Fascist dictator Benito Musselini, has claimed responsibility for over 50 terrorist acts in the last 50 years.

Bolivia

LA PAZ, Bolivia (AP) - President Huge Banzer told the armed forces there is a leftist civilian-military plot to overthrow his government, the army's commander, Gen. Carlos Alcereza, said Wednesday. Bolivia is under a state of siege to counter food-price increases. Alcereza did not say if there was any connection between the protests and the alleged conspiracy.

London

LONDON (AP) - Britain's coal miners began their strike vote Wednesday. About 1,200 miners at Leigh, Lancashire, in northwest England cast their ballots. Others were to follow on Thursday and Friday. The 280,000 miners' refusal to work overtime and weekends the last 12 weeks has cut Britain's coal production by 40 per cent.

Truancy Law Questioned By Office For Children

By SHELLY COHEN
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — A month-old law intended as a reform of the state's truancy and runaway child statutes will free juvenile courts from the burearcratic red tape that has delayed placement of youngsters in group care or foster homes, according to Boston Juvenile Court Judge Francis G. Poitrast,

The law, intended to decriminalize th offenses of truancy, stubborn, wayward and runaway child, is already in disrepute with such state agencies as the Office of Children and the Division of Youth Services, largely because of the discretion it places in the hands of court officials.

"Most of the services needed by children are needed right this minute, not when somebody gets around to it," Poitrast said.

Poitrast is one of the authors of the bill which passed the legislature last year. This year he may have to defend it against efforts to repeal major portions of it by the Office for Children.

Officials of that agency are fearful that children will be placed in unlicensed facilities.

"If a child needs a foster home that's already been inspected and approved by a probation officer, than I think I should be able to place a child there, not wait until some state agency gets around to deciding whether that facility should have a license," Poitrast said.

The judge complained that the Office of Children, which is in charge of licensing, "works at a snail's pace."

"The buck stops here," he said, "when that child is here in front of you and you have to act. The Office of Children can sit back in its ivory tower, we can't."

Of about a dozen cases heard under the new law, Poitrast said most of the youngsters were returned to the custody of their families and referred for counseling to family guidance agencies without a formal court hearing. None of the youngsters was placed in detention.

The law permits detention of up to 45 days for youngsters prior to a formal hearing before the court.

Poitrast maintains in some cases, particularly involving runaways, that detention is essential.

"I know the Office of Children doesn't want anyone in detention," he added, "They're so unrealistic."

A Gator Goes To College

DETROIT (AP) — All those rumors were true. There is a seven-foot alligator in the basement of Wayne State University's Old Main.

His name is Charlie and the 110-pound reptile shares a small apartment with a four-foot cayman, a cousin from South America. Their pad is complete with heat lamp and swimming pool.

Charlie's owner, a university employe and 32-year-old reptile fancier who insists on remaining anonymous, said he put Charlie and his cousin in the basement of Old Main in 1970 after inheriting both from a friend who moved to Australia.

He said he chose the campus landmark building because there just aren't many places in Detroit to keep a gator.

Since then, the rumor about an alligator in Old Main has been bouncing around the inner city campus. Only a small circle of campus employes and students knew the truth.

Even after a campus newspaper blew Charlie's cover, a lot of people still thought it was rumor.

Energy Saving Efforts

By BILL DENSMORE

An observer walking around the five college campuses sees few tangible examples of energy saving efforts. Perhaps most obvious was the sign of the elevator at Amherst College's Converse administration building:

"This elevator is a 5,400-watt light bulb -- don't turn it on."

--And on the Herter Hall lifts at UMass:

"Walk, don't ride."

UMass got the toughest energy break so far. Caught like the utilities and other major institutions converting an old coal power plant to oil, the University is now stuck sticking with the old one for economy.

The administration planned to open a $5-million, 3 boiler oil-fired heating and power plant at Tillson Farm on East Pleasant Street at this time, but decided not to because it would have begun using eight million gallons of oil a year - at 3 to 4 times the price of a year ago.

The existing plant, twin coal boilers and a singl oil one, uses only 3.6 million gallons a year of oil along with 50,000 tons of coal.

Finally, as classes start at UMass, students will remember the shortage of energy everytime they adjust the lights in a classroom or administration building. An orange and yellow plastic sticker on each switch reads:

"Kill-o-watt, conserve energy."

State Of The Union

President Nixon left them laughing at the Cape Cod lounge last night. They were laughing at him, not with him. To those who huddled in the lounge at the Student Union to watch the President deliver his State of the Union address on television, Nixon's speech was a mixture of black comedy and theatre of the absurd.

The entire act was a bit bizarre. Nixon's usual jowls seemed to hang down like an albatross, his face was filled with an unusual flow of sweat, above and beyond that caused by T.V. lights. He looked tired. He looked much older than the man who swept to victory over George McGovern little more than a year ago. It has been a bad year for Richard Nixon. Viewers did not have to wait for the President to acknowledge it in his speech, all they had to do was to look at his face.

Having Carl Albert and Vice President Gerald Ford lurk behind him like lifeless Votarys from the ancient past did nothing to lessen the macabre mood that led to forced applause by the Congress and snickering jokes and laughs by many T.V. viewers at UMass.

But what did the President have to say? Really nothing. For all the mention that he gave Spiro Agnew (not a word) you could believe that the former Vice President was never V.P. at all, rather some middle class peddler, selling Greek hero sandwiches somewhere in Concord.

Nixon tries to appear as a real advocate of Norman Vincent Peale's The Power of Positive Thinking. If things are going badly, don't talk about it. Agnew's gone, don't acknowledge it. The Watergate crisis is getting more and more intense, don't really recognize it.' The only time that Nixon directly spoke on Watergate was at the end of his speech when he quipped, "One year of Watergate is enough". He said this with a sickly grin.

ONE DAY OF WATERGATE IS ENOUGH!! We didn't plan it? Who did? Unfortunately the President did little to dispell our deepest fears that the plans for Watergate and the eventual coverup were conceived, or at least found comfort, in the White House. With Rose Marie Wood smiling grimly in the gallery, Nixon spoke not a word about the tape gap in the Haldeman tape. When Nixon spoke of the importance of personal and individual freedom in the United States today, I was amazed that he kept a straight face. I wonder how much comfort Daniel Ellsberg and his psychiatrist found in these words.

Daniel Shorr, CBS correspondent must have also been in stitches. Last year, Shorr, who is considered to be an "enemy" to the Nixon administration, was investigated on procedural grounds. When Shorr found out and got a bit hot under the collar, John Ehrlichman (remember him?), said that it was strictly procedural, because Shorr was being considered for a job. What job? Ehrlichman wouldn't say.

"The Entire Act Was A Bit Bizarre."

While Nixon likes to avoid bad news, he dwells on what he considers to be good news. While he didn't acknowledge mammoth white collar crime in and around the White House, he proudly pointed out that "crime in the streets in Washington is down 50 per cent." While more and more people are getting laid off from their jobs, Nixon insisted that 1974 would be a "year of progress".

The President continually pointed out that the United States was at "peace", and that he wanted his administration to be remembered as the one that brought "peace" to the United States. Yes, he ended the Vietnam War to the extent that no more Americans are dying there (that we know of), but Vietnamese are dying almost as much as ever. Apparently Nixon feels that the only lives worth saving are American, and the only interests worth protecting are American.

He spoke about the energy crisis. Yet for all his words I felt that he was presenting "too little too late". If he knew that we were going to have an energy crisis as early as two years ago, why did he wait until now to start trying to save and improve mass transit? Why didn't he pressure big business in Detroit to start moving to economy cars earlier? Why did he let auto and oil publicity campaigns continue to instill images of constant movement, of the need for cars for everything?

Nixon's proposals for health insurance were murky and uncertain. Hinting that socialization of health service was "un-American", he went far short of endorsing the progressive type of health insurance for which various senators, congressmen, and private citizens have been fighting over the past few years.

With a grin he told all that the Arab oil embargo would be ending soon, providing more fuel to ease, though not end, the energy crisis. It was as if he were saying, "If I give you gas for your car, will you forget about the unimportant issue of Watergate?" He stated firmly that the energy crisis was the "number one legislative concern".

Those watching the President over the tube in the Cape Cod room seemed amused. Yes, they laughed, joked, and grinned. But they were not happy grins; rather they were the smirks of frustration, helpless frustration at seeing a production no less planned than the "Checkers" speech. The red and white stripes were all that could be seen of the huge American flag that hung down behind the podium. They added the mood of a circus to the morbid scene of theatrical and political mockery.

"I Was Amazed That He Kept A Straight Face."

Watching the President on T.V. it seemed that this was one more offensive in Nixon's war, but it was uncertain just who the winners would be if the President won.

Despite the theatrics, President Nixon never touched the issues that affect the people who make up his constituency. Maybe the American people will see that this is a third-rate production that wouldn't last a day on off-off Broadway. Perhaps Nixon has maneuvered himself into a corner that even the ghost of Checkers will not help him slide through.

Letters To The Editor

Kohoutek: A Sign Of The Times

To The Editor:

The excitement and anticipation that gripped those who awaited the comet Kohoutek's fiery display overflowed from the scientist's vision into the eyes of the prophet. Kohoutek became a sign of the times. The world was warned of the doom expected to follow the comet.

Kohoutek came and the natural phenomenon of the century turned out to be a pin-point in the sky bearly visible to the naked eye. Everybody scoffed at the flop of the century. Dr. Kohoutek, the discoverer of the comet, surely was embarassed. Modern-day prophets walked away (perhaps with their tails between their legs) with their visions set on the arrival of Halley's Comet years ahead. And today Kohoutek is being forgotten with Agnew, the '67 Red Sox, grammatical structure, and (if I'm allowed a serious one) Jesus the Christ.

But, wait. What have the scientists explained? No one finds a reason for the letdown. Kohoutek was cited by the Sky Lab astronauts as a "magnificent orange and yellow flame" when it was on its way to the sun. Its orbit was to closer to the earth as it returned and the comet would be even brighter than what the astronauts saw. You and I both know different. So, what happened?

Maybe Jesus knew when he said of the end of the world in Luke 21:25, "Then there will be events in the skies--warnings, evil omens and portents in the sun, moon and stars and down here on earth the nations will be in turmoil."

If God were to work now, wouldn't Kohoutek and the miraculous change in its appearance, be all the world needs--and of course REJECTS!

Revise Tenure Standards

To The Editor:

While this letter is addressed to the UMass community in general, it is more specifically directed to those of you that have the power to grant TENURE to faculty members of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst. We, the undersigned, feel it is about time for you to take a long and hard look at the standards you use to determine whether a faculty member should receive tenure here or not. Revise them so they serve our "small" community to the best interests of all concerned. Students, especially undergraduates, are among the members of this all concerned group. The STUDENTS of this University suffer the most when Tenure Granting Committees decide to get rid of a faculty member who is very dedicated to his or her students, enjoys teaching them, and highly motivates them to learn, although possibly in an unusual style. Improved teaching like this should definitely not be repressed or subdued with the WEAPON of TENURE. If an instructor enjoys teaching undergraduates, and these students, in turn, enjoy the instructor's teaching, he or she should not be forced to orient themself towards a graduate level. This sort of injustice has happened here before and as we discovered at the very end of last semester is now happening again. We are mainly referring to the case of DR. RICHARD L. WEAVER, II presently (but unfortunately, not for much longer) in the Department of Communications Studies (formerly Speech).

Education should be interesting, fun, and worthwhile for all; it is not supposed to bore students, and faculty as well to death. We IMPLORE you to REVISE your standards so that TRUE QUALITY EDUCATION is achieved here and students will no longer have to suffer from your less than adequate decisions. You can start by reconsidering Dr. Weaver's case.

Sincerely hoping for change, we remain all the better for it as alumni of Dr. Weaver's 9:30 Small Group Communications class (Com. Stu. 202, Fall-1973).

Coming Back

By BOB SCHEIER

The beginning of the semester is one of those experiences you can always look forward to, knowing just what it's going to be like, and then not be disappointed when it actually happens.

Coming back to school after any kind of a break always brings back memories of elementary school pencil-boxes, frosty fall mornings, What-I-Did-Over-My-Summer-Vacation essays, and all the other garbage department stores pump out to make mothers buy back to school clothes.

But no doubt about it — coming back to school is a change, from the generally more relaxed schedules people follow during vacations. People come back from boring jobs, cross country trips, a month at home, to the daily small worries, frustrations, and joys of being a student at UMie Village.

But coming back is also a return; saying hello to people again, going back the the Hatch and yes, seeing that the same people are still curled up in the same chairs reading the same books, listening to the juke box and watching everyone else from the corner of their eyes. The ritual of registration in the smoke-filled cavern of the Cage — the flurry of course change cards, the hurried search through the course schedule for a requirement that fits you schedule — this is something you can establish in your mind as a landmark to look forward to, and then, sure enough, it happens, just like you pictured it.

And while it seems too neat to be true, being reunited with people after a one-month intersession seems exactly one third as intense as being reunited after a three month summer vacation.

Because the exhiliration of coming back to friends and those first heady feelings that, yes, maybe I'll learn something this semester (or get a good average, depending on your goals) is another unique feature of the beginning of the semester: besides cleaning up your schedule and your apartment, you have three or four days to just hang around campus and do nothing.

Nothing, that is, except party. Partying at the beginning of the semester is unique. There are no muttered comments about what papers you should be doing, or what book you should be reading, or that you should be in the library or running a program on the computer. No, damnit, you should be doing just what you are doing — sitting down with some friends and some well worn albums and your favorite intoxicant and getting blown away.

All of which can make a senior feel kind of sad that it's the last time I'll be coming back to school. But the point of it all isn't coming back to school specifically, but moving into something new, something challenging, a beginning. And the experience of new beginnings will hopefully be there long after I've forgotten what it was like to stand in line at the bookstore.

Brooke Thinks Nixon Will Resign

WASHINGTON (AP) - Sen. Edward Brooke, R-Mass. said Wednesday that President Nixon has done a great disservice to the American people if he has not divulged information that would clear him of Watergate suspicions.

"If such information is available, let the American people have it and lets get on with it," Brooke said.

Senate Republican leader Hugh Scott has said he has seen copies of summaries of White House tape recordings that clear the President.

The White House has declined to make those summaries public.

"I can't see any justification at all for withholding information that would absolve the President of any connection with Watergate," Brooke said.

Brooke was interviewed on the CBS radio network program, "Capitol Cloakroom."

He said also that Watergate damage will lose many congresstional seats and state houses for Republiians in this fall's election.

And he said he still believes the President will resign before putting "this country through the torturous proceeding of impeachment..." '

"I think that before that comes, Richard Nixon will tender his resignation even though he has used such strong language about not resigning ....," Brooke said.

"I don't expect the President would say that he intended to resign," Brooke said "If he does resign, he'll just resign."

Brooks said also that he believes Vice President Gerald R. Ford can do much to soften the election setbacks he said Watergate would otherwise cost Republicans.

"We need someone in the Republican party that can go through the country..untainted by Watergate, and campaign vigorously for the renaissance of the Republican party and carrying a brief for a vital two-party system of government," Brooke said of Ford.

Last night, in front of Congress and on network TV, President Nixon spouted out the State of the Union.

Social Workers May Strike

BOSTON (AP) — The president of the union representing Welfare Department social workers appealed Wednesday to Gov. Francis W. Sargent to intervene and head off a strike he said would be "bad for us, bad for the recipients and bad for the commonwealth."

Paul F. Quirk spoke the morning after some 400 members of Local 509 of the Social Workers Guild — which has 1,775 members — voted overwhelmingly to reject the department's last offer. They authorized "work action." Welfare Commissioner Steven Minter has said he would give the required seven-day notice to terminate the old contract and divide social workers into two groups, those handling financial assistance and those handling social services.

If he does, said Quirk, "we will not cooperate with the process. I don't think that's disruptive though the department might call it that. We're very clearly committed to working under the old contract."

The department has been losing federal aid at the rate of $2.5 million a year because it has not made such a separation. Of its about 2,200 social workers, the department wants to assign 1,375 tc financial assistance payments.

The sticking point in negotiations is the caseload of financial assistance workers — the department proposes 240, the union 120.

"We don't want a strike and We don't want a confrontation," said Quirk. "We call on Gov. Francis W. Sargent to use his good offices with the Welfare Department."

Sargent is on vacation and there was no immediate response from his office. Quirk admitted a substantial part of union members wanted a strike, as shown by the defeat by only 25 or 30 votes Tuesday night of a motion aimed in that direction.

"The chances are very good for a wildcat strike unless we can make progress in a week or so," Quirk said.

The union staged a two-day walkout in 1970 that was settled by the intervention of Donald R. Dwight, then commissioner of administration and finance and new lieutenant governor.

"We're willing to sit down and hack this one out. We're not that far apart," Quirk said.

Quirk said the difference between the two parties could be covered by an additional 50 social workers and $200,000 worth of overtime.

"We agree that we should have the $2.5 million in federal funds," he said.

Racism In The Media

BOSTON (AP) — A black congressman charged Wednesday that "widespread, long-standing and deeply entrenched racism within the mass media is undeniably a fact of life" in the United States.

Rep. William Clay, D-Missouri, a member of the Black Caucus of the House, told the annual meeting of the Boston Community Media Committee that "The failure of the mass communications media to effectively confront and grapple with the problem of institutional racism is prima facie evidence that it has neglected its mandate to expose, to inform or to educate."

Clay said the media have been used primarily for "entertaining whites" and that "access to ownership and employment in the electronic field of communications has almost been totally denied to nonwhites."

Clay spoke specifically of public broadcasting, where he said racism is overt. He said employment statistics show a lack of minority personnel, especially in top managerial positions.

Speaking of the broadcasting industry, Clay said blacks must continue to demand "legislatively-mandated and court-sanctions rights to ensure the responsiveness of the broadcast industry to black needs, interests and problems."

The Black Caucus held an investigation into the mass media two years ago, he said, and concluded that blacks were being "systematically excluded..and either ignored, played down or ridiculed."

The Boston Community Media Committee, organized in 1968, includes members of Boston's minority communities and representatives of print and broadcast media in the city.

H.C. Prof. Will Run

WORCESTER, Mass. (AP) — A 39-year-old Holy Cross College professor will make his first try for elective office in seeking the Democratic nomination for Congress in the 3rd District.

John B. Anderson, 39, the 1972 central Massachusetts coordinator of the Democratic presidential campaign, said Wednesday he will walk through the towns in the district "listening to the people."

Anderson said Congress needs "new ideas, new blood and new enthusiasm for action."

The seat is currently held by Harold D. Donohue, a Democrat.

Firemen Injured

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Four Cambridge firemen were injured Wednesday as they fought a three-alarm blaze which destroyed the Super Value Outlet discount store near Porter Square.

Officials said the fire, first reported at 2:35 a.m., was not brought under control until 12:50 p.m. Morning rush-hour traffic was snarled as fire apparatus blocked the street.

Damage was estimated at $200,000 by officials. Two of the injured firemen, Harry Ryan, 45, and William Hunter, 38, suffered facial burns and were treated at a Cambridge hospital. The other two injured men, Thomas Connarton, 42, and Robert Currier, 29, suffered smoke inhalation and were treated at the scene.

The cause of the fire was under investigation, officials said.

Smith Presents Recital

Monica Jakuc, a member of the Smith College piano faculty, will present a solo recital this Sunday, February 3, at 8:00 p.m. in Sage Hall on the Smith campus.

The program will feature two works: Preludes, Book II (1910-13) by Claude Debussy; and the first performance of a new work by James McElwaine entitled "Dance Changes for Piano" (1974).

Claude Debussy wrote two books of Preludes, each containing twelve pieces. Book II shows him as a truly twentieth century composer, in command of a wide range of styles and moods. Some of Debussy's best pieces are in this book: "La terrasse des audiences du clair de lune" and "Ondine". It also contains the better knowni"La Puerta del Vino", "General Lavine - eccentric", and "Feux d'artifice".

James McElwaine's "Dance Changes for Piano" was written for Monica Jakuc. It is a fifteen-minute work consisting of four pieces which draw the jazz idiom. The first piece is the longest and is entitled "Hard Times for the Men from Mars." The other tunes are: "Afternoon on an Eggplant", "Seventeen Carpet Sweepers", and "More Sinister Than Popcorn".

James McElwaine has been an Assistant Professor of Music at Hampshire College for the past two years. He is a musician of unusual versatility who functions as a composer, conductor, clarinetist, saxophonist and pianist in both Western classical and jazz improvisation. He holds a graduate degree in music from Yale University.

Ms. Jakuc is an Assistant Professor of Music at Smith College, and has taught at Smith for the past five years. She holds a graduate degree from the Juilliard School of Music and has studied with James Friskin, Beveridge Webster, Leon Fleisher, and Russell Sherman.

The recital on Sunday evening will be open to the public free of charge.

Saxophone Concert Coming

The New England Coalition on Nuclear Pollution and the Hampshire-Franklin Committee to Safeguard Against Nuclear Dangers announced today that a benefit concert by the Sigurd Rascher Saxophone Quartet will be performed in Amherst on Wednesday, February 20 at 8 p.m. in the Grace Episcopal Church. Proceeds from the concert will aid in furthering the work of the two groups in the Montague area where Northeast Utilities has announced plans to build two giant nuclear reactors.

This quartet, the world's most prominent saxophone ensemble, will play classical works as well as contemporary compositions written especially for the Rascher group by composers such as Paul Hindemith, Walter Hartley, John David Lamb, Everett Gates, and Ivan Pagachich. Currently on tour in Europe, the Quartet has received high praise from the press for its "extraordinary musical qualities, technical vituosity, and uncommonly flexible sound"--promising an unusual and exciting musical event in the area.

Sigurd Rascher, the Quartet's leader, has long been an opponent of nuclear power. Warning that further nuclear development threatens to pollute the entire planet in irriversible ways, Rascher calls for an imaginative effort to develop alternative sources of energy, especially those from the sun. He offers the Quartet's talent to the New England Coalition on Nuclear Pollution and the Hampshire-Franklin Committee to Safeguard Against Nuclear Dangers which have been working for these same goals.

Tickets may be purchased from the Mercantile and Whole Wheat Trading Co. in Amherst, Suttor's Mill and Contemporary Trends in Northampton, Home Comfort and the World Eye Bookstore in Greenfield, the Odyssey Bookstore in South Hadley, or by writing to the New England Coalition on Nuclear Pollution at Box 877, Leverett, Mass. 01054 or by calling 413-549-6725.

If space is available, there will be admission at the door by donation.

Field Experience In Nursing

Marianne starter her labor, readied herself for the hospital, and called Barbara to go with her.

Barbara had attended the childbirth classes with Marianne and now she would observe labor and the birth of a son.

Barbara Drake is a first semester nursing student and as part of her education at UMass she spends several hours each week out in the field making home visits, keeping informed of family health problems and serving as a source of health information. She is one of a few dozen such students, and Marianne's family is just one she keeps in touch with.

Now that Marianne's second child is born, Barbara visits regularly to continue to learn about families.

Home visits are a laboratory for nursing, because they give the future nurses time to apply some of their classroom learning. Faculty members spend time at the four satellite learning centers where the students are based. The centers are at the Brightwood-Riverview Health Center, and the Springfield Model Cities Health Clinic, both in Springfield; and in the Northampton-Amherst area and in Greenfield.

Sometimes the faculty members conduct classes in the field, but usually they are present to talk individually with students as questions arise. If a nursing student, for example, is visiting a family where one member is recovering from surgery, the student might want to talk about the stress the family is experiencing, so that she may help. In the field, faculty members represent specialties such as medical-surgical, obstetrics, pediatrics, psychiatry and community nursing.

The nursing education emphasis these days at UMass is toward meeting the health care needs of people, wherever they may be. Asst. Prof. Karen Johnson, chairman of the curriculum committee, explains the change with a question and answer: "Where are the people who need help with their health problems? Only 15 per cent are in hospitals." She says that although hospitals employ about 85 per cent of all working nurses, "a hospital is just one part of a community. There are a multitude of other health services provided and needed by those with health problems."

Nowadays, she explains, nursing is paying more attention to keeping people well, rather than waiting until they are sick. The nursing students at UMass learn much about "wellness," and even though they are early in their education, they are able to provide families with help and guidance in maintaining health and in managing common health problems, she says. In general, the families have been very receptive to the nursing students who visit, according to Prof. Johnson. Students make an average of one-half to one full hour visit every other week to a family, and each student sees two to three families.

With the supervision of faculty members, the future nurses "learn to understand health problems that the families see as problems, not just what we think problems are; and then try to provide help," says Prof. Johnson. A nursing student also talks to families about immunizations, home safety, nutrition, and other subjects which come up. She assesses the family environment and keeps health histories of all members, while maintaining primary interest in one member--perhaps a newborn or an oldster or someone just home from surgery.

Some of the students are also involved with nursery school youngsters to whom they teach aspects of health such as brushing teeth, washing hands, and eating the right foods.

Other field experiences are at the outpatient departments at Springfield Hospital Medical Center, Wesson Memorial Hospital in Springfield, the Jewish Home for the Aged in East Longmeadow, Heritage Hall in Springfield, Providence Hospital in Holyoke, Franklin County Public Hospital in Greenfield, Farren Memorial Hospital in Turners Falls, and Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton.

Public Administration Fellowship

Students interested in a career in public administration at the national, state, or local level are offered an opportunity to apply for a fellowship to study at two state universities. Fellowships for single fellows have a total value of $4600 of which $3300 is a cash stipend and $1300 the value of remission of fees and tuition. Married students receive an additional cash grant of $400.

Beginning about mid-June the Fellows will serve a ten-weeks internship in a state, local, or federal agency in the South. During the 1974-75 academic year the Fellows will spend the Fall semester at either The University of Alabama or Kentucky and the Winter and Spring quarters at the University of Tennessee. Fellows who complete the Program satisfactorily will receive a Certificate in Public Administration. Fellows also may complete an MA or MPA at one of the universities attended. The Program provides all course work necessary for these degrees.

Candidates must be American citizens who have completed or will complete a bachelor's degree with any recognized major by June of 1974. Fellowships are awarded to those students who demonstrate a combination of high academic achievement and a real interest in a career in public administration in the South.

Applications should be submitted as soon as possible but must be received by March 1, 1974. For information and applications write to: Coleman B. Ransone, Jr., Educational Director, Southern Regional Training Program in Public Administration, Drawer I, University, Alabama, 35486.

Marijuana Convictions

Persons convicted for possession of marijuana before the Controlled Substances Act went into effect on July 1, 1972 are now eligible to have their records sealed, according to a law signed by Governor Sargent.

The bill, sponsored by Rep. George Sacco (D-Medford), is an effort to help pre-July 1972 possession offenders who now have a felony on their record. The law which went in effect on December 28, allows persons who have no drug violation on their record except possession of marijuana to fill out a petition with the sentencing court whereupon the court will automatically seal the individual's record.

Rep. Sacco's bill accompanies another sealing provision passed earlier this year which covers people who have committed crimes which are no longer crimes under new law. This bill applies to people convicted of drunkeness as well as being in the presence of any drug except heroin. People falling into this category may have their records sealed immediately by filling out the proper forms with the Department of Probation.

Once a record is sealed, a person has no record in the eyes of the public; when asked on employment or license applications if he has been arrested or convicted, he may answer "no".

With both record sealing laws, the individual must take the initiative to have his record sealed; the provisions do not apply automatically.

Center Forming For Spiritual Groups

A Spiritual Resource Center is at present being coordinated through the joint efforts of Room-To-Move and the Center for the Integration of Academic and Meditative Disciplines. We are attempting to collect information concerning all the area spiritual resources, and provide a center where that information will be accessible. We also hope to set up the mechanisms whereby students will be able to practice meditative disciplines as an element of the process of higher education, as well as provide channels for study in yoga, various religions, marshall arts, transpersonal psychology, etc. On hand will be as complete a listing as possible of all courses, seminars, and colloquia presently offered in these areas.

What we need now, in order to make our work easier and less time consuming, is for groups and individuals who are active in these fields to get in touch with us and offer information. We would like to hear from all the various spiritual groups; from teachers of yoga and meditation; from people active in astrology, altered states, psychology, religion, mythology, and plain good living. On Monday and Tuesday afternoons from 12 to 4 call 545-2166. On Monday evening from 6:30 to 11 or Thursday afternoon from 1 to 5 call 545-0400.

Volunteer For Belchertown

The Belchertown Volunteers are looking for more students to join them at the state school this semester when they resume their activities this weekend.

The program for this Saturday is for old and new members alike. For those who have never been to Belchertown, an orientation program will be conducted by staff of the volunteer department and a few of the unit the directors will outline their need for volunteers in certain areas. A tour of the Belchertown State School will follow. The tour will serve to acquaint new members with the different areas, age groups and buildings where the volunteers will work. The "old" volunteers can pick up where they left off at the end of last year. Last semester, Belchertown Volunteers worked with residents in the Nursery and Children's Unit, Adolescent Living and Learning Unit, G Building (severely retarded adolescents), Infirmary (physically handicapped) and the Blind Unit. Many more volunteers will be needed for each area.

The bus to Belchertown will leave from Haigis Mall at the Whitmore Administration Building on Saturday at 12:45 p.m. It will return to campus by 4:00 p.m.

The Status Of Women

In January '73, UMass began a short-range feasibility study of the higher educational needs of local poor women, particularly those on welfare. Since that time, and as a consequence of the study, 13 area welfare mothers have been admitted as undergraduates to the University and have formed an organization known as the Poor Women's Task Force.

Each member of the Task Force negotiated her admission and financial aid package with UMass. Additional sources of financial support have included the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, federal loans, and small grants from private organizations. Over the course of the last year, members of the Poor Women's Task Force have been able to share with each other all of the information they have each acquired while becoming college students. This particular kind of group support contributes to the commitment of the Task Force to bring additional numbers of mature, motivated women to UMass as students.

At this time the Poor Women's Task Force is interested in locating women on welfare who have considered the idea of a college education, but who have always rejected it for economic reasons. A series of workshops is being planned by members of the Task Force for late January and early February, '74. These workshops would be for poor women who want to consider coming to UMass as full-time students; they would include information on admission, financial aid, and what financial support could be expected from the welfare office. In addition, some workshops would focus on the problems Task Force members have had in becoming students again; for example, being in classes where most students are between 18-21 years old, writing papers, and planning time to study.

A questionnaire has been developed by a sub-committee of the Faculty Senate Committee on the Status of Women to obtain reliable information about the needs of the University community in the area of child day care. The data obtained will be used to make realistic recommendations to the appropriate Vice Chancellors.

Please help us to help you by obtaining a copy of the questionnaire, completing it and returning it as soon as possible.

The questionnaire will be available at the following locations around the 1st of February: Everywoman's Center, North Village Day Care Center, North Village Resource Center, Bowditch Hall, Day Care Center at New Africa House, Commuter Affairs, Financial Aid Office, Student Activities Office and the Campus Center Information Desk.

If you are interested in University sponsored day care, please complete a questionnaire. Your cooperation is essential!

Courses Offered Up On The Hill

Orchard Hill is alive and well and offering a wide variety of interdisciplinary three-credit courses this semester. We hope that the seven clusters that the courses fall into (Citizenship and Social Change, Society and the Arts, Racial Consciousness and the Third World, Science, Technology and Society, Women and Society; Human Identity and Changing Sex Roles, Society and the Outcast, Education and the Community) come together in a planned full-scale educational program. Two of the courses, "Planning an Educational Community" and "Making a Life and Making a Living" are specifically designed to draw upon the expertise of the University faculty, the resources of the other Orchard Hill courses, and the educational needs and personal concerns of the undergraduate population of the University in order to describe such a program and serve University students, the institution of the University, and the community in a most productive way.

British Columbia

For the third consecutive year, UMass is sponsoring an exchange program with the University of Victoria in British Columbia under which a few UMies are accepted for study at the Canadian university and an equal number of their students study here.

The University of Victoria is located in the outskirts of Victoria, a city of 175,000, capital of British Columbia, at the southeast tip of Vancouver Island. The temperature is mild and it seldom has snow in the winter. The city of Victoria has a charming, British-like atmosphere, enhanced by theaters, quaint restaurants and boutiques. The modern, centralized campus overlooks the Puget Sound. Both Vancouver and Seattle are accessible by air or ferry, the quality of instruction is excellent, and the academic standards stringent".

Applicants for the program at the University of Victoria should have at least a 3.0 cumulative average. Students should plan to go during their junior or senior years and for the full academic year, not a semester only. The proposed program of study should fit into their degree program, as, after successful completion of the program, exchange participants will get full academic credit toward their degrees.

Tuition and fees at the University of Victoria are approximately the same as the University of Massachusetts, and travel costs to the West Coast would be the only additional expense. A limited amount of financial aid may be available for travel costs. Students interested in applying for the program should contact Judy Epstein, International Programs Office, 239 Whitmore.

Germany

The German Academic Exchange Service (Deutscher Akademischer Austauschdienst) has announced the availability of sizeable scholarships for eight weeks of study, during the summer and early Fall months, in German language courses at the Goethe Institutes in the Federal Republic of Germany.

The scholarships are for United States students from all fields except German. Applicants must be between the age of 18 and 32, have had at least one year of college German, and have attended a college or university for at least two years prior to the beginning of the scholarship dates.

The grant for the eight week session is DM 2.300 or approximately $851.00 at the present rate of exchange. After payment of tuition, lodging and part of the cost of board, an estimated $220.00 will remain as personal allowance to cover any additional living expenses. In addition to this, the DAAD pays the premium for health and accident insurance. The cost of international travel must be carried by the participants.

Applicants can choose from the following sessions prior to the action of the Exchange Service: June and July; July and August; August and September and October. Once the applicant has designated a course period and has been granted funds, no change can be made nor can grants be extended.

Applications can be obtained from the GERMAN ACADEMIC EXCHANGE SERVICE, 1 Fifth Avenue - Suite 11D, New York, N.Y. 10003 and must be received at their office by FEBRUARY 25, 1974.

Ireland

A new academic exchange program initiated by the International Programs Office of the UMass and the University College, Dublin, Ireland will begin in the 1974-75 academic year. Through this exchange effort, an equal number of American and Irish students will be eligible for a year of study abroad while accumulating credits toward their degree from the home institution.

The campus of the University College, founded in 1851 but transferred to its present location in 1959, is equipped with a library of over 350,000 volumes, expansive laboratory facilities and a student health service. The student body of approximately 9,500 full time students, 185 of which are foreigners, resides in off-campus housing around the University. Students on the exchange from UMass will be aided in finding appropriate housing in such accomodations as a guesthouse, apartment, or with an Irish family.

Participants in the exchange program have access to most of the Facilities of the University College which include Arts, Philosophy, Celtic Studies, Commerce, Science, Medicine, Law, Engineering and Architecture. The language of the institution is English so the language barrier is minimal.

Juniors and seniors with at least a 3.0 cumulative average are eligible for the exchange. The year at the University College in Dublin should not exceed the cost of a year on the Amherst campus. The only additional expense is that of international air fare for which a limited amount of financial aid is available. Interested students should contact Judy Epstein at the International Programs Office, 239 Whitmore, by March 1.

Wanna Work In Europe?

There is a new and interesting way around the problem of scarce student jobs. Any student between the ages of 17 and 27 can obtain a temporary paying student job in Europe through a new mail application system. Jobs, working papers, room and board arrangements and other travel documents are processed in advance.

The work is done on a non-profit basis by the SOS-Student Overseas Services, a student run organization specializing in helping American students in Europe for the past 16 years. SOS also provides a brief orientation in Europe to insure each student a good start on the job.

Standard wages are paid in addition to the profitable advantage of free room and board which is provided with each hotel, resort and restaurant job. Most jobs are in Switzerland, France, Austria and parts of Alpine Germany in ski resorts during the winter months, and in lakeside and city resorts, hotels and restaurants during the spring and summer months.

Most jobs do not require knowledge of a foreign language (but what an opportunity for language students!), and willingness to work, adaptability and maintenance of an open mind count more than experience.

Applications should be submitted in time to allow for processing the job, working papers, room and board arrangements and other travel documents. Students can cut processing time by obtaining and holding until requested, 3 passport size photos and a letter of recommendation from a teacher or former employer. Interested students may obtain an application form, job listings and descriptions, and the SOS Handbook on earning your way in Europe by sending their name, address, name of educational institution and $1 (for postage, printing, handling and addressing only) to either SOS-Student Overseas Services, Box 5173, Santa Barbara, Calif. 93108, or to S.O.S. - 22 Ave. de la Liberte, Luxembourg, Europe.

Gymnasts Split During Break

By WALT POWERS

"In the long run we're probably better off".

It was the voice of UMass gymnastics coach Tom Dunn looking for a silver lining behind the cloud of defeat that covered a meet he dearly wanted to win. It was more wistful than desparate. After waltzing through early season encounters against Syracuse, Boston State, Pitt, and Army, the UMass gymnastics team had faced reality in the form of the University of Temple, and lost 159-154.85.

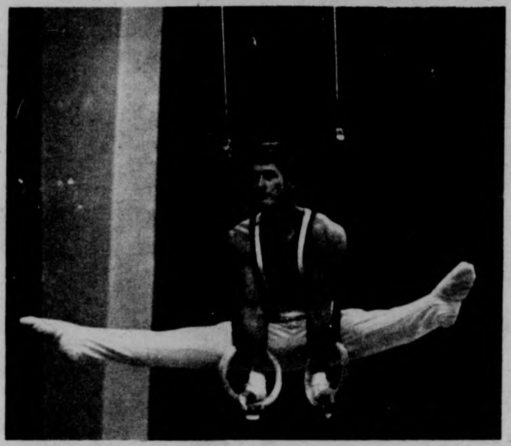
UMass had hoped to win the meet, and the loss left Dunn disappointed. It also left him convinced that Temple just might be the team to knock Penn State off of its Eastern League throne. The Nitanny Lions, last years NCAA runners-up, and undefeated after five meets this year, invade the Cage this Saturday, and Dunn concedes that the loss to Temple has probably made his gymnasts tougher and more determined.

The loss to Temple left the Minutemen with an even split for their two-game intercession schedule. On January 19th they defeated a relatively weak Army team at West Point, 157.61-148.6 at West Point. The Minutemen won all six events, and all-arounds Steve Scuderi, Bill Bruillet, and Gene Whelan scored near or above 51.00. UMass benefitted from the return of veterans Rich Seikunas, Jay Thomsen, and Jack Fabricante. UMass also used a number of freshmen, including the Marks twins, Paul and Steve, Pete Lusk, and transfer Steve Clancy. All were impressive.

Bad breaks told the story at Philadelphia. Had they gone against Temple, UMass would have vaulted into Eastern League contention. Temple grabbed an early lead, but after two events UMass remained within striking distance. Freak breaks on good long horse and parallel bar routines then gave the Owls the meet. Temple went on to sweep every event. Gene Whelan was again the team's high (9.10) scorer and leading all-around (53.15).

At this point in the season, Penn State, Temple, and Southern Connecticut appear to be the class of the league, with a group including UMass, Springfield, and Navy right behind. The turning point in the season will occur in the next twenty days. In this period, UMass faces Penn State, Southern Connecticut, Navy, and Springfield. Three of these meets will be held at home.

Syracuse, Army, Cornell and Pitt will battle it out for league doormat.



PURE CONCENTRATION is the expression on the face of Gene Whelan, an All-America candidate for the UMass gymnastics team.

Celts Spurt Sinks Cavs

BOSTON AP — Jo Jo White and Don Nelson shot the Celtics to a 17-point lead two minutes into the second quarter Wednesday night and Boston went on to a 120-108 National Basketball Association victory over the Cleveland Cavaliers.

Nelson pushed in 10 points and White tallied nine to send the Celtics out to a 35-22 lead at the quarter, and baskets by Paul Westphal and White stretched it to 39-32.

A strong first half by Len Wilkens, with 11 points, and Bobby Smith, who hit his 14-point game average in the first half, kept Cleveland in the contest. The Cavaliers were down 62-55 at the half.

But the Celtics put it away in the third period with Wesphal driving for nine points and assisting on two spectacular layins by John Havlicek and White to build up a 96-77 lead at the start of the fourth quarter.

White led all the scorers with 27 points, while Dave Cowens had 20 and Nelson 19 for Boston. Wilkens scored 23 and Smith 20 for the Cavaliers.

Awrey Vindicated

By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Sports Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — Everyone was talking about how wide open and exciting the National Hockey League All-Star game was, but for Don Awrey, the 6-4 West victory was that and more. Awrey is in his 10th year in the NHL. For nine of those years he played defense quite capably for the Boston Bruins. His only problem was that the Bruin defense was named Bobby Orr, and Awrey got lost in a shuffle of names that also included Ted Green, Dallas Smith and lately, Carol Vadnais.

So last summer, he was shuffled off to St. Louis. And this winter he was picked to start for the West All-Stars.

"It was my first game and I wanted it to be a good one," Awrey said after a typically steady but unspectacular defensive performance. "I've been nervous every since I learned I'd been picked on the team and for the last five nights I bet I haven't averaged five hours sleep.

Awrey's luck was the kind anyone would have when he leaves the shadow of an Orr or an Esposito.

"The people who chose this team saw something in my play this year that nobody saw when I was in the other division, and I really wanted to prove they were right," he said. "It would have been awful if I had played poorly."

The people who played in and watched the game came away convinced that no one played poorly.

"This was a good one, not like last year when nobody seemed to take it seriously," said Gary Unger, Awrey's St. Louis teammate who had a goal and an assist and was named the game's Most Valuable Player.

Foreman Leaves Garden Early

By ED SCHUYLER JR.
AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK AP — As far as heavyweight champion George Foreman was concerned, school was out after four rounds of the Muhammad Ali-Joe Frazier fight Monday night. And that's why he left Madison Square Garden. "I couldn't get an education," Foreman said Wednesday. "They both fought a good fight but I saw how things were going and knew how it would end. I couldn't learn anything."

Foreman made his comments at a press luncheon to formally announce his title defense against Ken Norton March 26 at Caracas, Venezuela. Norton also attended the Ali-Frazier match — he stayed to see Ali get the decision — but said that the only fights he's interested in watching are the ones Foreman's been in.

Norton said he is studying films of the champion's fights "to try to find some way to nulify his power. He's very strong.

"Fighting Ali was like a game of chess," said Norton who split two fights with Ali. "Ali has tremendous speed. With Foreman, it's just the opposite. Ali is a boxer. Foreman is a classic slugger."

"Norton knows what I'm gonna try to do," said Foreman, who refuses to shake hands with Norton and never smiles when he poses with him for publicity pictures. "There is no way I'm gonna be laughing and shaking Ken Norton's hand right now," said Foreman.

Dick Sadler, one of Foreman's handlers, defended the choice of Norton as the opponent for Foreman's second defense by saying Ali and Frazier each turned down a chance at Foreman to have their rematch.

"Ken Norton is the No. 1 contender available," said Sadler. It is known that Foreman has plagued by legal entanglements concerning his management. But the champion, who was criticized for making his first defense against Joe "King" Reman, defended his lack of activity by saying that he has trouble finding men willing to fight him.

Foreman is guaranteed $700,000 against 40 per cent of all income, while Norton is guaranteed $200,000 against 20 per cent, Barry Burnstein, president of Video Techniques, Inc., said.

Video Techniques owns the ancillary rights to the fight and will handle the closed circuit telecast. The other promoter for the first heavyweight title fight in the history of South America is Telemedia de Panama.

Site of the match will be El Peliedre, a new 14,000-seat indoor arena.

Adamsons Lead Tracksters Past Lethargic Catamounts

By SCOTT HAYES

About the same time when most of us were watching our convetable semester break come to an abrut close and trying to prepare for the Spring Semester, the UMass Indoor Track team was in Burlington, Vermont for a meet with the Catamounts. UMass won the contest, which took place last Saturday, by the score of 79-39 for its second win of the season.

The Minutemen were outscored 31-23 by Vermont in the field events, but came storming back in the running events. Sweeping four events and winning both the mile and two-mile relays, UMass made up the deficit and went on to win easily.

Bob Adamson and Mike Bilsza were the only double winners in the meet. Adamson won the long and triple jumps with leaps of 22'¼" and 44'1". Bilsza took the 35-pound weight throw with a toss of 51'6" and won the shot put with a fling of 46'4" to beat Vermont.

Ken Adamson, Bob Adamson, and Larry Whitfield swept the 50-yard dash with Adamson's winning time of 5.6. Jim Hennessey won the 45-yard high hurdles in 5.9, with teammates Curt Stegerwald and Mel Cobb taking second and third. Pete Byron led a sweep of the 1,000-yard run with a time of 2:17.1. Devin Croft and Bill Gillin placed second and third, respectively, to complete the sweep. UMass outscored Vermont 9-0 in the mile run with John Maloney, Tom Maguire and Tom Wilson taking the top three places. Maloney won the event with a time of 4:21.

Barron Littlefield was the only other individual winner, taking the 600-yard run in 1:16.1. Steve Crimmins took third for UMass in the 600. Bob Bocash captured second in the 35-pound weight throw and third in the shot put. Scott Herman placed second in the shot.

Mike Berry set a new University of Vermont school record in the two-mile with a time of 9:15.8. Berry finished ahead of John McGrail and Chris Farmer of UMass.

The winning team in the mile relay constisted of Curt Stegerwald, Barron Littlefield, Steve Crimmins and Larry Whitfield. The four UMass runners were timed in 3:31.4. In the two-mile relay, Harry Kelley, Chet Mysliwicz, Francis O'Keefe and Jim Hunt teamed up to win the event in 8:11.8.

SHORT SPRINTS---Only other action for the squad took place in Hanover, New Hampshire at the Dartmouth Relays. The 4-mile relay at Hanover was won by UMass. Tom Maguire, Bill Gillin, Chris Farmer and Randy Thomas joined to take the event in 17:23.2, which averages out to 4:21 per mile. In the distance-medley relay, the team of Maguire, Farmer, Gillin and Steve Crimmins captured second place. The Toronto Olympic Club had the only relay team to finish ahead of UMass. The TOC team won the race in 10:14. Individually, Bob Adamson captured third in the invitational long jump while Randy Thomas ran an 8:59.8 two-mile. The win at Burlington upped the squad's record to 2-3, the first win having been December 1, 1973 when the Minutemen topped Maine 66-52.

Pennington, Berra Go In NFL Draft

Late draft results fom New York report that Peil Pennington, quarterback from UMass, and wide receiver Tim Berra were both drafted in the last two rounds.

Berra went to the Baltimore Colts in the 16th round while his teammate was picked up by the Denver Broncos in the final 17th round.

Neither could be reached for comment on the draft late last night but it was known they had both hoped to go higher in the draft.

Pennington and Berra had appeared in the North-South Shrine game on Christmas Day and, although they had not played as well as they hoped, Head Scout for Quadra Scouting Agency, Charlie Hall, told them not to worry as they had had a good week of practice.

New England Trades Kiner

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) — The New England Patriots went in heavy for linebackers and running backs during the second and final day of this year's National Football League draft. The Patriots acquired 11 players Wednesday including three linebackers and three running backs.

The Patriots also acquired two linebackers and a running back Tuesday, in addition to a guard and a wide receiver.

Coach Chuck Fairbanks started off New England's activity Wednesday by trading one of his two sixth round draft picks for Jack Mildren of the Baltimore Colts. Mildren, who was Fairbanks' quarterback at Oklahoma two years ago, will be tried in the defensive backfield, Fairbanks said.

Fairbanks used his other sixth round pick to get punter Chuck Ramsey of Wake Forest. His next pick came in the seventh round and Fairbanks selected Nebraska fullback Maury Damkroger, a 6-2, 228-pounder who will be tried as a linebacker.

Fairbanks then traded away outside linebacker Steve Kiner to the Houston Oilers for their ninth round pick. He selected Ed McCartney, a 6-2, 230-pound linebacker at Northeastern State College in Oklahoma. The Patriots' other acquisitions Tuesday were Steve Nelson, a 6-2, 230-pound linebacker from North Dakota State, Andy Johnson, the University of Georgia quarterback they plan to try as a running back, and Charles Battle, a Grambling linebacker. Wide receiver Dick Gordon was also obtained in a trade with Green Bay for tight end John Mosier.

Revived UNH Meets Minutemen At Cage

By STEVE DeCOSTA

It wouldn't be wise to trudge to the Cage tomorrow night in anticipation of a massacre.

In the past a UMass-New Hampshire basketball game has usually resulted in total annihilation of the Wildcats. But it's a different type of UNH team this season, and the Minutemen could well have a battle on their hands.

For one thing, the Wildcats are winning. 8-5 overall, UNH, impressively enough, is currently in second place in the Yankee Conference with a 5-1 mark, including wins over Rhode Island and Connecticut. Ironically, their only conference loss came at the hands of Vermont, but that was early in the season before UNH got untracked.

In another vein, the hoopsters from Durham are no longer wild-eyed midgets who throw up shots from anywhere on the floor. The Wildcats are big up front, 6'7, 6'7, and 6'6, and they work the ball inside with much success, especially to center Rich Gale and forward Lon Cohen.

The UNH quintet is not a high scoring group and they rely on their basic 2-3 zone to hold down the opposition. They will at times switch to a 1-2-1-1 three-quarter court trap, an unusual alighment that could rattle an unwary foe.

Though the Wildcats are not known for scorching the nets, they are a well-balanced scoring team. The scoring averages for the starters range from 8.0 to the team high of 12.5 held by Erie Feragne, a 5'10 guard.

The Minutemen, on the other hand, have been struggling somewhat as of late, but a return to their home court could provide the team with a spark. "Our fans will make sure we're ready to play," reassured coach Jack Leaman. "Those cheers will be like manna from heaven."

UMass will again be led by Al Skinner, John Murphy, and Bill Endicott, all averaging over 16 points per game. Greg Duarte is coming off a successful scoring outing against Northeastern. In nine minutes played, Greg poured in as many points.

Though held on to eight points against Northeastern, Al Skinner passed the 1000 mark for career points and now stands at 1001. He needs only 22 points to pass Tim Edwards' and gain the eighth spot on the UMass all-time scoring list.

Leaman believes his charges still have an outside chance for a berth in the NCAA tournament. "But," he remarked, "I think we have to win them all from now on."

Leaman also said he would be pleased, and not too disappointed if the Minutemen wound up in the NIT again. Said Leaman, "I think people misunderstand the NIT. The tournament is a reward for a successful season. It is a much more competitive tournament with any of the 16 teams having a chance to win it. Any team that comes up with four good nights of basketball, like Virginia Tech last year, can walk off with the tournament."

Carew Signs With Twins

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP)-Infielder Rod Carew has agreed to terms for the 1974 baseball season, receiving what President Calvin Griffith of the American League's Minnesota Twins calls "a substantial raise."

Carew had been the league batting champion three years, including the past two.

Carew is believed to have received $60,000 last year. He asked for $100,000 and reportedly was offered $90,000 by the Twins in early stages of contract talks this year.

Disaster Area

BOSTON (AP)-Massachusetts governor Franklin Sergeant announced today that he was flying immediately to Washington, D.C. in an effort to get federal disaster relief funds for the University of Massachusetts hockey team. The team, known as the Minutemen, lost a game Tuesday night in their own rink by a score of 15-1 to Boston University.

Sergeant said that the little information that has been leaking out of debris-strewn Orr Rink in Amherst indicates that the team may be on the verge of falling apart.

Sergeant cited last night's game, the Minutemen's previous 11-2 loss to Colgate, and a 2-5 record in the team's last seven games as indications of how serious the situation is.

The Governor hasn't yet visited the site of the game, and said it might be days before he'd be able to hack through the disappointment and embarassment and get an eyewitness look at things.

He hinted that if things have cleared up enough he might be able to make it to Amherst in time for the Boston State-UMass game tomorrow.

One observer, still shaken from the carnage he had just seen, talked to the Collegian after stumbling out of the rink near the end of the game.

"It was horrible," he said between sobs, "I've never seen anything like it. There were UMass bodies all over the ice, especially when a BU player would carry the puck from one end to the other. And the poor goal judges. The one at the scoreboard end of the rink collapsed after turning the red light on for the twelfth time. I saw his index finger as they carried him out. It was, oh my God, it was worn down to the knuckle."

The observer, barely able to speak coherently, also mentioned that official scorer Douglas Fidler suffered a broken back when he tried to carry the game scoring summary out of the scorer's bench.

"You would have gotten sick looking at that official scorer," the observer continued. "His right hand was trying to cross the ice at the end of the game, he fell and was buried in the snow shavings in front of the UMass net. He tried getting up but his burden was too heavy. I, I....heard his back snap."

Rocky Fault, a seismologist, said that the sound of Boston University shots hitting the back of the UMass net registered as an 8.6 reading on the Richter Scale. Fault noted that if the game had been played in a large Metropolitan area such as Whately, the death toll could have risen to thousands.

Governor Sergeant, in a letter to UMass Athletic Director Hank Macandernie, said that many of the funds would go to improving the existing UMass practice facilities.

"I am fully aware," "Searge," said in the letter, "that practice makes perfect. And I realize that the UMass facilities on the campus pond are woefully inadequate. Therefore, if the funds are forthcoming, approximately $7.58 will be earmarked for the purchase of new aluminum shovels so the players can clean the pond off more frequently."

The governor didn't indicate what the rest of the money would be used for, but an inside source revealed that it would go into adding space for a third digit in the scoreboard for BU's next appearance in Amherst.

President Ixnay, when asked about chances he'll grant the relief funds, told a reporter, "I hope those students realize it's only a game."

He added this advice, "You can keep the sports parade moving by being a good sport."

New Grid Coach Sells Army

WEST POINT, N.Y. (AP)-Army introduced Homer Smith as its new football coach and changed its recruiting pitch by rephrasing the postgraduate five-year military commitment from a drawback to "a five-year opportunity."

"I hope I'm not naive about it," Smith said, "but I can't wait to try my sales pitch. I really believe in what we're selling.

"We're not here to sell our football program, but to sell the U.S. Military Academy. That primarily is the difference in recruiting here than at other schools. We'll recruit with a positive approach.

"Five-year commitment" is a phrase. Five years is a length of time-a chance not only to serve your country but a chance to get settled, to get a direction you otherwise might not have upon graduation."

Smith, 42, a former army artillery officer, spent the last two seasons as an assistant at UCLA after seven years as head coach-five at Davidson and two at the University of the Pacific. He inherits a program which saw Coach Tom Cahill dropped after Army lost all 10 games last season-its worst record ever-including a 51-0 humiliation at the hands of arch-rival Navy.

The five-year military obligation after graduation has often been cited by the service academies-especially West Point-as the major deterrent to recruiting top-flight athletes, the so-called blue-chippers.

"I realize the service academies have no chance at a player who has his heart set on pro ball," Smith said. "If a boy we're recruiting insists he wants to play pro ball, we'll move on. But the chances of ever making the pros are very slim for most players.

"We may have to pass over a few young men with nothing else on their mind. But there are many good things about getting into the military to serve your country which can help a lot of young men get a good perspective on life.

Truck Strikes Spread In East

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

One driver was killed and scattered violence was reported Thursday as a shutdown by independent truckers spread across Eastern and Appalachian states, and then moved west. Several industries were threatened with layoffs.

In Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania Gov. Milton Shapp emerged from a meeting with truckers' representatives convinced the strike will spread and continue. Lt. Gov. Ernest Kline said Shapp would activate the National Guard Friday morning to keep peace on the state's highways.

A rock slammed through the windshield of a moving tractor-trailer near Allentown Thursday, killing the driver, Ronald Hengst, 33, of Spring Grove, Pa. Pennsylvania State police said they were seeking four men in connection with the death, which they called murder.

"We think the four men are truck drivers," said state police Capt. Michael Kostow.

The independents, who are protesting high fuel prices and low freight rates, "made it clear that they will have their shutdown," Kline said of the meeting which included a group claiming to represent 100,000 independent drivers.

Other truckers' spokesmen also urged a nationwide shutdown of independent drivers, and they said many other drivers were expected to pull their rigs off the roads at midnight Thursday.

Some scattered gatherings of independent drivers were reported in the Southwest, and a large truck terminal in Los Angeles was reported closed Thursday night by protesting drivers.

But the shutdown appeared strongest in Ohio and Pennsylvania, with some activity also reported in West Virginia, Indiana, North Carolina, New Jersey and Connecticut. In several states, patrol cars escorted truckers who wanted to keep their cargoes moving.

Officials in Washington said they were worried that a continued stoppage would have economic impact, and some of that impact appeared about ready to hit.

A dozen major Appalachian mines were said to be on the verge of shutting down because key materials were not being delivered.

In Ohio, Youngstown Sheet & Tube said it will temporarily suspend production of flat rolled steel products on Monday because it could not ship its products. About 1,000 workers could be affected.

A spokesman for Bethlehem Steel Co. said the stoppage had caused a virtual standstill in movement of products from the company's Bethlehem, Pa., plant. He said a meeting would be held Friday to discuss a possible layoff. The plant employs 14,000 people.

It's A Long Walk To The Top

By MICHAEL E. C. GERY

Since Wednesday only two elevators in the University Library have been in working order due to mechanical failures in the other four. Temporary measures were implemented to facilitate normal operations of reshelving, borrowing and providing access to higher levels.

No major disturbance has arisen, but the "fire elevator", one that stops at every floor, is out of commission and poses a safety hazard.

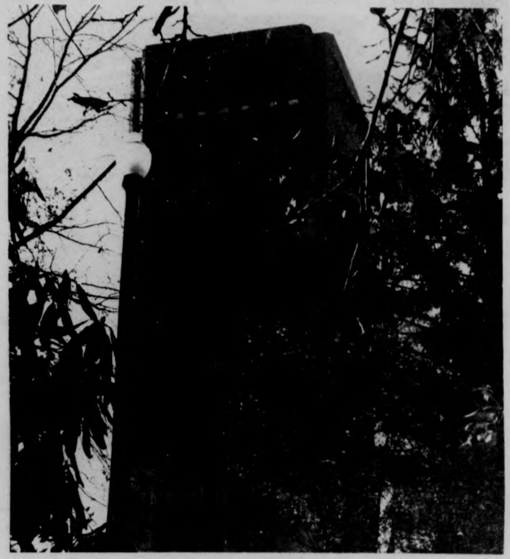
Physical plant mechanics have been examining the problem, and after repairing one elevator on Wednesday, another working car broke down. Mechanics from Consolidated Elevator were on their way from Boston yesterday afternoon with the necessary replacement parts.

The present problem arose during intersession, according to George Wright, director of the Library's Public Services Division.

Until more elevators are in operation, library users with assigned carrels (small study rooms) or urgent business on higher levels will be allowed access to the working cars. Persons intending to borrow books will use either the stairs or the "book-paging" service on the ground floor. "Book-paging" works like a fast-food service: you wait until your books arrive and your name is called.

"Book-paging" is working well. The wait is less than ten minutes. One student who needed several volumes of bound periodicals was overjoyed. "They do all the work," she said. "Too bad the elevators aren't broken down all the time."

The library elevators and their replacement parts are manufactured in Moleen, Illinois, according to Leo Leiberman, a design engineer at the physical plant, and the distance is partly responsible for the delay in repairs.



(Staff Photo/Bob Gamache)

If you have ever heard the wind in the elevator shafts in the library, maybe you'd think it's sinister forces that cause all those mechanical failures in the lifts.

707 Crashes In Samoa 92 Passengers Perish

NEW YORK (AP) - A Pan American World Airways 707 jetliner crashed and Burned on a landing approach at Pago Pago, Samoa, Thursday and 92 of the 101 persons aboard died, the airline said.

Pan American said 10 survivors were pulled from the wreckage. But one of them, Joan Morrill, 52, of Altaloma, Calif., died later in a hospital. her husband, Maury, 54, was among the hospitalized. His condition was not known, a Pan Am spokesman said.

He said the plane went down 1,000 yards short of the runway during heavy rain squalls and burst into flames.

The flight carried 91 passengers, of whom 36 were United States residents, according to a list released by Pan American. Eight of the 10 crew members were Americans.

It appeared that many of the passengers were bound for the United States, the spokesman said.

The pilot was in radio contact with the Pago Pago tower at the time of the crash but it was not known if he gave any distress signals.

The flight originated in Auckland, New Zealand and was to end in Los Angeles after stops at Pago Pago and Honolulu.

The airline said numerous calls were received in its Los Angeles office from relatives and friends of persons believed aboard.

The cockpit complement in the 10-member crew was San Francisco based, the airline said. Service crew members were from Hawaii.

The Pan Am account said the plane crashed 1,000 yards short of the runway and caught fire. The time was eight minutes before midnight in Samoa, Wednesday 6:52 a.m. EDT Thursday.

Most passengers were believed to be from New Zealand and western Samoa.

Pago Pago is on one of the seven islands of American Samoa in the mid-Pacific. It lies a little over a third of the way between New Zealand and the Hawaiian Islands.

Pan American identified the cockpit crew as Capt. Lorey A. Peterson, Salt Lake City; Richard V. Gaines, Half Moon Bay, Calif.; James S. Phillips, Sonoma, Calif., and Gerry W. Green, Seattle, Wash.

The National Transportation Safety Board immediately dispatched a team of seven investigators to Pago Pago to report on the probable cause of the crash.

Bonnie Raitt Headlines Next Weekend's Carni

By SHARON HUGHES

Since its inception in 1936 Winter Carnival Weekend has become something of a tradition at UMass. Of course, the program has changed with the times. Crowd pleasers of the '30 like the Carnival Ball and the crowning of the Snow Queen have given way to rock concerts and gambling nights.

This year, the slate includes a series of films, concerts and games, and competition for the weekend of Feb. 8. A brief description of each is listed below.

SUNDAY FEB. 8

Elma Lewis National Mime Center of Afro-American Artists and the Webster Lewis Gospel and Soul Revue will perform two shows, at 8 and 10 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. The National Mime company is a group of 15 Black pantomime artists, a leading mime group and one of the few Black ones in the world. The styles of such classic mimes as Kenyon Martin and Marcel Marceau will be drawn from, but most exciting is the style of Frederick Johnson (Halim Abdur-Rashid). He uses the art of mime to express the joys and sorrows of Black life. In a style all his own, he "marries the body and the mind, making the man form an extraordinary instrument of expression, of communication.

Grad List OK'd; Recruiting a Topic

By SUSAN R. HUBBARD

On campus recruiting by corporations and business interests and forums for corporate policy discussions were the most debated topics at yesterday's meeting of the Faculty Senate.

In other business, graduation lists for January 1974 and a summer study program in Japan were both approved, while several interdisciplinary undergraduate majors were referred back to committee for more study.

The motivation for the recruitment discussion came from the Committee on Scholarship, Financial Aid and Placement, which suggested that no restrictions be placed on interviewers visiting the UMass campus to recruit for business or other concerns.

Speaker of the Faculty Senate, James H. Matlack, stepped down from the podium in order to speak to the issue, and moved that such recruiters be made to submit to an open forum discussion of their company's policies if requested to do so by 100 or more students and-or faculty.

Fear was expressed by several senators that such restrictions would keep interviewers away from the campus.

Since UMass is only one drawing point of employees for these interests, students here would be handicapped when looking for jobs if perspective employers skirted the campus. Also few interviewers would be knowledgeable enough to defend their company's policies in an open debate with students.

An amendment was added to the Matlack motion raising the number of students and faculty petitioning for a forum to 500.

Finally, the main motion was defeated and recruitment was left unrestricted to all business interests.

A discussion of faculty salary policies followed but due to the late hour the meeting was recessed until next Thursday.

More Courses For Spanish

By LUIS MANUEL MEDINA

Courses for Spanish American students will increase this semester said Ms. Maria Simpson, of CCEBS Hispanic Services. 25 courses will be offered about or for Spanish American students, and American students with knowledge in Spanish have taken courses in the past. Those students, not only improved their Spanish but they also bridged a cultural gap that existed between Spanish and American students, especially Puerto Ricans. The bridge is very beneficial to inter ethic relations in campus.

New courses such as History of Puerto Rico, (Orchard Hill by Edward Sotolongo), and Geology 100 in Spanish have been added. This is an E core requirement, Ms. Simpson said. Openings are still available for students.

The Dept. of Hispanic Langs. and Lits. also have 14 courses dedicated to Spanish American students. However, the more courses in Spanish mean more Puerto Rican professors. Now there are about 13 and 5 of them hold doctorates.

They are Dr. Viera and Dr. Caban, (school of Educ.), Dr. Cabanas, (ESL, Rhetoric Dept.), Dr. Ortiz, (Public Health), and Dr. Milan, (Hispanic Langs. and Lits.). Also a group of Chicanos and Latin Americans are teaching in different departments in campus.

Ms. Simpson said that any student interested in the Spanish courses must contact the: CCEBS HISPANIC SERVICES, NEW AFRICA HOUSE RM. 209, TEL. 545-0031.

Youth Air Fares Out?

By FRITS GEURTSEN

There is currently a bill in Congress which is scheduled to terminate all youth fares by June 1 of this year.

A youth lobby in Washington is fighting to both keep the discount in effect and to increase it from eight to twenty percent.

Steven Lepow, manager of the Campus Travel Center, is one of those who would like to see the student discount maintained. He is a member of the Student Travel Conference, a national group which is active in opposing the anti-discount bill.

"We have several reasons for being against it. First of all there are many students who go to school more than a thousand miles from their homes who would be hit hard were student discounts to cease," said Lepow.

"Also, students travelling abroad account for quite a bit of money to both the airlines and the travel agencies. I think if the discount were discontinued, students would not be able to do as much travelling as they did in the past. It's to everyone's advantage that the bill is defeated.", he continued.

"Canada still has a student discount, but there are strong indications that it too will soon disappear."

"Our primary objective is to defeat the bill. If that succeeds, then we'll try to increase the discount from eight to twenty per cent."

"We can use all the help we can get. Concerned students should write their Congressmen to voice their opinions about the discount," Lepow concluded.

Prof May Sue Over FBI Files

NORTHAMPTON—A Smith College professor has said he may sue the FBI for the release of files on the controversial Rosenberg and Alger Hiss which the FBI has agreed to release.

History Prof. Allen Weinstein, director of the college's American Studies program, says he will "probably" take court action against the FBI if he doesn't receive anything substantive within a few weeks.

He was promised 78,000 pages of censored material on the cases four months ago after seeking unsuccessfully for three years to have the material released, he received 17 pages last Friday. Former Atty. Gen. Ellion Richardson ruled last July that the government had to release files over 15 years old no longer related to pending investigation.

An FBI spokesman said he had "no idea" when the remainder of the files promised to Weinstein would be released. He said the department had encountered legal problems related to the protection of privacy of persons named in the files.

The spokesman, who declined to be indentified, said the legal problems had been explained to Weinstein and that he and the bureau had come to an agreement over the release of the files.

Weinstein plans to write a book on the trials, in which the Rosenbergs were convicted as spies who stole atomic secrets and were executed. Hiss—a former state department official— was found guilty of perjury after denying charges he turned over classified documents to the Soviet Union, and sentenced to prison.

Both cases are still controversial today, with some persons arguing the Rosenbergs were framed by the FBI.

Both Hiss and the Rosenbergs were the subject of intensive FBI investigation during the 1940's and early 1950's.

Weinstein says that if he sues the FBI, he will ask for a specific deadline—"perhaps a few months" for the material to be handed over.

Weinstein says the FBI has told him the material is being screened by five or six offices before being handed over.

"Just when you've passed all the reviews," Weinstein said, "you get another one you've never heard of before."

Weinstein says the Justice Dept. has been "extremely cooperative", and has granted him access to 1,000 pages on the Rosenberg case.

"The real problem is whether they will exercise the power over the FBI which they have," Weinstein said.

"I'm not about to spend the rest of my life growing old waiting for the FBI," he said.

And Now We've Got A Travel Agency

By FRITS GEURTSEN

Got the urge for going? The Campus Travel Center can help you get to wherever you want to go.

According to Steven Lepow, the manager of the agency, the Travel Center can arrange "airline reservations, cruises and tours, hotel reservations, car rentals, student travel, and train trips." There is also a Ticketron outlet at the Center office, which is located on the third floor of the Campus Center.

Lepow went on to say, "The only aspect of travel that we don't deal with is buses, which are handled by Peter Pan here on campus. If there are areas that we don't cover, we can direct people to the right places."

The Center, which is a branch of the Central Travel Bureau of Springfield, has only been in operation for a few weeks.

"Our biggest problem to date is that most people don't know that we are here," said Lepow. "Our business is picking up more and more every day though. Beside individual customers, we are also dealing with several departments on campus. Thus far we have had no response from the administration, who must be using an outside agency for their arrangements."

Travel arrangements on campus were originally handled by students, said Lepow. Last year, however, the Campus Center-Student Union Governing Board decided that an experienced professional travel agency would be more advantageous to all concerned. Travel agencies in the area were invited to make bids and the Central Travel Bureau was chosen.

The Bureau, according to their brochures, is the largest in Western Massachusetts and has been in business for the past 25 years.

The service on campus is intended primarily for students, faculty, and other members of the University community, but is also available to Amherst residents, professionals, business establishments, and area visitors.

The Center is financially self-supporting and is in no way funded by the University. The space that it occupies in the Campus Center is rented.

Each semester three students from that department are given full scholarships to attend the Central Travel School, which is operated by the Bureau in Springfield.

When a mattress caught on fire yesterday in Brett House three fire engines came quickly to the rescue. Some residents say that might be the biggest events to hit Central all semester.

Tax Aides Trained

By BONNIE COHEN

Intensive training is now underway for the 115 UMass students who will serve as volunteer income tax consultants as a part of the Outreach program.

The VITA (Volunteer Income Tax Assistance) program serves the UMass and western Massachusetts communities and focuses its aid on senior citizens, low income families and students.

The training for these volunteers began last October when they enrolled in a seven week course taught by former VITA volunteers. Their training was culminated last week when federal IRS officials and representatives of the Massachusetts Department of Taxation met with the students to complete their training.

Students may take advantages of this services by dropping by the 4th floor of Goodell Library between February 5 and April 16 at 10 a.m. - 8 p.m. to meet with the VITA volunteers. Last year almost 1600 took advantage of this service.

According to Rich Sockol, assistant director of the Outreach program and VITA coordinator, this program has saved members of the UMass community almost $17,000 in tax consultation fees. "It's here, it's free, and its being done by students who don't want to rip people off."

This service does not end at UMass. The program also serves many towns in western Massachusetts. Operating out of community centers, these VITA volunteers assisted about 1200 people with an estimated savings of $13,000 in consultation fees.

Viet Soldiers Allegedly Paid To Terrorize Refugees

By TAD BARTIMUS
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP) — Local authorities and landowners are paying soldiers to terrorize refugees and drive them away from resettlement homesites wanted by land speculators, South Vietnamese officials said Thursday.

The officials' comments, in reply to a reporter's questions, came after a raid on a resettlement area Monday where soldiers killed an old woman and wounded several other refugees.

A Buddhist leader said the refugees told him they were attacked by three unidentified men firing grenade launchers and rifles. Someone returned later and replaced the empty cartridges from the American-made weapons with empty shells from the kind of weapons carried by the Viet Cong.

The Soldiers were on a "land-grabbing raid" and had been paid off on behalf of a wealthy Vietnamese landowner, said the monk, Thich Chau Tean, secretary-general of the Buddhist Committee for National Reconstruction and Social Development.

The Saigon government's minister of social welfare, Phan Quang Dan, ordered an investigation into the attack in Long Khanh Province, about 50 miles northeast of Saigon.

If the attackers were Viet Cong, there wouldn't have been an investigation, one official said.

Dan also demanded that local officials guarantee the safety of the refugees, all resettled from the Province of Quang Tri. He said he was told there had been several other incidents, but that no one had been killed before last Monday.

One government official, who asked not to be identified, said such acts sometimes are "investigated by a corrupt military commander, sometimes by a regional tycoon, sometimes by a Catholic priest who hates Buddhists." Many refugees are Buddhists.

The official said occasionally a landowner will sell land to the government for a resettlement site and then decide he wants it back.

"Sometimes, when the landowner sells it, the land is swamp or jungle and not worth much, so he gets rid of it to the government," the official said. "After the refugees have been there four or five months and have cultivated it and the area has become more secure, the landowner takes a second look at the property and decides he wants it back. So he pays off somebody to terrorize the new settlers."

The official said Monday's incident was the first time the government had heard of guns being used. "Normally the refugees flee with broken arms and club marks," the official said.

Oil Tank Ignited, Hostages Seized By Terrorists

By PETER O'LOUGHLIN
Associated Press Writer

SINGAPORE (AP) — Four men set fire to a Shell oil storage tank here Thursday, then seized five hostages aboard a ferry and threatened to kill themselves and the hostages unless they got safe conduct to an Arab country, officials said.

The Singapore government said it would meet the terrorists' conditions. The four demanded a plane and asked to trade their hostages for the Japanese ambassador and his secretary.

But on Friday morning the 80-foot ferry Laju still sat in Singapore harbor, surrounded by at least 15 police patrol boats and navy gunboats, awaiting arrival of a plane to take the four terrorists to the Middle East.

A Japan Air Lines plane deloyed in Bangkok, Thailand, was thought to be ready to fly to Singapore to pick up the terrorists, but the airline said later that the plane had returned to Tokyo.

The Japanese ambassador, Okichiro Uomoto, who was taking part in the negotiations, described the four terrorists as "polite and well-educated."

In Beirut, Lebanon, the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine claimed responsibility for the attack.

A statement said the operation was staged by Palestinian guerrillas and members of the Japanese Red Army in retaliation for the "aggressive role of oil companies and the government of Singapore against the Arab peoples in general and the Palestinian people in particular."

Officials in Singapore said three Japanese men and one "Arab-looking" man had tried to blow up three tanks at the Shell refinery but only managed to set the one ablaze.

Saigon, China Clash Over Islands

By GEORGE ESPER
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP) — Three South Vietnamese ships with 150 troops steamed Thursday toward the Spratly islands, also claimed by the Chinese.

China recently took another island chain, the Paracels, in a South China Sea naval and ground battle with South Vietnamese forces.

In Cambodia, insurgents fired two rockets at Phnom Penh's suburbs. One of the rockets hit a house, wounding 10 civilians, an Associated Press newsman said.

Military sources in Saigon said the South Vietnamese move toward the Spratlys was a continuing "show of the flag" to back Saigon's claim to the islands. The area may contain oil deposits.

Sources said the 150 troops would replace a unit of similar size on the island of Namyit, the northeasternmost island in the Spratlys, uninhabitated by civilians. South Vietnam has had troops on parts of the island since last August, sources said.

The destroyer, cutter and landing ship were expected to arrive Friday, the sources said.

There was no immediate response from Peking, but Taiwan sources said the South Vietnamese action "is like waving a red flag in front of a bull."

Peking, Taiwan, Saigon and the Phillippines all claim the Spratlys, 270 miles southeast of Vietnam.

There was no indication Peking has any naval forces in the Spratlys. The Chinese seized the Paracel Islands, 540 miles north of the Spratlys, in a battle Jan. 19-20.

Dean Backed; Probe Continues

Gov't: Dean Perjury Uncertain

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — An assistant special Watergate prosecutor said Thursday the government has no evidence to prove that presidential accuser John W. Dean lied under oath.

"Based on the evidence we have accumulated so far we have no reason for believing that Mr. Dean has committed perjury in any proceeding," Richard Davis said in federal court.

It was the first public statement from the office of special prosecutor Leon Jaworski directly contradicting Sen. Hugh Scott, R-Pa., who says the White House has evidence Dean lied.

An aide to Scott said the senator has launched an inquiry into the matter.

"We believe there is a tape Jaworski has not seen," the aide added. He identified it as the recording of a Feb. 28, 1973, conversation between Dean and the President.

Dean told the Senate Watergate committee that at that meeting he informed Nixon that he, Dean, had been involved in possible obstruction of justice in the Watergate cover-up and that Nixon assured him he had no legal problems.

The prosecutor's office has consistently refused to say what tapes — other than those ordered produced by the courts — the White House has turned over.

Scott told newsmen, "I have no comment on anything."

Dean has told the Senate Watergate committee that he left a meeting with President Nixon Sept. 15, 1972, feeling that the President was aware "of what had been going on regarding the success of keeping the White House out of the Watergate scandal."

A tape recording of that meeting is in the hands of the prosecutors and grand jury.

Dean also swore the President said Watergate defendant E. Howard Hunt had been promised executive clemency and that paying hush money was no problem. Nixon denied making the statements.

Meanwhile, the prosecutors who have handled the Watergate cover-up investigation and White House lawyers met Thursday with Chief U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica. The subject discussed at the 45-minute gathering was not disclosed, and the transcript was sealed.

Leaving the courthouse, the President's chief Watergate lawyer — James D. St. Clair — said Nixon "expressed last night in his speech a firm desire to bring investigations to a speedy conclusion so the people involved will be properly dealt with...,"

House Comm. Seeks Broad Powers

By JOHN BECKLER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A House Judiciary Committee voted Thursday to seek broad authority to subpoena White House documents and witnesses for its impeachment inquiry.

By voice vote, the 21 Democrats and 16 Republicans on the committee approved a resolution that would confer on it full authority to conduct the investigation and to get complete access to any information it needs.

Approval by the full House is expected Tuesday, setting the stage for a possible confrontation between the committee and President Nixon.

In his State of the Union address Wednesday Nixon said he would cooperate with the committee "in any way I consider consistent with my responsibilities to the office of the presidency."

But the committee was advised by special counsel John M. Dear that the House had unqualified subpoena powers under the Constitution in impeachment invesitgations. An exhange between Dear and Rep. Jerome R. Waldie, D-Calif., went like this:

Q. Is it true there could be no assertion, as a defense against that power, that it would diminish the powers of the presidency for any future president?

A. It is my view the President would not be able to assert that kind of a defense.

Waldie directed the same question to Albert Jenner, the chief counsel for committee Republicans, who replied, "I concur completely with Mr. Dear."

The senior committee Republican, Rep. Edward Hutchinson, R-Mich., has stated he felt Nixon could not claim executive privilege against a committee subpoena.

Although sure of its power, the committee was less certain what it could do if Nixon resisted a subpoena. It could cite him for contempt, but that would require it to send out the House sergeant-at-arms to arrest him.

The Senate Watergate committee rejected that approach as "unseemly and inappropriate" when Nixon balked at its subpoena for White House material, and had a law passed giving the courts jurisdiction to enforce its subpoenas.

One likely result of presidential resistance to a subpoena would be increasing clamor for his impeachment.

The committee rejected efforts to set an April 30 deadline for the impeachment investigation after Dear and Jenner said it would be impossible to set a date now.

They promised to make a report by March 1 that will outline what remains to be done and how long it is likely to take to do it.

American Freed By China After Island Fighting

CLARK AIR BASE, Philippines (AP) — Gerald E. Kosh, the American caught up in fighting between China and South Vietnam over the tiny Paracel Islands, walked to freedom Thursday after 10 days in Chinese captivity.

He was flown here for a medical checkup. Kosh, 27, was in "good physical condition although he admitted he feels weak and fatigued," said Lt. Cmdr. Milton Baker, who flew with Kosh from Hong Kong.

How long Kosh stays in the hospital at Clark depends on his physical condition, Baker added.

Earlier reports had said Kosh was ill with hepatitis.

Wearing a standard Chinese worker's uniform of dark blue tunic and trousers, Kosh walked 50 yards across the Lo Wu Bridge between China and Hong Kong, followed by five South Vietnamese, also captured in the island fighting.

Kosh is a U. S. Defense Department employe from Lafayette Hill, Pa.

Upon landing, he was whisked immediately to the base hospital.

U.S. officials have said Kosh was assigned to observe South Vietnamese efficiency in using U.S.-supplied equipment and was on a Vietnamese navy ship on routine practice maneuvers when it was ordered to proceed to the Paracels after fighting erupted there.

No other American has been reported involved in the fighting over the islands, 225 miles east of South Vietnam's coast and 165 miles southeast of China's Hainan Island. The islands are prized as a possible jumping off point for off-shore oil exploration, and both China and South Vietnam claim them.

The Chinese announced they captured 48 South Vietnamese troops along with Kosh, and said they would be "repatriated in batches." Kosh's was the first batch.

In Saigon, one of the five Vietnamese released, Pfc. Vo Kien, said he was not mistreated during his captivity.

Another Vietnamese released, sailor Dang Chi, was on crutches. A third man, Pfc. Thi Thom, was seriously wounded and was carried from the plane on a stretcher.

Tricia Defends President

By FRANK CORMIER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon's daughter Tricia said today she has a "sense of outrage" about what she termed unfair attacks on her father.

And her husband Edward Cox described Nixon as victim of "one of the most vicious witch hunts in American history."

The Coxes talked at length with newsmen after crossing Pennsylvania avenue from the White House to participate in a rally by more than 1,000 flagwaving backers of the President in Lafayette Park.

Tricia Cox said her father struck the right note in his State of the Union address to Congress Wednesday night in declaring he plans to serve out his presidential term.

Senate Probes Plumbing on Henry

By LAWRENCE L. KNUTSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Senate Armed Services Committee voted yesterday to investigate alleged high-level military spying on Henry A. Kissinger which was uncovered by the White House plumbers operation during their investigation of news leaks.

Chairman John C. Stennis, D-Miss., said the committee decided at a closed session to ask Kissinger and Adm. Thomas Moorer, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, to testify on the matter next week.

"After they have been heard the committee will decide what further steps to take," Stennis said.

Sennis said he has spent much of his time in recent weeks looking into reports that certain national security documents were transmitted without authority from the National Security Council headed by Kissinger to Moorer's office at the Pentagon.

Stennis said he has discussed the matter informally with Kissinger; Moorer; Defense Secretary James Schiesinger; White House chief of staff Alexander Haig, who formerly was Kissinger's top deputy, and with members of his committee and other members of the Senate.

Poor Richard's

"Papillon" Author Views Own Life

By ED SMITH
Poor Richard's Book Reviewer

When Papillon was published in France four years ago it was immediately a best-seller. French critics hailed Henri Charriere as "a new master." Since then, especially with the release of the movie starring Steve McQueen and Dustin Hoffman, Charriere's ordeal in the French penal colony of French Guiana has become familiar to people throughout the world. What has not become so familiar is the forceful prose and incredible natural talent of Charriere. For a man who had never written before, Papillon is ample proof of Charriere's ability to communicate his deepest feelings, even in translation.

Banco, the sequel to Charriere's autobiography, is the chronicle of his adventures after he escaped from Devil's Island. In it Charriere describes his experiences in Venezuela after he adopted that country as his new homeland. He spent time as a gambler, a chef, an explorer and finally as the owner of several bars in Caracas. Outside of Venezuela, for reasons of loyalty, Charriere attempted two robberies in a vain hope of making his "banco".

The point of his attempt to gather a large amount of money concerned Charriere's obsession with vengeance. Throughout Papillon and Banco the one thing which he says kept driving him to escape from prison was his burning desire to destroy the men who condemned him, at the age of twenty-four, the rot for life in prison. In both books Charriere often describes in detail how he planned to deal with the men who destroyed him. It was, he writes, the one thing which sustained him through fourteen years of prison, including more than three spent in solitary confinement.

Charriere only gave up his quest for revenge to save his relationship with his wife. Even so, when he learned that his father was dead and had died never knowing that his son was a free man, he began plotting his revenge again, stopping only when he realized he would die in the attempt and never see his wife again.

What is most striking about Charriere's descriptions and admissions about himself is that he explains himself as a complex character and realizes that all his actions did not follow a logical cause-effect relationship. It is probably this single aspect of his writing which, despite attempts by the French to discredit him, has convinced so many readers that he could not have been writing about anyone other than himself.

What distinguishes Banco from his first book is the quality of the writing. While Papillon was a well-written book, which the translation makes clear was left in almost the same condition Charriere submitted it in, it has problems, especially in terms of dialogue. The slang of the French underworld is probably difficult to understand even in the original, but in translation it loses its flavor entirely. Somehow in Banco conversation flows much more smoothly, due mainly to a free use of English idiomatic expressions. Though not as full of hair-raising adventures, Banco is as good or better in terms of writing and insight into the author.

Henri Charriere died in July of last year in Madrid. He finally did return to his native France after nearly forty years only to find but a shadow of what he had left. In the end of Banco though, Charriere admits that despite all the horrors he had been through, it was worth the freedom he finally attained. As well, he says, he did achieve a revenge of sorts, because he proved that a man whom the French judicial system cast out of civilized society for life could resurrect himself and live out his days as an honest citizen.

UNPRECEDENTED WORK . . .
UNPARALLELED OPPORTUNITY . . .

CAREERS AT THE NATIONAL SECURITY AGENCY

"The cipher disk, one of the world's oldest cryptographic devices, is a crude forerunner of the sophisticated communications security systems being developed and tested at NSA today."

Because of the nature and scope of the National Security Agency's mission, we can offer job challenge and career opportunities that are impossible to match.

AT NSA, we are responsible for designing and developing secure invulnerable communications and EDP systems to transmit, receive and analyze much of our nation's most vital information. The advancing technologies applied in this work are such that they will frequently take you beyond the known and accepted boundaries of knowledge. Consequently, your imagination and resourcefulness are essential qualifications for success.

The Career Scene at NSA: Engineers will find work which is performed nowhere else . . . devices and systems are constantly being developed which are the most advanced in the Western World. As an Agency engineer, you will carry out research, design, development, testing and evaluation of sophisticated, large-scale cryptocommunication and EDP systems. You may also participate in related studies of electromagnetic propagation, upper atmosphere phenomena, and solid state devices using the latest equipment for advanced research within NSA's fully instrumented laboratories.

Mathematicians define, formulate and solve complex communications-related problems. Statistical mathematics, matrix algebra, and combinatorial analysis are but a few of the tools applied by Agency mathematicians. Opportunities for contributions in computer sciences and theoretical research are also offered.

Computer Scientists participate in systems analysis and systems programming related to advanced scientific and operational applications. Software design and development is included, as well as support in hardware design, development and modification.

Starting salaries are based on education and experience, and increase as you assume additional responsibility. Further, you will enjoy the varied career benefits and other advantages of Federal employment without the necessity of Civil Service certification.

Check with your Placement Office for further information about NSA, or write to: Chief, College Relations Branch, National Security Agency, Ft. George G. Meade, Md. 20755, Attn: M321. An equal opportunity employer, M/F. NATIONAL SECURITY AGENCY

Washington To N. England:

10-Gallon Gas Limit Asked

BOSTON (AP) - The Federal Energy Office asked New England service stations yesterday to limit gasoline sales to 10 gallons but to abandon dollar limits.

And as another means of combatting long lines at gas pumps, the energy office asked that drivers not pull in for gasoline unless they need at least five gallons.

The energy office estimated that New England's gasoline supplies in February will be 20 per cent below last year's level. But a spokesman said he did not know how this compared with the national shortage. Other state and federal officials have said the gasoline crunch is hitting the Northeast harder than the rest of the country.

Lawrence Rogers, regional administrator of the energy office, outlined the selling and buying guidelines in a telegram sent today to the region's major gasoline suppliers.

In the telegram, Rogers said: "We suggest that all gasoline dealers sell 10 gallons of gasoline to any customer who comes to his station. No consumer should go to a gas station unless they need a minimum of five gallons of gas. The use of dollar limitations should be discontinued except to the extent that they are used to approximate the 10 gallon limit."

The energy office asked that local officials take steps to have dealers stagger their hours so that all the stations in an area will not be closed at one time except Sundays.

And it asked that service stations limit their daily sales so that they will not run out of gasoline before the end of the month.

"Our figures for February show that the suppliers will be at approximately an 80 per cent level compared with the same month in 1972," Rogers said.

"While this is not as much gasoline as we would use if everyone continued to drive with no consideration to supply, it assures a supply that I believe we can allocate fairly if the public will avoid overuse.

"We are convinced that the costly practice of topping off gas tanks, that is, making small purchases, is contributing to the long lines and wasteful use of gasoline," he said. Rogers said he would ask the New England governors to support the voluntary program.

"I would ask that the public would be understanding about the plight of the gasoline dealer," Rogers said. "These private businessmen often operate on very narrow financial margins. They make money by pumping gasoline, not by restricting sales, and if they had a choice, they would vastly prefer to dispense gasoline endlessly. But they cannot. So we must be understanding of them."

Goodbye

By STEVE TRIPOLI

Today's Collegian is the final edition of term as Editor-in-Chief. By the time you read this column I will probably be on my way to Washington, D.C., there to work as a student intern in a congressional office. This column is going to be just an easy, impressionistic view of my year as Editor and how I see things at the end of that year.

As for this newspaper and the people who work for it I have nothing but words of praise. True, we're understaffed. True, that problem hinders our efforts to do our job right. But it's also true that the people who work here give more of their time and themselves than almost anyone who isn't connected with the paper can imagine. When I have looked good as Editor of this paper it has been through their efforts. When I have looked bad it has been mostly because of a nagging lack of personnel, and only rarely because of their human errors. I thank them for that.

As for the University, there obviously are problems there, too. There seems to be much trouble in the management of the place, and it costs us and the people who will come after us more than a little money. There are even worse problems involved with getting an education here, and those problems face us all and, regrettably, will probably face those who come after us, too.

UMass can be one hell of an experience, though, if one knows where to find it. I would not have traded places with any student on this campus for the last two and a half years, especially for these last twelve months and the learning experience of running the Collegian. I'm a different person than I was when I entered UMass, and I'm thoroughly enjoying the change. I'm certainly more at peace with myself as a person. Hopefully the experience is not an isolated one.

But my role here is finished, and not a moment too soon. Frankly, I've been running out of gas since before Christmas, and that doesn't aid the accomplishment of anyone's goals for this newspaper or its somewhat undefined mission.

I hope things improve here next semester. I hope the paper and its new editors prosper. I hope the entire campus comes a little closer together and solves a lot more problems. I'll be back next year, maybe as early as the summer, and I hope to find a better place than the one I left.

As for me, it's off to D.C. Maybe I'll be there at the right time and get to see the Impeachment of the President of The United States. That would be nice. If the motivation and the material is there I'll be sending reports back, too, and hopefully give UMass a picture of the happenings of another world. I hope it's a good Spring for everyone. Peace.

..Steve Tripoli is the outgoing Editor-in-Chief of the Collegian.

Ergo, You're Beautiful

"Why thank you. It's been a pleasure doing business.", said the man with the brown trench coat, as he shoved the roll of bills in his pocket and happily proceeded on home. He was one of thousands who had placed their bids through Ergo this week. It seems that people were so taken by this new invention that everybody wanted to try it.

And why not? Ergo as the most advanced computer of its time. It could read, write, and draw for starters, but even more important, it could set the odds, take the bets, and distribute the winnings to any and all gambling events. It simply revolutionized the sport of horse racing. Why, if it had been around earlier, it could have predicted the great successes of Man-O-War, Secretariat, and New Streak long before they were old enough to race. But those horses were all gone now, and the biggest attraction of horse racing these days was Ergo.

Ergo's inventor, Phillip S. Driver, was a now elderly man who had spent his entire life in the computer field, and had dedicated most of that time to Ergo's development. Driver could have released Ergo years earlier, but he first wished to perfect the computer's sight center — "Ergo's eyes", as he called them. Actually, Driver wasn't far off by referring to them as eyes, for what Ergo possessed was a sight center that consisted mainly of a pair of thin shutters that would open when necessary to take pictures or count money. Driver was very proud of this contribution, and his only regret was that he was never able to make Ergo "talk" — that is, carry on a regular conversation or communication of some sort. He always considered this to be a major drawback, but he was getting too old and tired to worry about it now.

Meanwhile, Carl Lapp was left to the job of running Ergo. Lapp, a quiet, handsome man in his forties, had been Driver's assistant for many years. He was considered to be one of the foremost authorities in the world on the subject of computers, and quite rightly so. Had it not been for Lapp's noble assistance, Driver would never have completed the project, and Ergo would be little more than a blueprint.

This night had been exceptionally hard for Carl, as he placed his clipboard on his desk. There had been a number of complaints and one angry man had even tried to attack Ergo, but the computer's self defense mechanism had rendered the man helpless before he had a chance to do anything. It was the first actual test of Ergo's intricate self defense mechanism, which automatically releases knock-out gas at the first sign of danger, and Carl was quite relieved to see that it had worked.

So as he leaned back and put his feet up on the desk, Carl began to think about the great success with which the project had been completed. He had been a young man when he joined the Ergo Project and he had followed its development every long painstaking step of the way. There had been many times, throughout the years, when the entire effort had seemed fruitless, but sheer dedication had driven him onward. Now, Ergo was a success, and so was Carl Lapp.

As his mind drifted slowly into the past, Carl's eyes remained firmly fixed on the massive computer in front of him, which featured a dazzling array of lights and reels that flashed and turned incessantly when the computer was working. It was a fantastic spectacle, and visiting dignitaries from all over the world, as well as tourists, would come here just to look at what many had called "the perfect machine".

Emerging from a haze of memories, Carl focused his eyes on the computer, and with a gratitude that only success can instill, said, "Ergo, you're beautiful." He then leaned forward to make a formal listing of the day's earnings, only to pause upon hearing a familiar sound. He looked up, and there was Ergo — lights flashing, reels turning and shutters clapping. Carl wondered what the problem was, and then he noticed that the computer seemed to be moving closer. He couldn't understand this. Ergo had a mobility device, but that was only supposed to be activated in case of an emergency — a fire or bomb or something. But nonetheless, the computer was moving closer.

Ergo continued to draw closer by the second, as Carl fumbled through the papers and blueprints for a possible solution to this bewildering problem. Ergo, whose central control system was said to be much more complex than a human mind, seemed to be straining and overheating as it inched its way towards Carl. And just as the machine was reaching the front of Carl's desk, it stopped. After pausing in confusion for a moment, Carl walked around the desk to more closely examine the halted computer, only to discover that its entire workings were burnt out and destroyed. As Carl glanced around for a possible clue to Ergo's destruction, he sighted a small piece of computer card, which had fallen just beneath the front of his desk.

He picked up the card and stared at it in amazement. On it was written, in scratchy, barely legible print, the words, "I Love You."

An Overdue Letter Of Thanks

By JAMES PAPPAS

As we enter a new semester we're constantly reminded that spring is almost here. Just as it happens every semester, each week passes more quickly than the previous one. Before we get too far into the semester, some of us have overdue business to attend to, such as incompletes that we swore would be completed by now. This letter is one such overdue task. It is something in the way of a thank you.

Last semester when I began the job of Attorney General, there were no seasoned "veterans" from the previous year to take the jobs of advocates and judges in our student court system. Each person who came into my office asking about the positions open had no real knowledge of what to expect. In the subsequent training meetings and the court sessions, many of the initial group dropped out, finding the job too involved. The others who remained, found the experience worthwhile. These people put more time into working as judges and advocates than any other group before them. They are:

To them I offer my congratulations on a job well done and hopes of their returning this semester to continue. To anyone considering becoming active in this part of student governance there are positions open. All you need do is inquire in room 422C of the Student Union, The Student Attorney General's office.

Stolen: 3500 Beer Cans

By BRIAN KELLY

The third floor residents of James House ask for student aid in reconstructing their 3500 can Schlitz beer wall which mysteriously disappeared during winter break.

This wall is more than simply a hobby or pastime, but represents a constructive project which aided in the development of a cohesive dorm atmosphere. The cans were intended to be recycled and beer can flip tops were being collected to purchase a seeing eye dog for a blind person. Besides being a source of pride and inspiration to the residents, it transformed the drabness of concrete cinder blocks into a unique and highly personalized living area.

The students are frustrated, the janitors are disgusted and the head of residence pleads total ignorance. Structural engineer of the wall, John Cunnif, reasons, "This was not a prank but a devious plot motivated by jealousy or a genuine lack of human values. Nobody just fooling around removes 3500 beer cans and tabs — a truly immense task. I'm bullshit".

The students don't plan to roll over and admit defeat although this is a setback of catastrophic proportions, but ask the student body as a whole to rise up and donate their Schlitz beer cans to what remains of justice and humanity here at the University. Please send those empties to James House third floor and rekindle the spirit we strive to maintain.

Brian Kelly is a resident of the third floor of James House.

Student Sheep

By BOB ROSSMAN

Welcome back, fellow sheep. For the first time I finally submit to the fact that's what we really are here at the big university. Educated sheep. It's not too bad if you have the emotions of a sheep. However, as far as I know (and, granted, that isn't very far) sheep don't feel frustration, the frustration of waiting in an office for a one o'clock appointment from 12:50 until you finally get seen at 3:13. Note how the measurement of the time is more accurate at the end than the beginning. This comes from staring at your watch every thirty seconds for the only form of entertainment that whole miserable time.

Now, sheep aren't that conscious of what is going on around them. If they're held up for some time all they do is walk over to the side of the road and start munchin on some grass. Maybe sheep aren't as dumb as they're given credit for. They have no cares, no worries, and the only time they are ever taken advantage of is when they lose their wool. Actually that ain't so bad when you consider that they probably get sheared only in the summer, and who needs a heavy overcoat in the summer, anyway? But sheep aren't thought of as mindless for no reason at all. They have no individual personality. They're only just part of the flock. When you see sheep in some sort of a pasture and say "look at the sheep," you are inevitably looking at more than one. I mean, how would you like to always be known as one of a group rather than just yourself. Sheep don't even have their own singular noun. Just sheep.

You are obviously now beginning to get the connection. If by some chance you are not, I will offer a hypothetical situation. There is a big university in the land of "M". For short it's just called the University of M, or even shorter, U of M. While we're here, let's take the case of a typical student, Sheila Sheep. Sheila is a fairly intelligent young sheep, but is having a few problems here at the big university. The shepherds seem to be trying their hardest to give her the knowledge she came here to get. Her problems lie instead with the supposed humans who organize the whole shebang. It seems that Sheila cannot get into the flocks that she must get into in order to get through school Her other problem is that she was supposed to have gotten some money, so that she could afford to stay here. The money is there, all right, but somehow it just hasn't gotten to her.

So, the naive but good looking sheep (four of the nicest legs you've ever seen), decided to take her problems to the administrative center of the University known as the Center for Resolving Administrative Problems, which is a lot of...well, you know. There are approximately 25 departments in the center and Sheila had to visit just about all of them at least once, all that besides having to see a few of the main shepherds who headed some of the departments, as well as the shepherds who could (Theoretically) impart to this sheep some of the great knowledge they (also theoretically) possess. Then when she finished with that, she went on to locate the money that she had coming.

Poor Sheila. The vet says that if kept under the sedation he prescribed for her, and she's kept away from people for a couple of years, she may once again be able to think straight. But what about all the non-fictious members of the University of Massachusetts. Is there any help for us? Maybe not. Life is tough here and we all have our problems, but most of us will get through. Just remember what we're all trying to get for four years of work here — a sheepskin. Not baaaaaaaaaad.

Finnish Exchange Student Marvels At UMass

By ROBERTA MARTONE

"The American life style is different from the Finnish in every sense," said Hilkka Lukka, a Finnish exchange student from the University of Helsinki. Ms. Lukka is doing graduate studies in the UMass English department, and will remain in the United States throughout the summer.

In an MDC interview, Ms. Lukka explained the differences of campus life between Finland and the U.S. "The University of Helsinki has more students than UMass., but you would never believe it because it's so spread out," she said.

Ms. Lukka said only about 10 per cent of the students live in dorms, while the majority live "off campus" in large houses.

Ms. Lukka, who lives in Prince House in Southwest, says it is alot noisier than the dorms in Finland. But, she said, people seem more friendly in the United States. "At the University of Helsinki, I would probably know my next-door-neighbor, but never the whole floor!"

The informal atmosphere of the classrooms at UMass was a big surprise to Ms. Lukka. "In Finland, we have mostly large, formal lectures, and we never talk to the teachers," she said.

In the Finnish school system, there is a hierarchy of professors. Ms. Lukka said, at each university there are usually only two teachers with the title of "professor", and two assistant professors. The rest of the teachers are known as "lecturers".

A student at the University of Helsinki must have one major and two minors. "80 to 90 per cent of the students study English as a foreign language," said Ms. Lukka.

The high cost of tuition at UMass was a surprise to Ms. Lukka. In Finland, tuition is approximately $40.00, and room and board is $600.00, for the entire year. "Everyone must be wealthier here because I see so many cars. At home, only one of my friends has a car," said Ms. Lukka.

She added also that the food in America is very expensive. "I live on hamburgers here."

In Finland, the students take care of certain affairs at the university, but the university is run largely by the professors. According to Ms. Lukka, the Student Union is both a local and national organization. Each university has their own Student Union, but the various Student unions of the six universities in Finland form an organization also.

The Student Union is responsible for the construction of dorms, dorm libraries, and a special student travel agency. Funds for the Student Union activities are taken from the regular fees paid by the students, Ms. Lukka explained.

At the University of Finland, students conduct their own houses for entertainment, such as, student theaters, films, or clubs.

"The students at the University of Helsinki are more politically active than here. There is a movement towards socialism, but it changes all the time," Ms. Lukka explained. Ms. Lukka also said she was amazed at how people "feel things here", citing the Middle East crisis as an example.

Boston Files Brief In Detroit Busing Case

BOSTON (AP) — The city of Boston will file a "friend of the court" brief in the Detroit metropolitan busing case before the U.S. Supreme Court.

The constitutional issue in the Detroit case is whether a city can bus school children across city lines to suburban districts. Several suburban areas have filed briefs endorsing the position of suburban Detroit districts that busing across city limits is unconstitutional. But Boston is the first city to take a stand in favor of Detroit, the paper said.

Boston Mayor Kevin H. White, acting on behalf of the city, has hired Leonard Strickman, a law professor at Boston College, to file the brief.

"We want the court to establish the right of individual black students to a seat in a majority white school," said Schwartz. "If the individual and his parents want to excercise that right, the local school board should not stand in the way of that right being fulfilled."

Some Fuel Prices Drop, But Rates Still High

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Many retailers have dropped their home heating oil prices to consumers, a spot check in New England indicates, but the rates are still high compared with last year's prices.

The average price for 100 gallons of home heating oil in Boston dropped to $34.48 by the end of January, 16 cents less than on Jan. 16, according to the Boston Consumers Council. But that figure is 66 per cent higher than one year ago.

The reduction is coming from independent wholesalers, who were granted their share of domestic oil supplies under the mandatory allocation program instituted by the Federal Energy Office Jan. 15.

Major suppliers, such as Exxon and Shell Oil, have raised their prices slightly. The result is a leveling off in the price gap between prices of independent wholesalers and major suppliers. The disparity had been as large as 20 cents a gallon.

Northeast Petroleum Corp., New England's largest independent wholesaler supplying 800 or 900 retail dealers, reduced its price for home heating oil by three cents a gallon Jan. 16.

Sunshine Oil Co. in Bristol, R.I., dropped its price to 32 cents per gallon this month, a reduction of 1½ cents. Sunshine is supplied by Northeast, Shell and Texaco. The East Providence Fuel Oil Co., supplied by Gulf, increased its price a penny to 30.2 cents a gallon.

Caldwell Fuel Co. in Augusta, Maine, dropped its price for No. 2 heating oil to 38 cents, 1.2 cents less than two weeks ago. The F.N. Boston Coal Co. in Gardner, Maine, supplied principally by Northeast plans to drop its 40.8 per gallon price shortly.

"We haven't yet because we still have unrecovered costs in the last month to catch up with," said Robert Fredrickson, an F.N. Boston Coal Co. spokesman.

In Concord, N.H., Aranco Oil Co. officials say they have lost customers because they are forced to charge 43.8 cents per gallon. Gladys Hayes, co-owner, said the firm is supplied by Sprague in Newington, N.H., which deals only in foreign oil.

"It is just iniquitous for a person to be victimized because he's a customer of mine. We've labored all these years to build our company, and now we have to watch it disintegrate before our eyes," she said. But she said she thinks Sprague will be lowering its prices soon.

"Maybe I can survive if that happens."

Amherst Presenting "Look Back In Anger"

"Look Back In Anger," John Osborne's searing dramatic portrait of an angry young man, is being presented by the Amherst College Masquers.

The production will be offered in Amherst College's Kirby Theater at 8 p.m. Friday, Feb. 1 through Sunday, Feb. 3 and Friday, Feb. 8 through Sunday, Feb. 10.

GAF Closing Vt. Mine

LOWELL, Vt. (AP) - The GAF Corp. announced Thursday it would close its asbestos mining operation in Lowell, Vt., because of environmental regulations.

The plant, which is to close by March 15, 1975, employs 176 people in the small Orleans County Community.

Within minutes of the announcement, a resolution had been prepared for instroduction into the Vermont House of Representatives calling for indefinite postponement from the federal Environmental Protection Agency of installation of environmental control devices which would jeopardize the continued operation of the Lowell mine.

GAF Vice President Frank Campagna, in a prepared statement, blamed federal environmental standards for the decision to close down the mining operation. He said environmental control equipment would have cost nearly $1 million.

"The tremendous increase in costs makes further operations unfeasible," said Campagna.

The shutdown of the mine would mean the loss of annual payrolls totalling $1.5 million, according to plant officials. They said state and local governments realized $80,000 in taxes annually, with the plant providing half of the tax revenue of the town of Lowell.

Plant manager Ron White also said the mine shipped about 30,000 tons of freight annually by rail and truck, at cost of about $250,000.

Hassled? Try The Process

The Process Church has its Northeastern Headquarters in Cambridge, Mass., and does work in the Amherst area on a monthly basis. The work involves projects at local institutions; helping, giving, visiting, cheering up, being a friend to someone who needs that contact badly.

If your day becomes frustrated or bogged down with work, just remember that the secret of happiness lies in making others happy. Or perhaps you have a conflict with your roommate. The answer is not to go over onto one side of the conflict--that's negative--but to reconcile the conflict. This can only be done with the positive approach of 'Loving your enemies.'

MED SCHOOL ADMISSION PROBLEMS?

EuroMed may offer RX via overseas training

For the session starting Fall, 1974, Euromed will assist qualified American students in gaining admission to recognized overseas medical schools.

And that's just the beginning.

Since the language barrier constitutes the preponderate difficulty in succeeding at a foreign school, the Euromed program also includes an intensive 12 week medical and conversational language course, mandatory for all students. Five hours daily, 5 days per week (12-16 weeks) the course is given in the country where the student will attend medical school.

In addition, Euromed provides students with a 12 week intensive cultural orientation program, with American students now studying medicine in that particular country serving as counselors.

Senior or graduate students currently enrolled in an American university are eligible to participate in the Euromed program.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

The heart rules, declares Leo. The answers are found in the heart, asserts Aquarius. There is a song in my heart, chirps Gemini. Heart schmart, parrots Taurus — give me the cash and let the credit go. I follow my heart, blinks Pisces. It's all in the heart, pontificates Scorpio. All of the signs, in one way or some way or another, are telling us that it is inside where the answers reside.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Accent journeys, visits, reports. Get information and put it to use. Refuse to be bypassed, deceived, given proverbial sob story. You have right to valid information. Know it and let others know you are aware of it.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Money and collections are featured. Includes ability to collect needed material. Definite financial gain is indicated. Older individual lends benefit of experience. Be receptive. Throw aside false pride.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Assert yourself. Take initiative. Get message to more persons. Distribute, publish and advertise. Aries, Libra persons could be involved. Finish task. Refuse to be painted into emotional corner by selfish individual.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Throw light on areas which were secret, dank, dark, sacrosanct. By facing truth, you feel strong and free. If you withhold, skirt issues, you pay a price which is outlandish. Maintain stance of independence, creativity. Look for and locate the crux of matters.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Friendly contacts result in solution to dilemma. You want what you need — and some who perceive your innate wisdom will provide the means. Know it and be grateful without groveling. Aquarian might be in picture.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Emphasize goals, ambitions, abilities, willingness to work overtime. In personal area, stand tall for principles. Make room at the top. Make necessary changes. Be social but keep your eyes open. A Sagittarian is trying to convey meaningful information.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): What seems far away might be closer than you suspect. You could be engulfed in details. Know it and prepare. Check accounts. Don't delegate duties. Make long-distance call to one who knew answers in past.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Money flow improves. Legal decision is likely to favor you. Know it and prepare and make contacts which help make money work — for you. Gemini, Virgo persons could figure prominently. If analytical, answers become apparent.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Lie low. Wait and observe. Listen to mate, partner. Reserve final judgment. Create a more harmonious atmosphere at home. Diplomacy is your ally. Playing the waiting game is your wise course. Taurus, Libra persons are in picture.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Study Sagittarius message. Fight off tendency to be deceived — by you. Many are frank, direct — but you tend to read hidden meanings into various actions. See through cobweb of wishing and romanticizing.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Create. Heed the sound of your own voice. Give and receive love. Open up — express. What was in doubt will be settled. For a time, you skate on thin ice. However, ultimate result is victory. Know it and deal from position of strength.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): What seems to be turned upside down could soon be rearranged or comprehended. Know it and don't walk away from what could be a profitable situation. Aries, Libra persons might be featured. By ridding yourself of persons, procedures which are wasteful, you set up winning combo.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are independent, creative, somewhat domineering — and romantic. February and November could be your most significant months of 1974. You attract many born under Leo and Aquarius. You may be seriously considering a change of residence this year. Family pressure is probable cause.

Hassled Because You're Gay?

Have you ever been denied a job, an apartment, a mortgage, insurance or medical care because you are gay? If you have had a gay related discrimination or legal problem contact the Cases Task Force. Tell us about it. All information incidentally, will be kept in strict confidence. Call 617-262-1592 or write, 419 Boylston St., Rm. 323, Boston.

The Cases Task Force is a group which is collecting information about cases of discrimination against gay people to prove to the Massachusetts Legislature that indeed gay people are often the victims of outright discrimination in areas ranging from housing and employment to medical care and insurance. Six "gay rights" bills have been filed in the Massachusetts General Court this year. We need your help to show that much discrimination against gays does occur here in Massachusetts. The passage of the six "gay rights" bills is essential to stopping the senseless discriminatory practices against gay people. (One Lynn man was denied a drivers license by the Commonwealth for seven years solely because he is a self-admitted gay!) You can also help by simply sending a postcard or letter to your state senator or state representative urging him to support the "gay rights" bills of 1974.

HOUSE 2524 - Bill to end discrimination because of sexual preference in employment, housing mortgages, insurance applications, credit and the leasing of commercial spaces

HOUSE 2582 - No discrimination in the sales, rates or other conditions of life insurance on the basis of sexual preference

HOUSE 2627 - There shall be no question on a civil service exam or application about the sexual preference of the applicant, and appointment shall not be affected by it.

Lawyer Mum On Whether Nixon Knew About Deed

By MICHAEL PUTZEL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A tax lawyer who admits back-dating a deed to President Nixon's vice presidential papers has refused to say under oath whether he told Nixon about it, California Secretary of State Edmund G. Brown said Thursday.

The lawyer, Frank De Marco Jr., invoked the attorney-client privilege in refusing to discuss that question, Brown said.

Brown, in Washington for a series of meetings, said De Marco's refusal "raises the question of just what was discussed when De Marco talked to the President and whether De Marco talked about the signing of the deed."

He said that the lawyer "has every right-even the duty- to claim the privilege unless the President agrees to waive it."

At the White House, Deputy Press Secretary Gerald L. Warren said that Nixon did not tell De Marco to invoke the attorney-client privilege when questioned about the deed.

Warren said Nixon and De Marco "did not at any time discuss any backdating of the deed nor did the President know anything about it."

According to Warren, De Marco is continuing to handle some of Nixon's legal affairs in California, such as paying bills for the President's San Clemente estate. He said, however, that two of Nixon's lawyer-friends, Kenneth Gommill of Philadelphia and H. Chapman Rose, are now handling Nixon's tax questions.

De Marco was questioned in private deposition proceedings Wednesday in Los Angeles by a lawyer on Brown's staff, which is investigating alleged irregularities in the signing of the deed.

The handling of the papers and the tax deduction Nixon claimed for them also are under investigation by a congressional committee and the Internal Revenue Service.

Nixon gave the papers to the government, valuing them at $576,000 and taking income tax deductions for the gift.

Brown's office said De Marco was questioned under oath after he changed his original story and admitted that copies of the deed were signed a year after they were dated.

That means the signing took place nearly nine months after the July 25, 1969, expiration of a law permitting income tax deductions for contributions of such papers.

When he was first interviewed by officials in the state secretary of state's office several weeks ago, De Marco said the deed dated March 27, 1969, was signed in his presence by Edward L. Morgan Jr., then the deputy White House counsel, Brown said.

That signing supposedly took place at breakfast in the Century Plaza Hotel in Los Angeles on April 21, 1969. De Marco, a licensed notary public in California, notarized the document with the April 21 date.

But investigators later discovered that the typewriter on which the deed was typed wasn't purchased by De Marco's office until the following July.

No Place To Be Somebody

"No place to be Somebody," a Pulitzer Prize winning play by Charles Gordone will be presented at Smith College tonight and Saturday, and February 8 and 9 at 8:00.

A black-white comedy set in a Harlem bar, the plot revolves around Johnny, the bar owner, and his plans to make it big by muscling in on the mafia. The mafia doesn't care for the idea. Johnny's light-skinned alter ego Gabe doesn't care for the idea. And the crusading liberal white girl Johnny has conned cares only for him, even if her father the judge is exposed as being on the take.

Performed at UMass last year by part of the original Broadway cast it features some fine sililoques by Gabe, once played by Ron O'Neal of "Superfly" fame.

This evening's performance is directed by Ms. Emily Hilliard, a senior at Smith and includes a mixed black and white cast of acting talent from the five colleges.

JV's Come Close

By STEVE SARACENO

Less than a minute left. UMass JV's trail 79-78. Glenn Cooper at the line for two shots.

"He'll make 'em," remarks one fan, "That Cooper's smooth."

But he doesn't make them. Both are missed. The proverbial starch went out of the little Minutemen then, and while the rest of the game wasn't exactly "garbage" time, it was at least "leftover" time.

Final score: St. Thomas More 85, UMass 79.

Up until the final four minutes, when UMass surged from behind to get back into the contest, the game was as exciting as defrosting the refrigerator.

St. Thomas More had the lead from the start, and they were content to linger in front by 8 to 10 points, tantalizingly out of reach, throughout the first half and much of the second.

While Bill Eason (22 pts., 13 rebounds) and Gil Saunder (18, 12) were holding UMass at bay during the lackluster prefinal four minutes, and fans were noticing the interesting thing about the game, such as the sound of the scoreboard buzzer (just like a toy tommygun), the new foul indicator, and STM's Muhammed Ali look-alike (Saunders), the Minutemen were readying for the rally from 16 behind.

When the UMass charge finally arrived, it was led by artful Artie Johnson (19 pts., 18 rebs!), the aforementioned Cooper (14 pts.), and Dave Tewhill (13 pts). Billy Around-The-Baseline-Double-Pump-One-Hand-Banker-For-Two Santos, had thirteen points before fouling out with eight minutes left in the game, and he might just have been the straw that broke STM's back if he had been around for the excitement.

Stactistically, UMass lost the game at the foul line as St. Thomas More hit 21 for 32, while the Minutemen hit only 11 out of 26. Mike Smith of STM hit an excellent 10 out of 11 to bolster his team's foul average.

Yet, the UMass sub-varsity had an enormous rebound edge over STM. They outrebounded them 72 to 42!

Alas, one of STM's 42 was Cooper's decisive miss.

Baseball Talks To Begin

NEW YORK (AP) - A new era in baseball contract negotiations begins Friday with the introduction of impartial arbitration to settle salary disputes.

According to terms of the Players Association agreement with the 24 major league clubs, contract impasses may be submitted for arbitration between Feb. 1 and Feb. 11 with hearings held from Feb. 11 through 22.

A panel of 14 professional arbitrators will rule on the disputes. Current plans are for five arbitrators each in New York and Chicago and four in Los Angeles but that may change, depending on case leads.

When a player chooses to go to arbitration, he submits his salary demand and the club submits its offer. Then the arbitrator will choose one of those two figures based on certain other criteria including past performance of the player, recent performance of the club and comparitive baseball salaries.

The arbitrators also will be armed with directions not to consider other factors such as financial position of either player or club, salaries in other occupations or sports, press comments and previous salary figures discussed in the negotiations.

"The arbitration will be final and binding," said Marvin Miller, executive director of the Players Association. "We have no reading on how many cases there will be but we have had hundreds of inquiries about it."

Feb. 1 might seem a little early for salary negotiations to have reached an impasse between player and club but it isn't when you consider that the teams were required to have mailed out contracts by Dec. 20. That gave them six weeks or so of bargaining time. In previous years, contracts did not have to be mailed out until Jan. 15.

Either a player or club may submit a dispute to arbitration but the player may withdraw the case if the club submits it while the club does not retain that option should the player submit the case.

Fooney said the club owners sent a letter to Kroc and Padre owner C. Arnolt Smith confirming their action.

"The National League of Professional Baseball Clubs has today approved Mr. Ray Kroc as a purchaser of the franchise and assets of the San Diego Padres," the letter said.

It continued that the owners have "consented to the proposed transfer of the Padres' membership to Mr. Kroc for a corporation of which he is sole owner."

Fooney declined to confirm the $12 million figure, but Kroc had said earlier that it was "in the ballpark."

Smith agreed last May to sell the Padres for $12 million to Danzansky, but on the condition that the team would move to Washington.

The City of San Diego then went to court, and Danzansky failed to meet a deadline set by the league for assurances of protection from damages.

Fooney thanked Danzansky Thursday for his interest, and said he believes the nation's capital will have a baseball franchise before too long.

San Diego Mayor Pete Wilson said that Kroc had promised, with a handshake, to keep the Padres in San Diego for at least six years. Kroc pledged publicly to pay personally any indeminity if the Padres should move.

"If I'm president of a corporation and sign as president and haven't got the guts to involve my personal wealth. I'm not much of a man." Korc said in San Diego.

Wilson also promised that San Diego would dismiss its $84 million in lawsuits against the National League, Washington, D.C. and Danzansky as soon as the approval was given.

Kroc has said he plans to keep the Padres' name although President E. J. "Buzzie" Bavasi has said he dislikes the minor league holdover from the Pacific Coast League. Kroc has said Bavasi and his son, Peter, general manager, will be retained.

Trackmen Face N.U. Away

By SCOTT HAYES

There are many mismatches in sports, as when the Boston Bruins, the powerhouse team of the NHL face the California Golden Seals, perennial cellar-dwellers of the NHL Western Division. The result is usually a Boston victory by the score of 7-3 or 8-1.

The UMass Track team finds itself in the position of "underdog" for Saturday's meet with a powerful Northeastern team.

Northeastern was described by Assistant Coach Mike Muska as "the best all around team we will face this year." Northeastern is a better team than UConn, but not quite as good as Manhattan, last year's NCAA champions. Both the Huskies and the Jaspers defeated UMass in a tri-meet earlier in the season.

Dev Djerassi leads an awesome group of Northeastern weightmen. Djerassi, was second best in New England last year in the weight throw. Djerassi also won the University Division title in the hammer throw. Bill Johnson and Jim Shindell both have thrown for over 53' in the weight throw while the best toss for UMass this season has been 49'.

Lenny Rao and Bill Hackett pace Northeastern in the shot put. Rao has thrown 55'5" and Hackett 50' so far this season.

In the distance events, Bill Gillin and Randy Thomas will be rested in favor of the upcoming championship meets. The top two New England finishers in the NCAA meet, Ken Flanders and Mike Buckley, lead Northeastern in the distances. Flanders ran an 8:51.6 two-mile while Buckley has been timed in the mile at 4:10.2. UMass plans to counter with Tom Maguire, Phil Broughton and Paul Doiron in the two-mile, while John Maloney, Devin Croft, John McGrail and Tom Wilson will see action in the mile.

Other UMass performers who have been coming on strong in their respective events include Mike Geraghty in the long and triple jumps along with Chris Farmer and Pete Byron in the 1,000-yard run. Barron Littlefield and Steve Crimmin will compete in the 600, and probably will face Ken Graham, a middle distance runner from NU.

Usually, the most exciting race of the meet seems to be the 50-yard high hurdles. Clyde Valentine and Peter Sabia, who finished first and second in the New England high hurdles, will be up against Jim Hennessy and Curt Stegerwald of UMass.

Bob Watson, NU's premier pole vaulter has cleared 14'6" already this season. Dan Grigus, however, has been coming along for UMass. In fact, Grigus, who is close to clearing 13', stands a chance of breaking the school record of 13'6". Last Saturday, Grigus picked up the first points for UMass in the pole vault this season by capturing second place.

Mike Quigley and Jim Brennan pace NU in the high jump. Quigley, the runner-up in last year's high school New England's, has jumped 6'6", while Brennan's best performance has been 6'4".

Muska explained that the meet will provide the tough competition to prepare the squad for the championship meets as well as some valuable experience.

Northeastern is 5-0, having beaten Harvard and St. Johns.

Bruins Douse Flames

BOSTON (AP) - Phil Esposito, the National Hockey League scoring leader, got two goals to push the Bobby Orr--less Boston Bruins to a 4-2 victory over the Atlanta Flames Thursday night.

Esposito's 45th goal of the season in 47 games gave the Bruins, the NHL East Division leaders, an insurance tally late in the final period. The big center was assisted by Don Marcotte and Carol Vadnais on his final goal.

John Bucyk's power play goal broke a 2-2 tie in the third period. Bucyk's score, the Bruins' 45th power play goal of the season, came only after Atlanta's Bobby Leiter had tied the game also on a power play.

Larry Romanchych put the Flames in front 1-0 midway through the first period. flipping in a rebound after Boston goalie Ross Brooks had saved on Eric Vail's breakaway attempt.

The Bruins came right back with Esposito's first goal of the game and 44th of the season and one by Andre Savard 33 seconds later while both teams were shorthanded. Esposito took a feed from Wayne Cashman in front of the net and slid the puck under defenseman Randy Manery and goalie Dan Bouchard.

Savard steered Al Sims' blast from the point with Arnie Brown of the Flames and Greg Sheppard of the Bruins still in the penalty box for high sticking.

The Bruins played without All-Star defenseman Orr, who suffered a bruised left thigh in a game against Philadelphia Sunday.

Pennington, Berra Drafted In AFC

By MIKE BROPHY

For the ballplayers of UMass, it was a long wait on the NFL Players Draft that was conducted on Tuesday and Wednesday. Tim Berra was finally picked up by the Baltimore Colts in the 16th round. Pennington went in the following and final round to the Denver Broncos.

Charlie Johnson was the starting qb for Denver last season. He did his job well but is, as he himself attests, getting old. The Broncos had drafted John Hufnagel of Penn State last year. Also on their list of qb's is Steve Ramsey.

Pennington had been drafted by the Detroit franchise of the fledgling WFL last week in the fifth round. It has also been said that the Montreal Allouettes have shown an interest in the 6'5" Pennington who seems sure of playing somewhere in the future.

"I couldn't have said that earlier this week but now I hold more cards in my hand," Pennington said.

Berra was the second wide receiver picked by the Colts from the town of Amherst as they had previously drafted Freddie Scott of Amherst College who led the Jeffs to a 7-1 season.

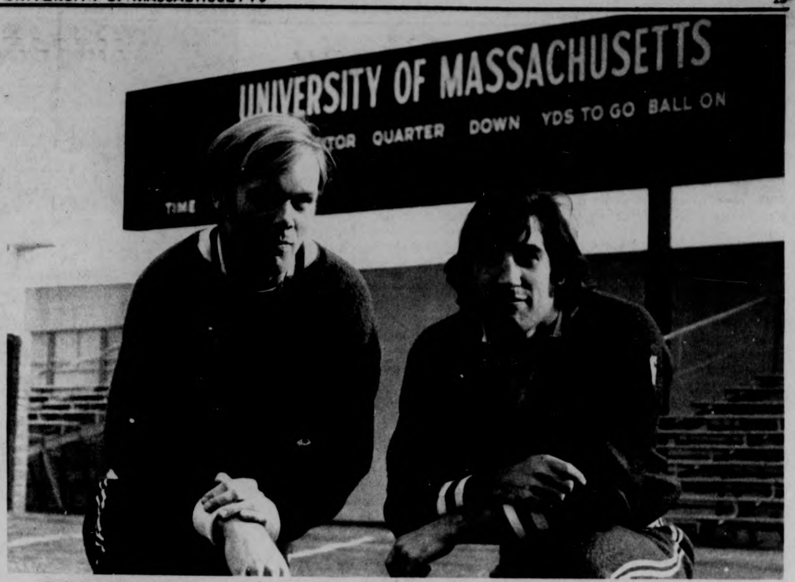
"I can't let that bother me," Berra said, "I'll just have to go out there next summer and show them I can do the job. I know I can." Berra and Scott both have gifted hands and good speed so the Colts will have quite a choice to make come pre-season time. In the past, however, the Colts have had their problems at the wide receiver post and these two new finds are sure to help them out.

Berra led the Minutemen in scoring last fall as he rolled up 82 points on 13 touchdowns and two two-point conversions. Pennington held down the second post with 42 points on seven touchdowns.

Pennington had a 45 per cent completion record as he completed 129 of 290 ariels, 62 of them to Berra.

Berra, in turn, rolled up 922 yards for an average of 14.9 per catch.

Pennington summed up his wait in one simple sentence that describes the whole atmosphere as well, "I wanted the phone to ring at about 10:15, but twelve hours later is better than not at all."



Peil Pennington and Tim Berra are shown as they posed before making their final appearance at Alumni Stadium last fall. They have been selected by the Broncos and Colts to try to follow in the footsteps of Greg Landry and Milt Morin, two former UMass football players now in the NFL.

The Lions Are Coming

By JOHN BOCK

The Lions are coming, the Lions are coming! The Lions that I speak of don't belong to any circus but come March they may prove to be the enter attraction at The 32nd NCAA Gymnastics Championships which they will host. They are the Pennsylvania State University Nittany Lions who are currently the number one ranked team in the nation and last year's NCAA runners-up.

What can one say about a team whose coach has become known as "Mr. Gymnastics". Gene Wettstone, in 36 years of coaching at PSU has coached 24 NCAA Champs, 103 EIGL titlists, 9 Olympians, and two Nissen Award winners. The Nittany Lions have won 183 dual meets against 37 losses. Needless to say he has coached both World Games and Olympic teams for the United States.

One of Wettstone's NCAA Champs is UMass Coach Tom Dunn who plays host to his former mentor for the first time since he has become head coach of the Minutemen.

"I really want to look good. I hope that the routines the boys throw are clean and sharp." said Dunn when asked how he felt about hosting his college coach. "They are a class team and any time a team can break 160 then they are really good."

The Lions broke that 160 mark with a 164 to 157 win over Navy last week. Penn State might throw some new routines but if they have a tight meet on their hands then they should be conservative. In ten years of competition with UMass the Lions have never lost, while in that same time UMass has beaten every other major gymnastics team in the East.

Every UMie is justly proud of the reputation that the Cage has for being a hard place to leave with a victory. Will the full house that is expected Saturday really make a difference with Penn State?

"I don't think that it will affect their performance too much but I do think that there won't be the high scores that they have been throwing down at Rec Hall." said Coach Dunn.

The Eastern Intercollegiate Wrestling Association recently concluded its poll for the first half of the 1973-74 wrestling season and for the first time in almost five years Penn State University was not the East's number one team. Little Clarion State College usurped the premier position by virtue of placing ahead of PSU in the Lion Invitational and completing a Western Road trip with their only loss coming at the hands of Dan Gable's powerful Iowa Hawkeyes.

The Golden Eagles have three defending NCAA Champs in 142 pounder Don Rohn, 167 pounder Wade Schalles, and 177 pounder Bill Simpson. Rohn and Schalles are undefeated on the season but Schalles is not eligible for any post season tournaments.

Other teams receiving votes were Pitt, West Chester, Rhode Island, Syracuse, Cornell, and Lock Haven. The Minutemen have wrestled three of the Top Ten this season and will face Wilkes College at home on February 16.

Home Court Brings UMass To Life

By STEVE DeCOSTA

There's no place like home. Especially if home is Curry Hicks Cage.

The Minutemen looked like a team rejuvinated as they crushed a strong quintet from New Hampshire by a convincing margin of 19, 72-53.

Peter Trow led the Minutemen surge with 18 points, 14 of which came in the first half as UMass ran up a 40-21 lead.

Al Skinner and Rick Pitino also broke into double figures as Skinner hit for 15 and Pitino made good on five of seven shots from the field for his ten points.

The leading scorer for the Wildcats was Eric Feragne with 13 while Rich Gale added 12.

The game was never really a contest as UMass ran off ten of the first 12 points. UNH tallied two quick hoops to make it 10-6 but the Minutemen rallied to go up 14-6 at one point and finally 19-8 midway through the half. The Wildcats could manage to pull no closer than twelve from then on.

The Minutemen did hit one bad streak. It came at the start of the second half as they were unable to score for four straight minutes while the Wildcats ripped off four hoops in a row. At that point, UMass coach Jack Leaman inserted Jim Burke and Greg Duarte into the line-up and their entry signaled a streak that lasted for six minutes in which the Minutemen blanked UNH while netting ten consecutive markers on their own.

The Minutemen completely dominated the final statistics. UMass shot 50.8 per cent from the floor compared to 46.0 for the Wildcats and turned the ball over on eight occasions while UNH gave it up 15 times.

UMass also dominated the rebound action, snaring 42 caroms to a mere 28 for the visitors. Time and time again there were only white shirts under the boards and UNH was held to only one shot for most of the night.

Near perfection on several fast breaks also sided the Minutemen cause. It was a coach's dream, just like they're diagrammed on the blackboard with the outlet pass, filling of lanes, and easy lay-up at the end.

The next foe for the Minutemen will be Niagara tomorrow night at the Cage. The Purple Eagles are in the middle of a so-so campaign, but their schedule has included some of the top teams in the East including South Carolina, which bested Niagara by 25 in their most recent outing.

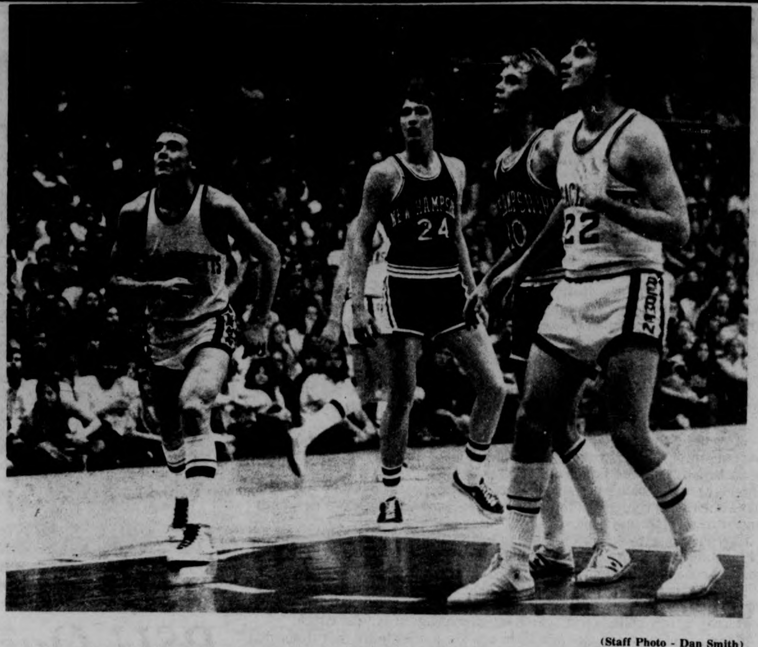
Daily Collegian
SPORTS



(Staff Photo - Dan Smith)

Peter Trow (left) and Rick Pitino were the sparks in last night's victory over UNH. Trow led all scorers with 18 points while Pitino hit on 5 of 7 shots from the field en route to his ten markers.

Skaters Chase BSC

Strange as it seems the UMass hockey team may not make the Division II playoffs this season. A combination of an exceptionally well-balanced Division and an unusual off-year for the Minutemen puts the playoff picture in doubt.

That picture could be considerably brighter tonight about 10 p.m. if the Minutemen can beat long-time rival Boston State at Orr Rink.

Game time has been moved up to 7 p.m. for what stands as UMass' most important contest of the season.

State is one of the top teams in the division, and they've already beaten UMass once this year, 5-3 in Boston. But they, like most Division II teams, have been inconsistent, and only last weekend lost to a weak Colby team in Boston.

BS has one of the best goalies in the Division in Doug Brooks, and he was instrumental in the State win over UMass. The Minutemen outplayed them over the last 50 minutes of hockey and only Brooks' goaltending kept them from winning.

Up front Paul Fisher and John Caccamo are talented goal-scorers and should provide some fireworks for UMass goalie Chick Rheault.

Rheault will start, with Jeff McReynolds most likely as back-up. For most of the season Rheault has been the top man in the Division, so a repeat of Tuesday's performance is unlikely.

A few Minutemen are bumped and bruised, but the only skater expected to miss the Boston State game is right wing Steve Nims, whose knee is still sore from a fall he took in the BU game.

Speaking of which, shots on goal statistics from that game indicate the slaughter wasn't as bad as the score says (even though games aren't decided by shots on goal.)

The Minutemen put three times as many shots on goal this year as they did last, when they lost in Boston 7-2. And the Terriers, who had 71 shots last year, only put 50 on goal this time.

That's little solace.

Anyway, it didn't count in standings. But a loss, be it 2-1 or 22-1, to Boston State counts, and if that's the story, then you can just about count UMass playoff hopes out.

Women Netters Take Two

By LINDA MACKLER

Two resounding victories opened the UMass women's basketball season last night. Both the junior varsity and varsity teams solidly defeated the University of Connecticut in the Northeast Physical Education gym with scores of 66-17 and 68-27 respectively.

Coach Jane Farr commented, "I think we played very well. What else can you say when you beat a team by forty points?" The score does seem to speak for itself. UConn's baskets were short and off the mark.

UMass was aggressive and well organized. Their shots were well-placed. There were a few game mistakes. In the first quarter, UMass threw the ball away consistently. But they settled down to play excellent offense and defense. The high scorers were Pat Glispin with ten points and Jenny Edminster with nine. Karen Fruzzetti, Marilyn Ritz, and Chris Molonea each scored seven points. the defense was effective and adaptable. They succeeded with a press, man-to-man, two-one-two zone, and one-three-one zone. Chris Molonea and Pat Glispin were high rebounders UMass had only 15 turnovers to UConn's twenty-five.

Coach Ellen Greaves of the junior varsity team was quite obviously pleased with last night's performance. Despite a slightly sloppy offense, the scoring was fairly equally balanced. Coach Greaves stated, "They were not afraid to throw the ball, which makes me happy because there are a lot of first year players." Nancy O'Neil was high scorer with 15 points and Terry Pudlo followed with 14. The team missed only three free throws. The defense was very strong. They held UConn scoreless the whole second quarter. Debbie Stoll was the leading rebounder with seven. Here too, UMass led in turnovers. They had twelve compared to UConn's thirty-one.

This Saturday UMass will play Northeastern at home at 2:15 p.m. Northeastern is a strong team with a height advantage over UMass. The game should be much more evenly matched and much more interesting.

Gymnasts Ready For PSU

By WALT POWERS

Imagine the UMass football team playing Alabama at Alumni Stadium. Imagine Notre Dame at home. Imagine, if you can, a team ranked second in the NCA competing against the Minutemen in the confines of Curry Hicks Cage. An escapist fantasy? A sick joke? Wrong! The fact is that the UMass gymnastics team will play host to last year's NCAA runnerup Penn State tomorrow at 2 p.m. The competition between the once-beaten Minutemen and the undefeated Nitanny Lions could easily produce the most spectacular gymnastics exposition of the year.

Ostensibly a routine regular season match, the meet billows with significance. A comparison between the histories of the two teams is a study of opposites. Since 1938, Penn State has won eight NCAA titles, but UMass has never qualified for the championships. Under the direction of Gene Wetstone, Penn State has won 17 Eastern League titles and sent eight gymnasts to the Olympics; UMass remains shutout in both categories.

Unless UMass comes up with a super effort, or Penn State starts listening to the crowd, Penn State's winning streak is destined to remain alive. State has lost Olympian Marshall Avener to graduation, but his replacement, Jim Kreuast, has proven just as capable. Despite a general lack of experience Penn State has run up phenomenal point totals en route to a 5-0 record.

UMass, on the other hand, has earned a 4-1 record at the expense of second rate teams. Their performances have been inconsistent so far, more a reflection of their opposition than their actual ability. Because of injuries, the team has never operated at full strength.

In the end, talk about strengths and weaknesses may be meaningless. The meet will be held in a four letter obscenity spelled Cage, and the judging is always biased toward the home team. The Cage is a lions den. "It's hard to describe the feeling I get with crowd behind me", said Co-Captain Rich Seikunas, "Its one of the greatest in the world."

Matmen Face Coast Guard

By JOHN BOCK

The UMass Minutemen wrestlers will be back on their home mats tomorrow night, trying to get back in the win column, as they host the Bears of the United States Coast Guard Academy.

Coast Guard is currently ranked ahead of UMass in the New England rankings by virtue of a victory over MIT. "However I think that we are definitely number three in New England after our match with Springfield, said Coach Barr.

The Minutemen intend to prove that by staying pretty much at the weight class they were at against SC. Peter Sachon will handle the duties at 118 and he will probably face Coast Guard's Paul Fallis. Larry Reynolds will be the Minuteman 126 pounder and see George Long from CG.

Dick Muri will be at 134 pounds with Doug LeMire coming in at 142 for UMass. Coast Guard has not been particularly strong at either weight class this season. When one gets to the middle weights, however, it is the meat of the Bears lineup. Bill Parker at 150 and Dave Wygant at 158 could give Minutemen Steve Jabaut and Cliff Blom some trouble. Wygant was NEIWA runner-up at 150 last year.

Steve Benson shouldn't have any problems with Stan Zdun at 167 but Bob Spaulding may be tested against Bob Connell at 177. The 190 pound bout will see a very talented junior, NEIWA Runner-up George Cappaci wrestling frosh Minuteman Robin Osborne. The heavyweight bout features another NEIWA runner-up Jim Murray against UMass' Dennis Fenton.

The Bears have been a traditionally well conditioned team in tune with Coast Guard's "Semper Paratus" motto. Last year they out scored the Minutemen on the mat by virtue of several reversals. They proved to be less than effective on their feet, however, and that was UMass' big point.

Regardless of titles and rankings it proves to be a good match. JV matches preceed the varsity at 6 with the main match to follow at 7:30 in Boyden Auxiliary Gym.

Snowflake power - dig it!

By MDC STAFF

UMass faces the prospect of more light snow today after a weekend in which heavy snow forced physical plant crews to work throughout the night Saturday to clear campus roads and parking lots.

A Physical Plant spokesman said last night all roads and parking lots had been cleared, and that the crews were taking a break after the storm.

Today's forecast calls for occasional snow and variable cloudiness. Highs today and tomorrow are forecast from the teens to low 20s, with lows tonight zero to ten above.

Police reported light traffic in Amherst and Northampton Saturday, with several minor accidents reported.

The storm which belted Boston and nearby communities with up to 13 inches of snow Saturday, the largest accumulation in the area since February 1969.

Several inches fell in parts of Connecticut and Rhode Island, but the snow-hungry ski regions of northern New England escaped the storm.

Saturday's storm was the most snow in the Boston area since Feb. 24, 1969, when 13.7 inches fell, the National Weather Service said. The 1969 storm lasted four days, dumping 26 inches in the period.

Truckers' strike continues

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The independent truckers' strike brought new reports of layoffs Sunday, and its continued incidents of violence caused two states to call up 3,400 National Guardsmen. Warnings of possible food shortages by early this week were issued. Pennsylvania Gov. Milton Shapp urged a 45-day moratorium on the protests which have spread across more than 25 states, to avert what he called a "national economic calamity."

But spokesmen for the striking truckers, and drivers interviewed Sunday in four states, said they would not put their rigs back on the road until they get assurances of lower prices for diesel fuel and a guarantee that higher fuel costs can be passed along to trucking companies on a dollar-for-dollar basis.

More layoffs were reported Sunday in Ohio, Pennsylvania and Iowa. In all, nearly 20,000 workers would be temporarily out of work by Monday, and thousands more were in danger if the shutdown continues much longer.

In Iowa, Dubuque Packing Co. said it was laying off 2,800 workers Monday, and at least 1,700 other meat packing workers in the state were not going to their jobs. The continued layoffs in meat packing plants in several states increased concern that meat shortages would be felt in a matter of days, and similar concern was voiced about citrus and produce.

Pennsylvania called up 2,500 National Guardsmen to relieve 1,400 others who have been on duty since Friday, to stand watch on state highways.

"The actions of a few lawbreakers have created an atmosphere of fear among truckers who want to drive their rigs in Ohio," said Gov. John J. Gilligan as he called up 90 Guardsmen. In Nebraska, Gov. James Exon directed state troopers to keep him apprised of problems.

Violence continued. Tires were slashed and hoses cut at several truck stops. Nails littered some highways. Truckers in Ohio, South Carolina, Indiana, Illinois, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Tennessee, Mississippi, Oklahoma and Nebraska reported being shot at during the night Saturday and on Sunday.

In Washington, Shapp issued the call for the moratorium at a meeting with government officials and independent ruckers. Shapp said he was "cautiously optimistic" that the truckers' demands for lower fuel prices and higher freight rates could be resolved, but truckers said it wouldn't be without concrete action.

J. Leonard Fleet, attorney for the Council of Independent Truckers, representing about 20,000 Midwest drivers, said at the Washington meeting that he, too, was hopeful, but he said the truckers were prepared to shut down indefinitely.

Solar energy study gets warmed up

By SUE ADLEY
MDC Staff

Thirteen UMass professors in the Civil and Mechanical Engineering departments and the General Business and Finance department have been given a $170,000 grant by the National Science Foundation to do research in the field of solar energy.

Dr. William Heronemus of the Civil Engineering department is one of the professors. "Our work is to study the verification of the economic and technical feasibility of the ocean thermal differences process. This is a solar energy-driven process, related to the generation of electricity or hydrogen as a renewable fuel. Of all the geo-physical energy processes, solar energy is the most important."

"The grant," said Dr. Heronemus, "will run for 12 months. The work is broken down into 12 tasks, and they all fit together, making one common project. The individual pieces are done by the individual investigators. This will be part of the University's work in the field of pollution-free energy that has been talked about for almost four years." The grant is the second funded research grant of its kind.

Dr. G. Marc Choate of the General Business and Finance department is also a part of the research team. "Our part in the project," he said, "is to determine its economic feasibility, its cost, and the possible uncertainty of the cost. Also, we'll study the installation of the generation of energy in respect to comparing its cost with the conventional means of generating energy."

The 11 other professors involved are: Drs. McGowan, Ambs, Kirchoff, and Goss of the Mechanical Engineering department, Drs. Adams, Chajes, Dzialo, and Mangarella of the Civil Engineering department, and Drs. Belovicz, McKibbin, and Zoltners of the General Business and Finance department.

These men will be aided in their work by 15 graduate resident assistants, and four undergraduate students from the three departments. "The graduate students," said Dr. Heronemus, "were chosen by their professors on the basis of their interest in portions of the graduate research work. The undergraduates were picked on the basis of interest also. All are some of the best students in their respective departments."

Grad center all wet

By MARK CITRON

Vandalism in the Graduate Research Center early yesterday morning left two inches of water in the basement and caused an undetermined amount of damage.

A UMass physical plant spokesman said a basement fire hose was pulled from a wall outlet, automatically triggering an alarm at 1:34 a.m. at the hose was turned on.

Physical plant personnel called the event "minor" and that "it happens at least once a weekend somewhere on campus".

UMass wants $100,000 in auto fines

By MIKE KNEELAND

Some 16,400 parking violations totalint nearly $100,000 were issued on campus between Oct. 1 and Jan. 21, and the University plans to collect every penny of it.

Alan Lawson, Assistant Director of Administration Services for the UMass Dept. of Public Safety, said that summons have been issued to drivers for non-paid violations.

"Violators will no longer be able to scoff at parking tickets," Lawson said. "Those who don't respond to the court summons may be found in contempt of court and their driving priviledges suspended."

He said about 500 summons have been issued so far. The worst violators were sent the first group of summons.

About $15,000 has been collected to date, but Lawson expects the figure will rise quickly. "There's been a tremendous response to the summons we sent out. The summons procedure is working."

The money collected from parking violators is put into a UMass scholarship fund.

UMies draw blood

By D. R. CULA

Any vampire worth a grain of salt will tell you there's a definite art to drawing blood. You could also ask UMass sophomore Medical Technology majors John Wojcik and Kevin Paige.

The men, along with students from Anna Maria College, spent two weeks of inter-session at Springfield's Mercy Hospital getting a first-hand introduction to the world of medical technology.

Under the watchful eyes of the registered medical technologists, the students worked in such laboratory departments as hematology, pathology, serology, urinalysis, and bacteriology.

Part of their time was also spent learning the art of phlebotomy: drawing blood. The students practiced first on a dummy arm then on each other and any willing hospital employee who strayed into the classroom.

Wojcik's first patient was MDC News Editor Mike Kneeland, who convincingly said he was less nervous than Wojcik himself.

Happiness is no hematoma (blood swell), which calls for celebration. With needle in hand, Wojcik receives congratulations from Paula Miller, Director of Mercy Hospital's School of Medical Technology, and Kevin Paige.

Doctors say 4-day week is working

The four day work week has been intriguing employers for years but few have adopted the system. Now, however, with the threatened energy crisis it is being suggested by many as a means for saving precious heating oil and electricity.

Few studies on how the employee reacts to the four day work week exist but two researchers studying a St. Louis company that has been using the system for more than a year have made some interesting discoveries.

Dr. Walter Nord and Robert Costigan report that one year employees "had consistently positive attitudes toward the four day work week" and that absenteeism, which supporters claim to be one of the major benefits, decreased by 10 per cent.

Nord and Costigan caution that their sample is a small one (100 employees) and call for more research on each finding but did list what they felt were several possible significant patterns which emerged:

After a year workers with low-paced jobs (janitors, maintenance personnel) tended to be somewhat less favorable than workers with high-paced jobs (assembly line); however, a majority of both groups favored the plan;

Workers who planned what they would do with their extra weekend time were somewhat more favorable towards the four day work week than those who made no plans. In addition, those who made task oriented plans tended to be more favorable than those who made recreationally oriented plans.

Females were generally more receptive to the four day seeing it as having favorable effects on both their job and their home life. In addition, females consistently made more task oriented plans for weekends, while males made more recreationally oriented plans.

Bob has a problem: a burned apartment

By JUDY BOUCHER

When Robert Allison, a 21-year old accounting major from Holden returned to UMass this semester, he met with an unexpected mishap. He was driven by a fire Tuesday night from his newly rented apartment at 64 Elm St. in South Deerfield and he has no place to live.

The fire originated in the first floor, being used for storage by the landlady, and then spread to the second floor of the building. The cause of the fire was later attributed to boxes and wooden crates that were touching an electrical wire.

Sitting in the living room watching TV with his girl friend and dog Nicholus, a white Siberian husky, alerted them of the fire. Investigating what his dog was barking at in the kitchen, he found the room engulfed with hot, black smoke.

Allison stated that the fire department came promptly after being called and by doing so probably prevented total destruction of the building. The bathroom was severely damaged while Allison personally lost linens, cosmetics, plants, newly bought groceries while his clothes were smoke damaged. Damages were estimated at $175; he had no fire insurance.

As Allison gets over the initial shock of the fire, his most pressing problem is to find a new place to live. He has been apartment hunting with no luck and presently is "living day to day". He had placed an ad on WMUA explaining his plight but has received no offer from the UMass community to help or assist him in finding a new place to live.

Allison feels that his experience is an example of what the real world" is like. The UMass community is totally apathetic and UMass people are only into the Bluewall scene and don't care," he said.

He may be contacted at 546-5252.

Tomorrow they'll be back at Louis' market, but Friday, infirmary personnel used the shopping carts to move medical records into the automated files of the new health services building.

New infirmary —so far no "bugs"

By MARK CITRON

The first phase of the new $1.2 million university infirmary addition opened last Friday with what an infirmary spokesman called "perfection, not a hitch."

Opening the first new section of the entrance and medical records area, infirmary personnel used shopping carts and grocery baskets borrowed from an Amherst market to succeed in meeting the 12 noon target time for the move.

Pernell Parker, staff associate at Health Services, said "We planned to begin at 8 and finish by 12 and everything clicked off on time. There was the chance of mechanical problems when we switched on our new power files, but everything worked on time."

Leo Hall, staff associate at the infirmary and the chief architect for the expansion into the new building over its seven years of planning and building said, "opening a building like this has a domino effect. Before one section can be open another has to be already set up."

Hall said plans are underway to convert the old records section into clinical areas and now the infirmary can concentrate on opening of the new out-patient clinics, "hopefully within the next few weeks."

The domino effect also proved a liability to infirmary administration as a seven week strike by pipe coverers and the bankruptcy of a plumbing sub-contractor threatened to throw all time schedules off. Hall said sub-contractor and equipment delivery dates are set and the infirmary must co-ordinate and adjust for all time changes.

Parker, said "We have target dates to minimize student inconvenience and when tradesmen walk off the job, the timetable is off."

The seven year history of the new three story addition includes:

--co-ordination of infirmary staff with university planners and changes as UMass planners revamped the university in the 60s from a 50,000 student population to the present 22,000

--designing a building for a new conceptual system that "gets people into the system and use the least amount of time."

--planning changes in the building as services, such as dental and eye care, are included in the student health package

--obtaining Mass. legislative approval for the project.

Major new mechanical innovations at the infirmary are a new telephone system, power files in the record section, a conveyor system to carry medical records and a computerized appointment system. Other changes are elevators in Braille, toilets designed for the handicapped and an entrance ramp at a special grade for the handicapped.

Parker said the new systems will mean increased services with a minimum of new personnel. He went on "by clearly defining what we had before and redesigning personnel positions we already had, we are able to save a good deal of expenses and get increased services...we have our cake and get to eat it, too."

Hall feels it will be a year before all the systems in the new building will be tested and functional. He said, "It's overly optimistic to assume everything to work perfectly the first day because of the number of systems involved. We've built in mechanisms to adjust and compensate for any failures, but it will be a year before everything is shaken down.

But fire drills are good for you

By JUDY FRIEDLAND
MDC Staff

People running around in a daze, cursing the person who interrupted their showering, studying, sleeping, love-making and smoking..chaos - a fire drill at UMass.

The University Fire Department, a group of approximately twelve UMass students run the drill, as well as carry out other fire prevention duties. They service extinguishers, check the dorms during intersession and run a "horizontal taxi" during football games. The taxi, according to Wendell Berry, a member of the force, is a stretcher driven around in a truck, although technically it is not an ambulance.

All fire fighting is done by the town fire department; however, as Fire Prevention Officers, they are present at concerts, games, plays, etc. to insure safety.

"If we find a violation," explained Bruce Whitmore, a junior, who is Detail Officer, "we notify Ed Goetzl, the Fire Marshall, who sends someone from the Physical Plant over to fix it.

The members don't wear red hats, and they don't slide down poles; in fact, they don't even have an office. We've been bounced around from dorm to dorm during the past two years," said Whitmor "We've gone before the Student Union Planning Board to ask for an office - right now the only space we have is a little corner between Brooks House and Fisher Lab, where we store our equipment."

The group has lost a lot of equipment, much of it being stolen last summer when they were housed in Hills House North. Entirely volunteer, the men only get paid a minimal hourly wage for the functions they attend as Fire Prevention Officer. They were funded by RSO, but their money was cut off three years ago.

"We're not even able to make up for what's been stolen," said Whitmore.

Whitmore, whose job it is to assign the men to functions, said that the group reorganized after "falling apart for a year."

"We want to create more interest in the force and get more members, so that we can have more pull on campus," said Whitmore.

There are no requirements for membership. According to Whitmore, 90 percent of the group had had no real contact with fire fighting before joining.

"They're a group of fellows interested in the Fire Department who banded together to form a volunteer fire group," said Bob Gleason, Director of Environmental Safety at UMass.

The UMass Fire Department should not be confused with the Auxiliary Force of the Amherst Fire Department, a group of student volunteers whose only connection with UMass "is that its members are students there", according to Berry, its Deputy Chief. He belongs to both groups, as does Whitmore and the other members of the UMass department.

The forty members of the Auxiliary Force are "integral to the department" according to fire chief John Dohorty. They receive training in basic fire fighting by the department, and respond to calls, assisting the permanent men.

Cambodian troops clash

By DENIS D. GRAY
Associated Press Writer

PHNOM PEHN, Cambodia (AP) — Government soldiers backed by river gunboats tried to fight out of a rebel stronghold with grenade and rifle fire Sunday as helicopters strafed the insurgents in an unsuccessful attempt to blast a hole in the U-shaped trap.

The 700 government troops, their backs to the Tonle Sap River, have been penned in for two days by rebel troops near Peam Muk Kampoul eight miles north of Phnom Penh.

Field reports said that despite the air and river support, the government soldiers failed to break through rebel lines. They have a possible escape route, however, by retreating across the river into givernment-controlled territory on the west bank.

Fighting was reported at close quarters. Along with the grenades, the government soldiers were reported throwing makeshift explosive charges made of tin cans filled with gasoline.

The capital's southern and northwestern fronts were reported quiet, with givernment troops in some areas spending more time in pay lines than on the front.

But field reports said two more battalions of insurgents moved into position along a line running north of Samrong, eight miles west of Phnom Penh. About 3,000 insurgent troops are believed massing in the region.

Only one government brigade — about 1,000 men — is facing the insurgents along that front. The lines are less than 100 yards apart at some points and field reports said government soldiers could hardly stand up without being shot at.

In South Vietnam, the Saigon command reported that North and South Vietnamese troops clashed again in the hotly contested central highlands region near the Cambodian corder.

A communique said North Vietnamese shelled and attacked South Vietnamese rangers Saturday near the district town of Kien Duc, which was overrun in December but later recaptured.

US funds buy time

By MATT FRANJOLA
Associated Press WRiter

PHNOM PEHN, Cambodia (AP) — The $580 million in U.S. funds earmarked for the Cambodian government this year is helping buy time for Phnom Penh, now under almost daily rocket and artillery attack, U.S. diplomats say.

They say the only hope of the U.S.-backed army of President Lon Nol is to hold on until the monsoons begin flooding the battlefields in about four months.

Last year, U.S. B52s and fighter bombers carried the war to the insurgents. Congress forced an end to the U.S. combat role in Indochina last year. Now the insurgents are carrying the war to Phnom Penh.

The diplomats expect another three or four months of artillery shellings and rocket attacks on Phnom Penh that already have killed about 200 and wounded 500 since late December.

The almost daily attacks have obscured any visions of victory by the Lon Nol government.

If the rebels fail to topple the regime by June when the heavy rains begin, there is no reason to believe they will be any stronger when the next dry season comes, the diplomats say. The rebels are dominated by Cambodian Communists and include royalist insurgents.

American diplomats think a standoff could bring the two sides closer to a coalition government. The danger to Phnom Penh has resulted in a flurry of peace statements from students and intellectuals and demands that Lon Nol resign.

The shellings have brought the war to the doorsteps of Phnom Penh's people, who in the past appeared to take little interest in the fighting in the provinces.

The insurgents are estimated to have only 18,000 soldiers within a 25-mile radius of the capital, compared to 50,000 government troops.

When the attacks began Dec. 23, they appeared to arouse little more than curiosity among Phnom Penh's residents, who seemed to feel that anyone who got hit with a missle must simply be a victim of bad luck.

Taxpayers favor giving a buck for campaign

By EDMOND Le BRETON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Taxpayers who largely passed up a chance last year to earmark a dollar of their taxes for financing presidential campaigns are showing more interest this year, the Internal Revenue Service says.

But the figures indicate the response, so lar at least, is still less than overwhelming. About 13 per cent of the returns already filed this year carry the authorization.

Meanwhile Rep. Henry S. Reuss, D-Wis., said that Congress, in a moment of legislative carelessness, committed "an inexcusable breach of faith" by canceling the 1973 taxpayers' designation of the parties they wanted to help. Reuss said he is preparing corrective legislation.

A 1972 law provided that, beginning with returns filed in 1973, taxpayers could specify that $1 of an individual's tax — $2 in case of a joint return — could be earmarked for a fund to finance presidential campaigns, beginning with the 1976 race.

Originally, the taxpayer was given a choice. He could designate a party or have his dollar go to a nonpartisan fund to be distributed by formula among the candidates.

Democrats, whose party chest was then deeply in debt, especially pushed the idea.

It flopped. According to IRS, only 3.1 per cent of the returns filed in 1973 had the campaign fund boxes checked, providing less than $4 million for the funds.

Some members of Congress blamed IRS for putting the campaign contribution boxes on a separate slip of paper, rather than on the income tax return itself. IRS said it did not want to have a taxpayer's political preference preserved in his income tax file.

Midway through 1973, after most of the returns were in, Congress changed the law, requiring the checkoff box to appear on the return itself and abolishing the party designation so that all the collections would go into a single fund to be apportioned.

The formula generally provides that the bulk will be divided equally between the two major parties, with a fraction reserved for minor and new parties, if they can qualify.

But Reuss contended, in a Congressional Record statement, that most members of Congress did not realize they were wiping out the party designation not only for future returns, but for those already filed.

The change, he said, should have applied only to future returns. His proposed bill would provide for distributing the earlier funds according to the taxpayers' expressed preferences.

IRSsaid that, because of the change in the law, it hasn't kept track of how many dollars were designated for each party. There was no immediate estimate of how hard it would be to carry out Reuss' proposal, but "nothing is impossible," one spokesman said.

'75 budget breaks record

By JOE HALL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon sends his record-breaking $304.4 billion budget to Congress Monday, completing a trio of White House messages traditionally sent at the start of each session.

He delivered his State of the Union message Wednesday and submitted his annual Economic Report on Friday.

The budget total for fiscal 1975 was disclosed in the Economic Report, which also showed there would be a $9.4 billion deficit.

But the massive budget itself will reveal how Nixon has allocated the money to carry out the programs he has recommended.

The House and Senate, with relatively light legislative leads for the week, will have time to digest the budget.

The Senate has scheduled a vote Tuesday on a cloture petition to end a filibuster against a treaty to make genocide an international crime. The petition's supporters say they doubt they can obtain cloture on the first try.

The House is expected on Wednesday to approve its Judiciary Committee's request for unlimited subpoena power in connection with its inquiry into the possible impeachment of the President.

Both branches also will try to act during the week on an emergency energy bill if Senate-House conferees, meeting Monday, can agree on a new version.

The Senate voted last week to return the legislation to conference. The measure would give Nixon power to impose gasoline rationing and take many other steps to meet the fuel shortage.

The House Ways and Means Committee will open hearings Monday on legislation aimed at oil companies' windfall profits resulting from high prices in the shortage.

Secretary of the Treasury George P. Shultz and federal energy chief William E. Simon are to testify.

Impeachment moves...

...Ford backs subpoena of Nixon

By JAMES GERSTENZANG
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Vice President Gerald R. Ford said yesterday the House Judiciary Committee should be granted the power to subpoena President Nixon in its impeachment probe but he isn't sure the authority is enough to bring the President before the ommittee.

The vice president also suggested that if subpoenaed, the President might answer the committee's questions but not appear in person.

And, Ford said, there is no legal support "for an unlimited fishing expedition in the office of the President." "I think you have to differentiate between the office of the President, where there is no legal precedent for a fishing expedition, and the rights of any individual among our 211 million people," he said. "It is the office of the presidency on the one hand that I think has to have some reasonable protection."

Ford appeared on the CBS television program "Face the Nation."

Grant Power

"I think the power to subpoena the President should be granted," he said. "I would have some reservation about whether that power is sufficient to mandatorily bring the Presiient to testify before that committee."

The House is scheduled to consider on Wednesday granting the committee unlimited subpoena authority.

Whether the President should appear, if called, "depends on the circumstances," Ford said.

Nixon has indicated he will not obey a subpoena from a California court to appear as a witness in the trial of his former domestic adviser, John D. Ehrlichman, in connection with the burglary of the office of Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist.

"There are some rumors to the effect that he might answer the interrogatories that might be put to him," Ford said of the California case. "This might be the format-I'm not saying it will-for any appearance before the House committee on the judiciary."

On Other Program

Watergate Prosecutor Leon Jaworski said that if the material he has gathered in his Watergate investigation is subpoenaed by the House committee he would refuse to turn it over.

"I have only one course I can follow: to hold the evidence secret," he said on the ABC program "Issues and Answers."

He said he saw no way at this time to give the material to the committee and if subpoenaed, "I'd meet the gentlemen at the courthouse."

Because the Watergate-related materials are being presented to a grand jury. "I have no right to release them," he said.

Jaworski, involved in his own fight to get material from the White House, said he expected a decision Monday from the White House on his latest request for information.

"I can go only so far as to say that they're documents and some are in the nature of tapes," he said.

More Subpoenas

Asked if more subpoenas or court battles over access to White House evidence were likely, Jaworski said: "I cannot answer that today. I will know that tomorrow, (Monday). I have been told that a decision is being made and that I will be advised of that decision tomorrow." He would not say to what the evidence related.

Jaworski stuck to his earlier timetable, repeating that some indictments could be expected later this month, and took issue with a statement made by Ford on the CBS program that the prosecutor had been given more tapes than he requested from the White House.

"I have some requests outstanding for tapes," he said.

"Any idea this material has been spoon-fed me is in error. I've had to go after it." Ford said Nixon's statement during his State of the Union address Wednesday night that one year of Watergate was enough should be taken figuratively and not literally because court cases and the House impeachment inquiry are pending.

"He recognized certain things still have to be wrapped up in the House committee on the judiciary," Ford said.

Jaworski disputed the statement that one year was sufficient.

"We've worked long hours," he said. "We've moved ahead as fast as anybody can move, consistent with fairness," but more time is needed.

Release Scott Documents

Ford said the White House should release the material that prompted Senate Minority Leader Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania to say that he was convinced the President was innocent.

"I do believe it would be advantageous to get out the tapes or the transcripts or whatever the document is that convinced Sen. Scott beyond any doubt that the President is right," Ford said.

Jaworski said he did not know what Scott had seen. Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., said he suggested to Nixon that he listen more to the Republicans in Congress.

In an interview in U.S. News & World Report, Goldwater said he told Nixon: "In the Congress you have a little over 1,000 years of political experience in the Republican party. Why don't you take advantage of it? You never call us until you get your tail in a crack, and then you won't listen to us."

He said a "large, large number" of those Republicans want the President to resign "because we're having trouble." However, he said he didn't think sufficient evidence existed to impeach Nixon.

...A probe takes shape

By JOHN BECKLER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Hidden away in a string of offices in a converted hotel on the edge of Capitol Hill, the second presidential impeachment investigation in the nation's history is slowly taking shape.

Despite the immense significance of the undertaking and its incalculable consequences, it is proceeding with all the drama and excitement of an inquiry into the price of tung nuts.

In contrast to the headlines and hot television lights that have followed each step of other Watergate-related inquireies, obscurity attends the anonymous, sober-faced lawyers who are helping determine the fate of President Richard M. Nixon.

Few people on Capitol Hill, including the congressmen who face the heavy responsibility of deciding the issue, are even aware of the task force assembled by the House Judiciary Committee to conduct the investigation.

It numbers about 35 lawyers and a score of other personnel. The occupy most of the second floor of a former hotel that was taken over by the House a few years ago.

No outsiders even see the staff or what it is doing. Anyone getting off the elevator on the second floor is confronted by a policeman and can penetrate no further.

At this stage and for the next few weeks, the staffis devoting itself to the preparation of a legal brief that will attempt to define what an impeachable offense is. It is a question that has divided legal scholars for the nearly 200 years since the Constitution provided for impeachment.

Special Counsel John M. Doar has promised to have the brief ready by Feb. 20, and Committee Chairman Peter W. Rodino, D-N.J., is considering having public hearings on it, as much to educate the public on the issue as anything else.

The next deadline will be March 1, when Doar expects to produce a report that will tell the committee just what evidence has been found in the various areas of presidential conduct it has examined and whats more, if any, might be available.

It is the further nature of impeachment, however, that when the staff has finished its job it will still be up to each member of the Judiciary Committee to decide whether an impeachable offense has been committed. Andrew Johnson, the only president impeached by the House, waa acquitted by the Senate in 1868.

Nixon polls lowest ever

PRINCETON, N.J. (AP) - President Nixon's popularity reached a new low of 26 per cent in the latest Gallup Poll. The low rating came just one year after Nixon's popularity was at an alltime high.

In the latest poll, conducted Jan. 18 through 21, Nixon received his highest rating in the South. Among the Southerners surveyed, 34 per cent approved of Nixon's performance, compared with 22 per cent in the East, 27 per cent in the Midwest and 21 per cent in the Far West.

In early January, Nixon had an over-all approval rating of 27 per cent. The 1,592 adults interviewed were asked the question: "Do you approve of or disapprove of the way Nixon is handling his job."

Israel pounds Syria

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Syria said Israeli artillery pounded Syrian military positions and five Arab villages yesterday at the end oi a day-long series of sharp clashes on the Golan Heights.

"Our artillery reacted violently and inflicted heavy losses on the enemy sources of fire," said a communique issued in Damascus.

The Syrian claim made no mention of casualties at the military posts or the civilian villages. But communiques said the 10 hours of intermittent fighting erupted at points along the entire front and was the heaviest since the October war.

Earlier tank and artillery duels wiped out an Israeli missile base, three tanks and six mortar batteries, the Syrians claimed, adding that Syrian gunners scored "direct hits" on several Israeli positions and destroyed two halftracks with their occupants.

Fighting has been reported for nine consecutive days along the 40-mile Golan cease-fire line, where Israeli forces halted their thrust into Syria at the end of October.

The Israeli military command in Tel Aviv disputed the Syrian battle claims, saying "a few shots have been fired" and denying that the Syrians destroyed Israeli taaks or halftracks.

There was no immediate comment on the Syrian reports of heavy Israeli shelling or the claims that a missile base was shot up.

The Syrian president, Hafez Assad, was in Saudi Arabia for talks with King Faisal, reportedly trying to convince him to not lift an oil export embargo until Israeli-held lands were returned.

The Beirut newspaper Al Anwar reported that Saudi Foreign Minister Omar Sakkaf said the Arabs will life the oil embargo "when the United States proves it takes no pro-Israeli stands."

The energy crisis

Steps are being taken

BOSTON (AP)-New England drivers and service stations will get a week or two to try out the latest federal gasoline guidelines, and if that does not alleviate long lines at the pumps, stronger measures will be considered, officials said Friday.

"We'll look at it for the next 10 or 15 days," said Lawrence Rogers, regional head of the Federal Energy Office. "If this doesn't work, then we begin talking to the governors about an Oregon type plan."

Under a plan used in Oregon, drivers are able to buy gasoline on alternate days, depending on whether their license plates end in odd or even numbers.

Such a plan is already under consideration in Massachusetts.

The federal plan announced Thursday asked stations to sell all customers at least 10 gallons of gasoline, post their opening hour, stretch their gasoline so it will last all month and coordinate their hours with other stations so some will always be open.

Drivers are asked to stay away from filling stations unless they need at least five gallons.

"The problem we're trying to solve right now is the queuing problem," Rogers said. "If we keep lining up at gas stations, somebody is going to get hurt, either in a car crash on the highway or in a fistfight."

"People actually bought more gasoline in December than they did the year before," Robers said at a news conference. "We want to re-emphasize to the public that there has to be some conservation. Pleasure driving has to be cut down.

"We want stations to discontinue use of the $1 and $2 limitation," he said. "There is no more gasoline to be had. We just think it can be dished out in a far more rational manner."

In Massachusetts, John Verani, the secretary of consumer affairs, has drawn up an alternate day gasoline plan and presented it to Gov. Francis Sargent. But he said the state would hold off a while before deciding whether to put it into effect.

John A.S. McGlennon, the regional head of the Environmental Protection Agency, said Friday that he approved the energy office's guidelines. But he said the states will have to take stronger action if the guidelines don't work.

Rogers said the longest lines are at service stations in the Boston area and the Connecticut River Valley. Lines are practically nonexistent in Maine, he said.

All of the New England governors except one have endorsed the energy office plan, Rogers said. But he declined to identify the governor who had not approved it.

Are you odd or even?

By SETH MYDANS
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) - If a federal mandatory allocation program that took effect Friday fails to shorten gasoline lines, Gov. Francis W. Sargent will consider a plan under which cars with odd-numbered and even-numbered license plates alternate days at the pumps.

Consumer Secretary John Verani proposed the plan, which is proving successful in Oregon, to Sargent, Friday. Verani said he will wait to gauge the effects of mandatory allocation before recommending adoption of the license plate plan.

He said New England should gain overall by mandatory allocation, under which fuel is being redistributed to customers in proportion to 1972 levels. But he said the gain may not be enough to significantly ease shortages.

Under the Oregon plan, odd and even license numbers alternate according to days of the week or according to odd and even calendar dates.

Exceptions would be made for emergency vehicles and for some commercial vehicles.

License plates that end with a letter would be classed with either even or odd numbers.

Out-of-state vehicles would present a problem that would have to be worked out.

Another plan favored by Verani's office is the posting of green flags outside open gasoline stations, red flags outside closed ones, and yellow flags outside stations that are open only for emergency vehicles.

Flags would also be posted on turnpike signs that indicate exits for gasoline stations. Officials in Oregon say their voluntary programs are 99 per cent effective. They are considering refinements, including a three-day rotation at gasoline stations, rather than alternate days.

Verani's office is also considering a recommendation under which fuel suppliers would work out an even flow of gasoline to their customers so that stations do not run dry at the end of the month.

Closed stations investigated

By SETH MYDANS
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — Prosecutions can be expected as an investigation of closed service stations illegally storing fuel accelerates, according to State Fire Marshal Jospeh G. Sneider.

Sneider said Thursday that his office is now culling information on closed stations violating the law that requires them to notify local officials and to empty, cap off and lock their tanks.

In addition, Consumer Secretary John Verani has visited central storage depots of six oil companies in an effort to pinpoint the level of supplies on hand and the prospects for mandatory allocations and a possible rationing program.

These facilities include the Union, Gulf, Northeast, Gibbs and Texaco tanks at the Chelsea Creek storage area, and the Exxon tanks in Everett.

Verani said he is not putting together a composite report on his findings, and commented that "the picture is very fluid and volatile."

US oil exports up in '73

By MIKE WATERS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — While the dimensions of the energy crisis grew in 1973, so did U.S. oil exports, according to a preliminary study by the General Accounting Office.

The study ordered by Rep. Lester L. Wolff, D-N.Y., also shows that during the same period U.S. oil companies reduced production.

The final study by Congress' watchdog agency will probe imports and exports of selected petroleum products, domestic production and demand, as well as imports and exports, for petroleum products used in making plastics, and domestic crude oil and natural gas resources that the oil and gas industry says are recoverable.

According to the figures sent to Wolff by the GAO, U.S. oil companies in 1973 produced 845,176,000 barrels of distillate fuel used to heat homes. This was down from the 1972 production of 963,625,000 barrels.

Domestic demand for the fuel in 1973 was 904,811,000 barrels and 2,205,000 barrels were exported, compared with a 1972 demand of 1,066,049,000 and exports of 667,000.

U.S. oil companies exported 1,061,000 barrels of gasoline and other motor fuels in 1973, compared with 492,000 in 1972. Motor fuel production dropped from 2,319,950,000 barrels in 1972 to 2,018,214,000 in 1973.

Domestic demand for motor fuel in 1972 was 2,350,405,000 barrels. It was 2,051,892,000 in 1973.

Oil embargo lift conditional

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — The Saudi Arabian foreign minister was quoted Sunday as saying Arabs will lift their oil embargo "when the United States proves it takes no pro-Israeli stands."

Omar Sakkaf's statement in an interview with the pro-Egyptian Beirut newspaper Al An-war coincided with a report in the independent Lebanese daily An Nahar. The latter quoted informed Arab sources in Washington as saying the embargo will be lifted March 1.

President Nixon said in his State of the Union address Wednesday that Arab leaders plan an urgent meeting soon that may result in lifting the embargo, declared along with a general production cutback to pressure friends of Israel. It later became known he was referring to an already planned meeting in Tripoli on Feb. 14.

Sakkaf said he was "fully convinced that the United States has begun for the first time since the 1967 Middle East war to work seriously to reach a solution for the Arab-Israeli conflict."

"There is no clearer evidence of this than the movements of the American secretary of state in the area and his achievement of a partial success," Sakkaf said according to Al An-war.

His use of the words "partial success" appeared to indicate the Egyptian-Israeli disengagement pact mediated by Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger would not be enough by itself to persuade the Arabs to lift the embargo.

Kissinger is trying to get a similar disengagement pact between Syria and Israel along the Golan Heights cease-fire line.

King Faisal, widely considered the leader of the oil embargo, was locked in closed talks Sunday with Syria's President Hafez Assad in Riyadh, the Saudi capital. Although Saudi radio gave no hint of the topics, reports in the Arab press said Assad pleaded for continuation of the embargo, at least until Kissinger works out a Golan pullback accord.

The Syrians reported their 40-mile cease-fire line with Israel erupted over the weekend in tank and artillery duels. Arab observers believed the Syrians heated up the front during Assad's presence in Saudi Arabia to support his plea.

Energy woes here to stay

By MARK VOGLER
MDC Staff

The White House Horrors and all the misdoings committed by a criminally infested administration don't seem to matter anymore. The country's chief concern is no longer the Watergate Saga.

Americans now confront a dilemma which not only strips them of basic human decency and trust in Government, but one that carries a burdern on every day living.

The "Energy Crisis", as it is defined by the Nixon Administration, is now taking its toll on this country in a way in which citizens would now count Watergate woes as a blessing.

A fuel shortage accompanied by skyrocketing prices have coincided with an unemployment rate soaring to a national average of six percent — making life miserable for Americans.

Its effect on industry appears devastating. Major auto manufacturers are finding their own economies imperiled with a necessitated switch to small cars while thousands are put out of work and are forced to find other jobs.

The employment situation for the airline companies has taken a nose dive also. A cutback in fuel supplies brings a cutback in the number of flights; and ultimately massive layoffs.

Truckers are beginning to feel the pinch caused by high fuel prices and low freight rates. The independents find themselves in a position where survival is questionable. Those who can absorb the losses without going out of business will undoubtedly strike if the situation does not markedly improve.

And as the Federal Energy Commission continues to dictate emergency energy control policy and haunt the consumer with still higher prices and an occassional mention of "gas rationing," almost every sector of American industry is confiding in the administration's (Nixon's) promise that the crisis is only "a temporary inconvenience that we'll all have to endure."

Yes, it is undoubtly the President's contention that the Energy Crisis is simply a "passing" matter — JUST AS WATERGATE. Surely gas and heating oil will be readily available long after the prices soar up and conveniently after the President's problems have been pushed in the back of everybody's mind.

The biggest perplexity of this crisis — if it is fair to call it as such — is that nobody can answer the Who-What-Where-Why-When-and How of the matter.

Therefore if nobody has the answer is it presumptious to question its authenticity'? Is America really encountering an energy crisis? Is it for real?

Maybe it is time to ask ourselves these questions. Maybe it is time for the administration to answer them. Maybe it is time that we know the true facts of the matter and decide for ourselves whether we have not been led astray.

It is indeed fact that nation's supply of fuel — the world's supply — is limited. It is a true fact that this country wastes much energy and should revert to fuel conservation programs in order to meet domestic demands. If we fail to understand these two facts it is safe to assume that a crisis — as it is alleged we face right now — will be upon us.

But why all of a sudden are we grappling with one today? Why did President Nixon wait this long to do something about it? Why did he wait until "Operation Candor" before making Americans energy conscious?

If we are caught up in a serious energy crisis, a very competent and responsible president concerned about the welfare of his country would have been on top of the situation long ago.

Is the President's excuse (the country is entitled to hear it) based on the fact that he was too preoccupied with his own administrative problems to notice it? Or was the crisis simply a matter of convenience, manipulated in order to disperse the public outcry — in order to divert the attention focused on the President's deep involvement in Watergate?

Shake-up in administrative services forecast

By BILL DENSMORE

Vice Chancellor for administrative services Thomas B. Campion returns this morning after a self-imposed five-week "administrative leave" amid speculation that his job has been eliminated and he will be offered a new position elsewhere.

Campion's job is one of three vice-chancellorships which are directly under the Chancellor's office and have existed since political science professor John Lederle was UMass President.

The other two are:

Presently there is a vice chancellor for academic affairs

—Vice-chancellor for academic affairs, filled by former physics professor Dr. Robert L. Gluckstern, and;

—Vice Chancellor for student affairs, filled by former University Health Services administrator and physician Robert W. Gage.

Although there is no official word from Whitmore, most sources report that Campion's job and title have been eliminated, but no definite replacement formalized.

Whitmore administrators are said to be working now on a new structure for carrying out the duties of the vice-chancellor for administrative services, perhaps with as many as three separate offices. The areas of responsibility for the three would be:

—An administrator to manage student services, like the Campus Center and Food Services.

—A second administrator to oversee physical plant and personnel operations like maintainance, construction and personnel.

—A third administrator to have primary responsibility for budget formulation and overall planning.

When Campion left on vacation around Christmas, Whitmore acknowledged that three men had assumed his duties temporarily. But sources report that to reconstitute the office under a single head would now be logistically impossible. The three are:

—H. Jack Littlefield, Jr., presently University Director of planning;

—John L. (Jack) DeNyse, head of the personnel office;

—Ken Dean, acting director of Food Services, who succeeded Joel M. Stoneham in that office in December after Stoneham resigned.

Word that Campion would be shifted to another area, perhaps even outside the University, and that his office had been dismembered travelled fast through the University.

Said one former Campion associate: "It was his personality that was his downfall. He had a terrible habit of forgetting things — even some of the people who worked for him."
